Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman also wish to amend the amount at the top of page 16 and make it $10,000?

Mr. WALSH. I also offer that as part of my amendment—I did that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman had three places——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I also desire to offer as a part of my amendment, page 15, line 11, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," and in line 12 strike out "one year" and insert "five years."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 11, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000"; and in line 12, same page, strike out the word "one" and insert the word "five" and insert the letter "s" after the word "year."

Mr. KITCHIN. What is that?

Mr. WALSH. So it will read "not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years."

Mr. KITCHIN. Or both?

Mr. WALSH. Or both.

Mr. KITCHIN. We accept that amendment as far as the committee can.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield.

Mr. RUCKER. As the gentleman's amendment reads, it merely fixes the maximum of punishment in the way of fine at $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman believe there ought to be a minimum punishment above $1? As it stands now, it will permit a fine of $1 for these fellows. Ought it not to be "not less than $1,000"?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri I think in many emergency measures that have been passed by the Congress carrying a punishment for their violation a maximum punishment has been fixed in the law, and I think that it is better to do that, particularly where we provide that the fine and imprisonment may both be imposed, and of course these provisions as to violations of this section will probably be punished under existing laws, but if we put the punishment into this act in the language as suggested it will leave it to the court to fix the punishment under all the circumstances, and I do not think there are many United States courts which would impose light penalties for violations or offenses as serious as any of these might be, but there might be some violations that would not require a heavy fine, and I think the court ought to be permitted to impose——

Mr. RUCKER. Generally speaking, I agree with the views expressed by the gentleman, but we are dealing now with a very important question of Government securities, of securities offered to the Government as security for loans, and I do not believe this Congress ought to put itself in the position to say that we think a $1 fine and one day in jail would be sufficient, but we ought at least to specify the minimum for the punishment of the offense.

Mr. WALSH. In reply, if the gentleman will permit, if you put in the minimum you have got to trust the court to determine what is the adequate punishment. And we fix the penalty, and it is up to the court to determine under all the circumstances what the punishment shall be.

Mr. RUCKER. The trouble, I think, is that the court has the impression that Congress has determined that anywhere from $1 up is adequate punishment.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no. There are many, many laws that are worded in the same way.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say in this connection that this is a general penalty clause, and that this kind of language, "not more than so much fine or not to exceed so many years imprisonment, or both," is in practically all the penalty clauses that Congress has passed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I wish to state that when we adopted the Criminal Code a few years ago we adopted the plan of not fixing any minimum.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that is so.

Mr. RUCKER. I would rather write into the law that Congress requests the court to pardon a man than fix a dollar penalty.

Mr. KITCHIN. Personally I am very much in sympathy with the views of the gentleman, but such action would not be in accordance with our general policy in fixing penalties.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the gentleman from North Carolina has no objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment, which is really four amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 15, line 11, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000"; and in line 12, strike out "one year" and insert "five years"; page 16, line 1, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000"; page 16, line 13, strike out "$5,000" and insert "10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PHELAN offers an amendment as follows: Amend, on page 16, after line 19, by adding a new section:

"SEC. 20. Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows: 'No national banking association shall at any time be indebted, or in any way liable, to an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock at such time actually paid in and remaining undiminished by losses or otherwise, except on account of demands of the nature following:

"'First. Notes of circulation.

"'Second. Moneys deposited with or collected by the association.

"'Third. Bills of exchange or drafts drawn against money actually on deposit to the credit of the association or due thereto.

"'Fourth. Liabilities to the stockholders of the association for dividends and reserve profits.

"'Fifth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the Federal reserve act.

"'Sixth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act.'"

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have examined that pretty thoroughly, and I think it ought to go in, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is certainly not germane to this section.

Mr. KITCHIN. If we do not put in this provision, and make the change in the law which this amendment makes, it will tie the hands of the national banks from helping out these corporations.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I only reserved the point of order in order to hear the explanation.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will state that I think there were some of the committees that had this amendment under consideration and thought that this section of the Revised Statutes should not apply to this limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. NORTON: Page 16, at the end of line 19, insert a new section, as follows:

"That the corporation shall be empowered to authorize, to subscribe for, acquire and own, buy and sell, and deal in lands and obligations of any State or county of the United States issued since April 6, 1917, to increase food production to such extent as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time determine."

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman want to discuss that?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; for just a minute.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto shall close in five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think I will make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. What about the point of order?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will reserve it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman can have four minutes of the five.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. WALSH. You can not fix the debate while the point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized, pending the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is the same as section 11 of the bill, with this difference, that it provides that the corporation may purchase county or State bonds which have been issued since the beginning of the war for the purpose of increasing food production.

Some of the States since the beginning of the war have enacted laws providing for the issuance of bonds by the State or by counties, the money derived from which is to be used for increasing food production. Some of the States and counties are now finding it difficult to dispose of these bonds at reasonable rates of interest. I believe that if this legislation as it now stands does not permit the finance corporation to buy these bonds it should be amended as I have proposed, so that this corporation may purchase bonds of the character to which I have referred.

I want to say that while I doubt somewhat the necessity of this legislation, yet if we are going to pass the legislation, if we are going to provide for a corporation of this kind its provisions should be such as to allow the corporation to help industries in the country that are most necessary to the success of the war. Among the most important of such industries is that of agriculture. The provisions of this legislation unquestionably should be broad enough to assist counties and States in the sale of their bond issues to encourage food production.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On the ground that it is not germane?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Clearly it is not germane. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II.—CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

SEC. 200. That there is hereby created a committee to be known as the "Capital Issues Committee," hereinafter called the committee, and to be composed of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. At least three of the members shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board, and not more than four shall be members of the same political party.

No member or officer of the committee shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested. Before entering upon his duties, each member and officer shall certify under oath to the Secretary of the Treasury that he will comply with the provisions aforesaid, and he shall also take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a member of the committee of any officer or employee under the United States or of a director of a Federal reserve bank.

The terms during which the several members of the committee shall respectively hold office shall be determined by the President of the United States, and the compensation of the several members of the committee who are not members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be $7,500 per annum, payable monthly, but if any such member receives any other compensation from any office or employment under the United States the amount so received shall be deducted from such salary, and if such other compensation is $7,500 or more, such member shall receive no salary as a member of the committee. Any member shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States. The President shall designate one of the members as chairman. Four members of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my attention has just been called to a portion of this section, to which I draw the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina. On page 17, beginning at line 8, provision is made for the members of the Capital Issues Committee entering upon the performance of their duties. They are to take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of their office. It has been suggested—and I admit that it is new matter that ought to have been called to the attention of the gentleman before—that they are not required to take that same oath of office that the public official is required to take under the Constitution.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that we take that up later.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] has an amendment prepared covering that precise point.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is absolutely unnecessary, but I have no objection to putting it in. The Constitution requires all officers of the Government to take an oath, and we create a great many offices in statutes which say nothing about the oath to support the Constitution. The Constitution of the United States says they shall do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman agree to take it up later?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. It could be amended by inserting, in line 12 of page 17, the words "discharge the duties of the office and take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let that go over, and before we dispose of the bill to-night we can go over each of the sections in which this oath occurs and consider amendments to all the sections.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the pro forma amendment, I want to call the attention of the chairman to line 19, page 17, as to the tenure of office of this committee, which is left uncertain, to be fixed by the President. Why was that? Why did you not fix the term of office definitely of this Capital Issues Committee instead of leaving it to be fixed by the President?

Mr. KITCHIN. Because it may become necessary in 12 months for the President to say this is unnecessary. He is given that power. We are not so much concerned about the terms of these gentlemen as we were about the terms of the board of directors of the corporation. The President, whenever he declares that it is not necessary for the prosecution of the war to have this committee, can terminate it at once.

Mr. FESS. And the committee will cease to exist?

Mr. KITCHIN. Cease to exist and to exercise any control over the capital issues. We thought it best to leave the tenure of office of the committee to the discretion of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the section will be passed over.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 201. That the Committee may employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, agents, and other employees as may be deemed necessary to conduct its business, who shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stats. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto or any rules or regulations made in pursuance thereof. No such officer, attorney, agent, or employee shall receive more compensation than persons performing services of like or similar character under the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD offers the following amendment: Page 18, line 11, after the word "appointed," strike out "without regard to" and insert "other than the officers and attorneys in accordance with."

Mr. STAFFORD. So that the section will read——

The Clerk read as follows:

So that as amended the section will read:

"SEC. 201. That the committee may employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, agents, and other employees as may be deemed necessary to conduct its business, who shall be appointed other than the officers and attorneys in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883," etc.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to bring within the civil-service law all employees of this issues committee other than the officers and attorneys necessary in the furtherance of its work. I can see where there might be some need of excepting officers and attorneys from the provisions of the civil-service law, but in the work of this important committee I can see no need whatever to allow spoils, with a big "S," to apply to all the employees. In no administration has the spoils system been extended so completely as during the present administration. There are millions and millions of dollars appropriated and available to-day in the Internal Revenue Service for the appointment of those who are of the faithful. Not only are they being appointed directly, but the civil-service law is being violated.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at the present time. They are avoiding the civil-service law by allowing the local collectors to appoint deputy collectors, and then later permit them to qualify, leaving those alone who have been selected by the local collectors to take the civil-service examination for higher-grade positions, which under the civil-service law should be filled by competitive examination. If they fail they are still continued as deputy collectors, and if they qualify they alone are appointed to perform the responsible work required in the assessment of income taxes and war-profit taxes, a work of the most exacting character. This work to-day is being performed by the Democratic faithful throughout the country, and millions of dollars are available for that purpose. That is the testimony of Hon. Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, before the Committee on Appropriations.

I recognize that at this time there is perhaps a need to allow this committee to appoint officers and attorneys without the limitations of the civil-service law, but there is no reason why we should allow this committee to have the freedom to appoint whomsoever it chooses of the Democratic faithful.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman be willing to include agents in his amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is a similar need.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The agents are required to have expert knowledge.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that is the case, I have no objection. I have no desire to restrict the operations of this issues committee——

Mr. WALSH. If they are experts, they can pass the civil-service examination.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. If you were placed in charge of this bank, would you want the Civil Service Commission to pick for you the men who would handle the money you were responsible for?

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not the bank. This is the committee. The gentleman does not know what we are considering. We have passed the bank provision.

Mr. GORDON. It has to do with the bank.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at all. This is the issues committee, something different entirely.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman complained in the first part of his remarks that this provision as it stands would enable the faithful to be taken care of. Does not the gentleman think the faithful ought to be rewarded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think they have been rewarded more than at any time in recent history by the present administration, and I am calling attention to the fact that it is going to result in a most extravagant administration in the collection of the income tax and the war excess-profits tax; and not only extravagant but inefficient administration of this most important work.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the amendment so that instead of the words "other than" it shall read "except."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by striking out the words "other than" and inserting the word "except."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the committee put this provision in the bill as it is for the reason that the committee might not exist more than 6 or 12 months, and it would be difficult to get from the civil-service list employees to take these places. More than that, it is contemplated that the agents provided for in this bill will be the Federal reserve banks wherever practicable, and if you do that the employees of the Federal reserve banks are not under the civil service and they would have to be put under the civil service and take a civil-service examination. The committee did not think it was wise or worth while to require all the employees of this capital issues committee to take civil-service examinations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is there any more reason why these employees should be put under the civil service than employees under the Federal reserve act?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; and employees under the Federal reserve act are not under the civil service.

Mr. GILLETT. Why should not they be under the civil service?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—25 ayes and 48 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 202. That all the expenses of the committee, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the members or by their officers, attorneys, agents, or employees under its orders in making an investigation or upon official business in any other places than at their respective headquarters, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman.

The committee may rent suitable offices for its use, and purchase such furniture, equipment, and supplies as may be necessary.

The principal office of the committee shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet and exercise all its powers at any other place. The committee may, by one or more of its members, or by such agents as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Being a member of the special water-power committee, which has been in session all the week, morning and evening, I have had no opportunity to take part in the debate on this bill and have heard but few of the arguments advanced in favor of the measure. I have, though, read and studied it as carefully as my limited time would permit and have come to the conclusion that even though it is advanced as a war measure, all of which measures I have supported up to this time, some of them with misgivings, I can not bring myself to support this one.

This is a bill "to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," and it commences by forming a War Finance Corporation, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury and four additional persons, as a body corporate, which incorporation is for a period of 10 years. Provided its business, other than liquidation of its assets, ceases within six months after the close of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by the President of the United States.

The capital stock of the corporation is fixed at $500,000,000, all of which shall be subscribed by the United States of America, and the money is appropriated from the Treasury of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury is chairman of the board of directors, the other four directors to be appointed by the President of the United States, and the bill specifically provides that the President may appoint these four directors from officials already in the employ of the United States or any directors of Federal reserve banks.

I think the committee made a mistake in forming the directorate of this most important corporation in making the Secretary of the Treasury not only a director but chairman of the board. He is only human. A day is only 24 hours long, and it is a physical impossibility for the Secretary of the Treasury to give personal attention and thought to 50 per cent of the many duties already imposed upon him by various laws passed since the present incumbent was first inducted into office. There is not a Member here but knows that the larger part of his supposed duties must, in the very nature of things, be entrusted to subordinates, with only a most perfunctory survey by the Secretary himself. He has already been appointed Director General of all the railroads of the country, and now you add to that duty the chairmanship of a board of directors who are to dispense $500,000,000 of the people's money appropriated from the Treasury of the United States, and in addition thereto, the expenditure of $2,000,000,000 more raised by the selling of bonds of the corporation, a corporation that should the war last four or five years will, in the very nature of the incorporation, do probably five or six billions of dollars business. And you make it possible for the directors of this great institution to be chosen from officials of the Government already overburdened with duties largely added to by the war.

The naming of the members of the board is, with the exception of the chairman, left to the judgment of the President of the United States. With all due respect to the President, I think it very unwise to place this discretion in his hands, and I place his discretion on a par with that of the committee when it made the Secretary of the Treasury chairman of this board of directors. I have not forgotten that the President did not hesitate to add to the multitude of duties already devolving on the Secretary by making him Director General of all the railroads of this country, because of his great executive ability, the only sample of which, in so far as I know, was displayed in the construction of one of New York's subways. Quite an extraordinary undertaking, no doubt, but not sufficient, in my judgment to entitle him to be considered a paragon of executive ability and financial sagacity, even if he were fortunate enough to put it through without difficulty. Even the Secretary of the Treasury has his limitations. The bills that have been sent from his department for passage by Congress do not show an excessive degree of modesty, and I congratulate the committee, without regard to the politics of its members, on the unanimous rejection of their unreasonable and unwise demands.

I also question the wisdom of placing at the head of this corporation the director of the railroads of the country, placing him in a position where he can be instrumental in loaning money to one railroad and in refusing loans to another if he so wills. With the provision allowing all of the directorate to be chosen from Government officials he will naturally be given an opportunity to have largely his own way with the handling of the finances of this company. He is also an ex-officio member of the Federal Reserve Board, and this bill makes it possible for this corporation to loan money to those banks. All of the directors could be Federal reserve bank directors if the President should see fit to appoint them.

What possibilities there are here for inflation it is appalling to think of. It will be an unsafe condition, in my judgment, for Congress to make possible by law. The present Federal reserve act provides sufficient inflation possibilities and this act encourages it.

This bill reads, in section 17, in part:

No director or officer of the corporation shall in any manner directly or indirectly participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interest, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

Note the language, "shall not participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests," and so forth. There is nothing to prevent a quorum of the directors from loaning millions to firms and corporations in which directors of this great corporation are interested if the director interested does not participate in the determination of the loan. How much safer and wiser would have been a provision making it impossible for the corporation to loan money to any firm, partnership, or corporation with which any director of the War Finance Corporation is in any respect financially interested? Why leave a loophole in so vital and gigantic an undertaking?

There are many dangerous features in this bill and more dangerous possibilities. I question the wisdom of passing such a travesty on safe finance as is the bill under consideration. It can make or break railroads, banks, firms, or individuals; it can punish or reward; it can bolster up all kinds of wildcat corporations, directly or indirectly, if its directorate sees fit. The bill says:

It can make advances to any bank, banker, or trust company which shall have made since April 6, 1917, and which shall have outstanding any loan or loans to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting an established and going business in the United States, whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and so evidenced by a note or notes, but no such advance shall exceed 75 per cent of the face value of such loan or loans.

I submit the proposition that the Government of the United States in this time of stress and excessive taxation should be most conservative and careful of the people's money. This bill would have gone far enough had it provided to refund advances made to banks and trust companies that had since the war started made loans to firms and corporations engaged strictly in war necessities, but we open wide the gate—say we will bolster up and finance those only contributory to the prosecution of the war, a term elastic enough to embrace practically all classes and characters of business. All the banks have to do is to show that their paper is the obligation of an established, going business necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war and we authorize a loan not to exceed 75 per cent of the loan or loans—a very unsafe percentage, in my judgment, and one liable to entail great loss on this corporation when abnormal values no longer obtain and a normal level is again reached.

Any authorization for more than 50 per cent of face value of securities is, I believe, unsafe and unwise. We go a step further, though, and provide that the corporation shall have power to make advances up to 100 per centum on the face value of securities under certain conditions, and it is authorized, in exceptional cases, to make advances directly to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting an established or going business in the United States, whose business is either necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, when such person, firm, or corporation "is unable to obtain money through banking channels or from the general public." You can imagine just how unsafe such a proceeding would be. When credit is not obtainable either at banks or at the private money lenders, call on the corporation of your Uncle Samuel; it will bolster you up—if you can only secure pull enough.

High financing is made a specialty under this bill. In fact, it would never have been offered here had not somebody conceived the idea that conditions would be precarious presently, and believed that legislation of this character could cure them. I think the remedy is liable to be much worse than the expected condition creating the necessity.

We are authorized under this bill to deal in our own bonds and securities, which would be like taking money out of one pocket to put it into another. It may be necessary to do this in order that our bonds do not depreciate unduly; it remains to be seen, though, whether that feature is a wise one.

The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, stated near the opening of the debate on this bill that Mr. Warburg, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank directorate, had said, in reply to some interrogatory propounded by a member of the Ways and Means Committee during the hearings on the bill, that it would be a rotten measure to pass under peace conditions. I fully agree with him. It is rottenness personified and totally unwarranted, war or no war. It reflects no credit on the Government that passes it, but, in my judgment, discredits it, and I take issue with any gentleman who thinks it either wise or expedient.

I have heard but little of the debate, but what I have heard has been an apology for the legislation and in commiseration of its necessity. I disagree entirely with the contention of necessity. The directors of the Government-owned corporation are authorized to issue two billions of dollars worth of bonds of the corporation, to bear such rate or rates of interest as may be determined by the board of directors, but such rate of interest must be approved by the president of the board—Secretary of the Treasury. So, in fact, the rate is fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the board of directors are only advisors. These bonds can not be sold at less than par and can only be disposed of at the will of the president of the board, the Secretary of the Treasury. This makes the other members of the board simply advisors, to give them the most polite term possible.

The bonds of our corporation created under this bill are exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except estate or inheritance taxes and graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as "surtaxes," "excess profits," and "war-profits taxes," and so forth. The issue is made as attractive as possible; the Secretary of the United States Treasury signs these bonds as chairman of the board and the United States owns all of the stock of the corporation, and its officials can all be chosen at the will of the President of the United States from his official family. It is our company; our Secretary of the Treasury is its president; our President appoints the directorate; yet we distinctly state in the bill—

That the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the corporation.

I asked the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], who attempted to have this paragraph, No. 17, stricken from the bill by amendment, if he could conceive a corporation of this character having its stockholders relieved from all responsibility. The gentleman could not, and he called attention to the fact that in national banks we compel by law all stockholders to be held liable for a sum equaling their stock holdings in addition to the stock. But we under this bill create a Government corporation, hold all the stock, authorize it to borrow $2,000,000,000 of the people's money, issuing bonds therefor, create our own officials to operate the concern, and specifically provide in the bill that we shall finance individuals, corporations, and firms whose credit is so poor that neither banks nor individuals will advance them credits or money.

Our corporation may by unwise and unbusinesslike methods, even though considered necessary for war necessities, impair the assets of the incorporation to such an extent as to make it impossible to pay the larger part of its bond issue. Are the people of the United States who buy the bonds and thus, under this bill, finance the necessities of this war to lose their investment, or the greater part of it? These bond sales, in order to float them, may be made very attractive; interest rates may be high. The conservative bond brokers will unload on the people of small means as a fine investment, and thus those of our citizens least able to bear a loss are the sufferers.

Oh, gentlemen say, if such a thing should happen as default in bond payment the Government will have to protect them. I can not understand the viewpoint of those who framed the bill, if the Government is eventually going to stand any loss incurred. Why make the sale of these bonds impossible to others than speculators? The conservatives will not buy—that is certain—with this provision in the law; they will not sell above par, although, fortunately, they can not sell below par. If it were certain that the bonds would be paid, a handsome premium could probably be realized.

Do we refuse to be responsible for our child's conduct, thinking that this revolutionary legislation will be more popular with the people if they know the Government is not liable for the $2,000,000,000 borrowed to any greater extent than the original stock subscription? I can not conceive of such legislation receiving the commendation of any of our people who value our Nation's honor and a square deal to its people.

The second feature of this bill is one creating another board, known as the capital issue committee, composed of seven members to be appointed by the President; three from the Federal Reserve Board, and the others may all, if the President so elects, be officers or employees of the United States. This committee has the power to say who hereafter shall issue stock for business purposes in the United States in excess of $100,000 and are the rulers of the destinies of incorporated firms seeking to do business during the war. And, while this committee can absolutely destroy the value of securities by refusing their O. K., under this bill the United States assumes no responsibility for their acts.

I can not imagine legislation of this character being justifiable or necessary. The same objections as to responsibility of directors and their personal prohibition from participation in any decision affecting them, directly or indirectly, financially are in this capital issue committee as in the War Finance Corporation. I, as a business man who believes in laws being just and wise, can not vote for this bill even though it is advanced as a war measure. I do not think we have arrived at the point where legislation designated as "rotten" is made sound and savory through necessity. I shall vote against the measure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 19, line 4, after the word "offices" insert "at a rental not to exceed an annual rate of $10,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is acceptable to the gentleman from North Carolina. The purpose of the amendment is to place a limitation on the issues committee so that no more than $10,000 may be used for rental purposes.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman means for the principal offices. Suppose they have 25 or 35 little agencies throughout the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to apply to offices in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will accept that.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman also propose offering an amendment as to the amount they may expend for furniture and equipment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not.

Mr. WALSH. Then each of these seven men will have a $300 desk unless you limit it some way. The Shipping Board in their offices have thousand-dollar rugs and expensive office equipment. I think there should be some limitation put in here.

Mr. KITCHIN. If they put it all into rugs and desks they will not have much left to operate with, for we only give them $200,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment I proposed is allowing twice as much as we allowed the Vocational Educational Board.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will limit it to offices in the District of Columbia we will accept it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting the words "in the District of Columbia" before the first word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

Mr. KITCHIN. Would it not be better to put a proviso after line 6 that they shall not expend more than $10,000 annually in the District of Columbia?

Mr. STAFFORD. That will be acceptable, so that there will be a limitation placed upon it. I will withdraw my amendment and let the gentleman offer his.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will offer the amendment as a substitute.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will accept the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is withdrawn, and the gentleman from North Carolina offers the following substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "necessary," in line 6, page 19, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the words "but shall not expend more than $10,000 annually for offices in the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, does this amendment mean both offices and office supplies?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; this is just for offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to give this committee on capital issues authority to expend $10,000 for rental in the District of Columbia, particularly when we consider the vast building program that the Government has undertaken in connection with its other war activities. There are several buildings being erected to which I understand certain offices are to be transferred, and as the war activities continue there will be vacancies in these vast buildings that have been constructed all over this city, and that will be constructed in the future, and I think we could put these seven gentlemen who will be authorized to make these investigations in one of these buildings.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That committee has got to have offices here somewhere. Could not the gentleman amend by striking out the word "rent" and inserting the word "secure"?

Mr. WALSH. What I am opposing is the expenditure of $10,000 a year in rent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But if we strike out the word "rent" they will not be authorized to rent.

Mr. WALSH. But they will be authorized to secure offices, and under the amendment adopted there will be $10,000 available for securing them. I think there is no necessity of giving them authority to expend $10,000. Let them occupy some of the Government buildings that are now erected or that may be erected in the future. The greater part of the work of this committee, as I understand it, will be in the field visiting the various centers where there are banks or where loans are sought to be negotiated, investigating the character of the security and the nature of the transaction by which the loan is sought to be negotiated.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am very much inclined to agree with the gentleman in his argument, but at the same time the gentleman will probably remember that there is now pending, shortly to come before the House, a proposition not only relating to these buildings, which we have just provided for at an expense of $8,000,000, but to buy the old Arlington Hotel site and the building that is to go up on that, on the plea that we are not going to have enough offices.

Mr. WALSH. I understand, and each one of these committees or commissions or boards that we authorize by legislation here, when they are appointed, become the most exclusive set of individuals in the city, and they feel that they have to have separate headquarters and dwell in a separate atmosphere. I suppose if we should require them to be housed in a building where there might be some other offices or officials or clerks they would feel they could not competently perform the duties of their office. I do not think we ought to encourage in this measure the rental of other buildings at a rental of $10,000 a year. We all know how scattered the offices in this District now are to carry on the various activities of the Government. Let us set an example in this bill by saying they have to be housed in some of the buildings the Government already has or that are already in course of construction.

Mr. GORDON. But suppose the Government has no building, then what would you do?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman wants to make a supposition of that kind, I would recommend to him that he take a sea-going hack some afternoon and drive down through the Mall and Potomac Park and around the various sections where buildings are in process of construction or have already been constructed and go in and see if he does not believe they can find space enough to house these seven men and the clerks they will require.

Mr. GORDON. If they have so much room, why are they building all these new buildings?

Mr. WALSH. I contend it is not necessary for them to build all these new buildings nor to rent the Arlington Hotel and some of these other buildings that we are supposed to occupy later on. I hope the paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is necessary to have this paragraph in. If this paragraph is stricken out this committee with their vast responsibilities authorized by an act of Congress would have no place to do business. Every one of us recognizes that the Government is now demanding more buildings. There are bills being presented authorizing buildings because we can not house the various departments of the Government.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. FESS. There is a committee of that sort identified with the Federal Reserve Board in operation. Where is this committee housed at the present time?

Mr. KITCHIN. In one or two different buildings.

Mr. FESS. The Metropolitan Bank Building.

Mr. KITCHIN. They will have to have sufficient quarters for the employees that will be required to give minute attention and investigation to the securities that will be passed upon by the committee under this act. The committee is now a voluntary committee and it is confining its labors to the investigation of the issuance of securities whose aggregate amount is $500,000 and over. This act reduces the limit to $100,000 and will greatly increase the work of the committee.

Mr. FESS. I had occasion to call on this committee some days ago——

Mr. KITCHIN. Where were they?

Mr. FESS. In the Metropolitan Building, in very commodious quarters, right across from the Treasury.

Mr. KITCHIN. It shows they have got to rent a building. Now, the Treasury Department rents it as part of the Federal Reserve System. In this bill they will be separate and distinct and they will have to rent a building.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 5, noes 30.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us finish to-night. We agreed with the gentlemen on that side that no roll call will be had to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. KITCHIN. We would have kept a quorum here but for that understanding.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 203. That the committee may, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by it from time to time, investigate, pass upon, and determine whether or not it is compatible with the public interest that there should be sold or offered for sale or for subscription any issue, or any part of any issue, of securities hereafter issued by any person, firm, corporation, or association, the total or aggregate par or face value of which issue and any other securities issued by the same person, firm, corporation, or association since the passage of this act is in excess of $100,000. Shares of stock of any corporation or association without nominal or par value shall for the purpose of this section be deemed to be of the par value of $100 each. Any securities which upon the date of the passage of this act are in the possession or control of, or are in hypothecation by, the corporation, association, or obligor issuing the same shall be deemed to have been issued after the passage of this act within the meaning hereof.

Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize such committee to pass upon (1) any borrowing by any person, firm, corporation, or association in the ordinary course of business as distinguished from borrowing for capital purposes, (2) the renewing or refunding of indebtedness existing at the time of the passage of this act, (3) the resale of any securities the sale or offering of which the committee has determined to be compatible with the public interest, (4) any securities issued by any railroad corporation the property of which may be in the possession and control of the President of the United States, or (5) any bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation.

Nothing done or omitted by the committee hereunder shall be construed as carrying the approval of the committee or of the United States of the legality, validity, worth, or security of any securities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not want this paragraph to go by even at this late hour, without a word of comment. This paragraph provides for the business of the Capital Issues Committee. As the bill was originally presented, it made compulsory the reference to the Capital Issues Committee of all transactions involving the use of securities in excess of $100,000. The effect of that compulsory power would have been practically to corral all the business in the United States in the hands of the Capital Issues Committee. It would have meant such supervision of all initiative and of all enterprises, individual and corporate, in the United States as could have throttled all business. The power of the Capital Issues Committee for good or for ill would have been unlimited. The committee had great concern about that paragraph, and I am happy to say, amended it so that the compulsory feature has been eliminated. It is not now obligatory to secure the approval of the Capital Issues Committee for securities to be issued, although it may be very important to do so.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The power to compel all those desiring to engage in business to lay their securities before this committee is taken away and it is now a voluntary rather than a compulsory proposition. To that extent the enormous power that was vested in this committee by the original bill has been rejected.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman give the significance of the qualifying term "capital issues"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The securities to be issued subject to scrutiny are in excess of a certain amount.

That is to say, a concern may be capitalized at $100,000 or $500,000, but it is proposed that all issues of securities in excess of $100,000 shall be submitted to this committee.

Mr. FESS. I thought there was a differentiation so that there would be a certain sort of an issue that might get beyond $100,000 that would not be regarded as a capitalization.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The thought is that if an issue of securities in excess of $100,000 is desired it shall be first submitted to this committee if approval is sought.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman explain what the purpose of the closing paragraph of this section is? It contains some rather remarkable provisions, without showing the particular reason for having it appended to this section. It says:

Nothing done or omitted by the committee hereunder shall be construed as carrying the approval of the committee—

And so forth. Now, does that mean that the committee can go ahead and do something and then after it has done it say that "While we did this it has not the approval of the committee with reference to the legality, validity, worth, or security of any securities"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the United States as such is not to be responsible; that is all.

Mr. WALSH. It does not say the "United States Government." It says that nothing done by the committee shall be construed by the committee as carrying the approval of the committee or of the United States of the legality, validity, worth, or security of the securities.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] somewhat misunderstood the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The approval of the committee relates merely to the amount of the issue, taking funds at this particular time while the war is going on, when possibly in the judgment of the committee these securities ought not to be issued. The committee is not going to pass in any way upon the validity or value of securities at all, but simply on the question as to whether this particular issue ought to be put out during war times and then prevent funds going into the Government for security—liberty bonds, for example.

Mr. WALSH. Will they not pass upon the legality of the securities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. WALSH. They will simply pass upon whether it is compatible that they should be sold or offered or issued?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is all this committee is for, to ascertain whether it is incompatible with the public interests when the Government wants to get out its liberty bonds, to have these bonds put on the market and absorb the funds which might otherwise go into the Government issue. And I will say it follows the same rule in that respect of the committee which has been appointed in Great Britain; and in some other countries they have a committee established by law to determine whether the issues shall go out or not.

Mr. WALSH. Possibly this language may have been copied from the act of Parliament.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The language with which this section concludes was put in because of the suggestion, I think, of some Member, that the fact that the committee had anything to do with these securities might be construed as the Government approval.

Mr. WALSH. That is, if they passed through their hands they might become valid because of the fact that these distinguished gentlemen were permitted to look at them?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? What does the gentleman think of the language in line 20, "the approval of the United States"? Ought it not to be the "Government of the United States"? The United States are 48 States. Ought not that to be "the approval of the Government of the United States"?

Mr. SLOAN. As I understand the term, "United States" means the country and not 48 States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, but 48 States make the country.

Mr. SLOAN. They make the unit, and we speak of the unit, not the combination.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to section 203.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 19, line 16, before the word "interest," strike out the word "public" and insert in lieu thereof the word "national."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 20, line 10, after the figure "2" and the parenthesis, insert the words "the sale or offering for sale or subscription of securities the issues of which the committee has determined to be necessary to."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 20, line 13, before the word "interest," strike out the word "public" and insert in lieu thereof the word "national."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think this term, "public interest," occurs in the preceding paragraph of the bill that we passed yesterday. I merely suggest to the gentleman that if he is going to make this change here it should also be made elsewhere throughout the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. This is only the Capital Issues Committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But should not this same term be used in regard to the savings-fund section?

Mr. KITCHIN. You will notice that that is a little different from this. That might be but a little locality, to help the savings bank. They would take deposits out to buy Government bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 204. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $200,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the committee, including the payment of the salaries and rents herein authorized.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I send up a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 21, after line 4, insert a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 205. That the committee shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain what character of report this committee is to make?

Mr. KITCHIN. The report of how much they have paid for rent and for the furniture that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was concerned about.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language requires more. May we have the amendment reported again, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. KITCHIN. All receipts and expenditures, and the purposes for which expended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the form in which it is presented it is not limited to the report of expenditures. Does the gentleman intend that they shall make a report of all their activities?

Mr. KITCHIN. I imagine they would not make a report of all their activities, and why they had turned down such and such an issue, and so on.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it should be left discretionary with them to report on these various matters.

Mr. KITCHIN. It should be discretionary to make the report of their general business, but they should report on the receipts and expenditures.

Mr. GILLETT. Would the gentleman agree that they should report on the number of officers and employees and their salaries?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. That could go in. The number of employees and officers and the salary paid to each.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment so that it will read in the way the Clerk will report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Read the whole amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 205. That the committee shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures, and also including the number of officers and employees and the salary paid to each.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think it ought to be a list of employees instead of the number? They could give 200 employees without giving the names.

Mr. LUNN. It says "and the amounts paid."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But it ought to be a list of the respective salaries.

Mr. KITCHIN. It says "the number of employees and their respective salaries."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If you would say "100," that would be giving the number. They should give the list of employees and their respective salaries.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will modify it again, then, so that it will read, "and also including the names of the officers and employees, and the salary paid to each."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. "And their respective salaries."

Mr. KITCHIN. "And the salary paid to each."

Mr. LUNN. Does not the gentleman think they ought to include also the addresses of the bell boys?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There is no need whatsoever of compelling this committee to make a report to Congress of the names of all the employees. It is customary to call upon the various departments and commissions to make a report as to the number and salaries by classes. That is sufficient. There is no use in calling for the names.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On the contrary, it is a very good thing to do.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us have the names.

Mr. GILLETT. Let us get all the information we can.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment further as the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 205. That the committee shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures, and also including the names of officers and employees and the salary paid to each.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. LUNN. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean the names of all employees, including the elevator boys?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. It is done here in the House and Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is done by the Food Commissioner now, and by several other commissions, and it is required by a special provision in the bills making the appropriations. It is a good thing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think there ought always to be a list of the names of all employees and their respective salaries, so that the people may know how their money is being expended.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that is wise for all the departments.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There can not be too much publicity concerning the expenditure of the public funds.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is required as to the officers and employees of the House and Senate, and it ought to be required of all the departments of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina permit the Chair to direct his attention to the fact that the amendment just agreed to is numbered section 205, and there is another section 205 immediately following in the printed bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I will correct that. Change section 205 to section 206.

Mr. HASTINGS. Section 205 in the printed bill has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read section 205, if there are no other amendments to section 204.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 205. That this title shall continue in effect until, but not after, the expiration of six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be determined by a proclamation of the President of the United States, but the President may at any time by proclamation declare that this title is no longer necessary, and thereupon it shall cease to be in effect.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, I offer an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that section 205 as read be renumbered section 206. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I simply want to make this observation to the Members of the House, that in the discussion of this important measure three days have been devoted to that part of the bill which creates this War Finance Corporation, and practically two hours have been spent in the discussion of that other part of the bill which pertains to the capital issues. I also want to call the attention of the business interests of the country to this, because the Capital Issues Committee has strangulation power over all industry in this country, if its powers are not properly exercised.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 300. That whoever willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both; and whoever knowingly participates in any such violation, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall be punished by a like fine or imprisonment, or both.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 21, line 17, to strike out the words "one thousand" and insert the words "five thousand."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 17, strike out "one thousand" and insert "five thousand."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why make that different from the other? You made it $10,000 and increased the number of years from one to five.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then, we will make this $10,000. I will modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by making it $10,000 instead of $5,000. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina as modified.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. In the same line, on page 21, strike out the word "one" and substitute the word "five," and change the word "year" to "years."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 17, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "five years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the amendment immediately preceding this agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word "That" before the word "Whoever." Some years ago we appointed a commission to revise the criminal statutes, and they devoted a great deal of time to that revision. They revised the criminal statutes so as to make all statutes begin with the word "Whoever." I suppose the gentleman must have had that in mind when he wrote this. Now, for the sake of harmony I suggest that you strike out the word "That" in starting this section and use the word "Whoever."

Mr. KITCHIN. In all the sections now written they begin with the word "That." We ought to put it in, because the Senate will put it in in places where we leave it off.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In the revision of the criminal laws a good deal of time was spent by the expert lawyers of this House, under the lead of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and that question was thrashed out thoroughly, and all agreed that hereafter all statutes should begin with the word "Whoever."

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman from North Carolina says that the Senate will make us put it in. Does he further suggest that the Senate is going to have its own way when it gets into conference?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is stricken out, it should be stricken out on page 16.

Mr. KITCHIN. And we would have to go back all over the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 301. No stamp or tax shall be required or imposed upon a promissory note secured by the pledge of bonds or obligations of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, the par value of which shall equal the amount of such note.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the par value of which shall equal the amount of such note" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or secured by the pledge of a promissory note which itself is secured by the pledge of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That in either case the par value of such bonds or obligations shall equal the amount of such note."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 303. That the term "securities," as used in this act, includes stocks, shares of stock, bonds, debentures, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and other obligations.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, after line 15, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"The term 'market value,' as used in this act, means if there is no such market value the fair cash value as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the corporation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand the meaning of the amendment—"The term 'market value' means if there is no market value," and so forth.

Mr. KITCHIN. In a great many places throughout the bill it is provided that these securities put up for the loan shall be of a market value of so much. Take savings banks, for instance. Their mortgages have no quotable market value, and we were afraid the board of directors might construe that to mean they must have a quotable market value. If they have no such quotable value, the directors must take the reasonable cash value of the security.

Mr. WALSH. I think it would be safer if the committee endeavored to provide for that class of securities to state what value should be placed upon them rather than to define market value as in the language of the amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. We say if there is no market value it shall mean the fair cash value as estimated and determined by the board of directors.

Mr. WALSH. What does it mean? You are attempting to define "market value," and I think it would be wiser to say what value should apply to certain securities that have no market or quotable value. You are attempting to define "market value" to put a definition on it in this act, which does not define it except as to a certain class of securities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will not the gentleman agree to let this go over until to-morrow, as there is a question as to the phraseology of the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman himself see the point that I make?

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman that I think he is right, and I had not noticed it particularly, because it is entirely different from my instructions to the clerk and his assistant. The gentleman is right about that. If we are going to have a separate section, we should make it read that "if it has no market value, then the fair cash value shall be placed upon it, as determined by the board of directors."

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I simply desire to say that it would have to be radically rewritten. The distinction between market value and cash value ought to be made. There is no difference really in legal phraseology, and I think it ought to be written or stricken out. I raised this same question in the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. The language of this proposed amendment does not accomplish what the committee intended.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me first explain how this came about. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. KITCHIN. Because the market value as used in the bill must be according to the parenthesis after each phrase "market value," as will be seen in the provision, as determined and estimated by the board of directors.

If it is not quotable they would estimate the market value. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the ranking Republican member on the Ways and Means Committee, on account of sickness in his family had to leave a few days ago. He came to me and asked me to please safeguard that, and after the words "market value," where they appeared in the act, to read "market value, but if no market value, then the fair cash value." The committee decided on that, but in drawing this provision instead of amending it in each place we have amended it all in one section, but I do not think we have accomplished the purpose desired.

Mr. MADDEN. The introduction of that into this bill would simply open up the question of charging the board managing this financial corporation with the responsibility of estimating the value of stocks and bonds that are not on the market, of some private corporation that nobody will be able to ascertain the market value of, and I am afraid it is a mistake to put it into the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will withdraw the amendment, because I think that what the gentleman from Michigan wanted to accomplish and what the committee wanted to accomplish is already accomplished in the bill. The gentleman from Michigan wanted to be doubly sure, so we tried to make it so. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 304. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of this great committee if this section were not in the bill, would any future Congress be powerless to do anything with this act by way of altering, amending, or repealing it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think they would, because——

Mr. WALSH. Of course it would not, and there is no more necessity——

Mr. KITCHIN. But it is usually put in all bills.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, it is not usually put in all bills carrying criminal penalties.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is put in nine-tenths of the bills, but it is not necessary.

Mr. WALSH. It is in bills which do not have any criminal provisions, but it is not necessary at all.

Mr. GARNER. It is surplusage.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let it go in.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10608 and had directed him to report the same with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, after the engrossment I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be laid before the House in order to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and to substitute the House bill as amended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular for an inquiry? There are some Members who are not present to-night who might wish to move to recommit.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand there are none. When they left they said we could get down to the question of voting on the bill by a yea-and-nay vote, and they left under that understanding. They can make a motion to recommit to-morrow morning; that motion will not be cut out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substitute the House bill——

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I want the Senate bill laid before the House. Would it not be better to do that after the engrossment is ordered?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the bill, S. 3714, be laid before the House, and I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the House bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When will the stage be reached where we can make a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. As soon as the third reading is completed.

Mr. GARNER. If you substitute this bill, Mr. Speaker, for the Senate bill, striking out all after the enacting clause, then you still have the right to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Of course, the bill has never been read a third time, and this intervenes. The Chair lays before the House this Senate bill, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] moves that everything after the enacting clause be stricken out of the Senate bill, and that the House bill as amended be substituted.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill a third time.

Mr. KITCHIN. At what stage are we?

The SPEAKER. The stage is that we are going to have a third reading of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If we adjourn to-night, with the proceedings as they are, the question will come up to-morrow after the reading of the Journal on the third reading and passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The first thing that will happen is that the bill will be read a third time. Any gentleman who wishes to offer a motion to recommit can do it then.

Mr. GARNER. Then on the passage?

The SPEAKER. Yes; on the passage.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 21, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy gracious favor for the duties of this day. Impress us more and more with our dependence upon Thee, that in places of leadership and power we dare not face the responsibilities of life or of this office, representing the interests of millions of Thy children, except as we are impressed and guided by the spirit of truth and justice and love. O God, take us by the hand and lead us this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 154) authorizing the erection of a memorial in Washington to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have petitions from the American Defense Society, signed by thousands of people in the State of Michigan, protesting against disloyal utterances or conduct unbecoming an American citizen in the present crisis. I ask that they be referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present a large number of petitions asking Congress to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities, or for the publication or public utterance of statements tending to impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war, or in recruiting or enlistment, or to hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy, or to cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

The petitions are signed by 60,000 citizens of Louisiana. I ask that they be given the proper reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator think the petitions should go?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Judiciary Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a number of petitions and ask to have them referred to the proper committee, saying in explanation that they are petitions from the American Defense Society of the State of North Dakota and contain many thousands of names. I will ask that the Secretary may simply read the heading of one of the petitions, which is very short, and then have them referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read once this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the heading of one of the petitions was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[American Defense Society, State of North Dakota.]

Petition of the people of the United States of America to the Congress at Washington.

Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the borders of our country, we, the citizens of the United States whose names are hereto subscribed, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities or for the publication or public utterance of statements tending—

To impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war or in recruiting or enlistment; or

To hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy; or

To cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Local Branch, National Woman's Party, of Portland, Me., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented resolutions adopted by the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast, relative to the sites for naval bases on the Pacific coast, and indorsing the findings and recommendations of the Naval Commission, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, at the election in 1916 the State of South Dakota adopted a constitutional amendment providing for State-wide prohibition. The legislature then enacted a law, which went into effect on the 1st of July, 1917, providing for State-wide prohibition in pursuance of the constitutional amendment. I am just now in receipt of the following telegram:

South Dakota ratifies unanimously; house 87, senate 43. First State to make a unanimous record.

Thus ratifying, of course, the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I simply want to express my satisfaction and pride, Mr. President, in this record made by my State.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3571) granting lands for school purposes in lots No. 111 in each of the town sites of Fort Shaw and Simms, Sun River reclamation project, Mont., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 322) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 390) to establish the Grand Canyon National Park, in the State of Arizona, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 321) thereon.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill after the disposition of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to present a substitute for the report of the committee, or for the bill. I wish to have the substitute bill that I present printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia means an amendment in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know it is usually called an amendment. It is really a substitute, and I like that language better.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the substitute is to be printed in the RECORD, I suggest that the original bill be printed also in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like very much to have both printed together.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was just going to ask that the original bill be printed, and as the Senator from Georgia offers a substitute for the bill I suppose that both will be printed together. I should like to have that done.

There being no objection, the bill and proposed substitute were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record: Provided, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time during the said year as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force: Provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war.

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another, to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, together with the whole or any part of the records and public property belonging thereto.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

SEC. 4. That should the President, in redistributing the functions among the executive agencies as provided in this act, conclude that any bureau should be abolished and it or their duties and functions conferred upon some other department or bureau or eliminated entirely, he shall report his conclusions to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting with the provisions of this act are to the extent of such conflict suspended while this act is in force.

Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SMITH of Georgia to the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government, viz: Substitute for the report of the subcommittee the following:

SECTION 1. That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions in and among the War and Navy Departments, the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the Bureau of Mines as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon such departments, board, corporation, or bureau, and upon bureaus, offices, or officers of the same, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary: Provided, That such regulations and orders shall be in writing and given due publicity: Provided further, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time during the said year as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force.

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized, in and among the War and Navy Departments, the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the Bureau of Mines, to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any bureaus, offices, or officers, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing bureau, office, or officer to another, and to transfer the personnel thereof, or any part of it, either by detail or assignment.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act any moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the use of any such department, bureau, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

SEC. 4. That upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting with the provisions of this act are to the extent of such conflict suspended while this act is in force.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted an amendment providing that during the next fiscal year clerks in first and second class post offices shall receive increased compensation in addition to the compensation now received by them, at the rate of 20 per cent for all those receiving up to and including $1,200 per annum, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

OFFICERS' QUARTERS.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

NONCOMBATANT COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution (S. Res. 216) was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to transmit to the Senate the number of noncombatant commissioned officers in the United States Army within the draft age, and who have received their commissions since the outbreak of the war.

Mr. THOMAS. In this connection I present and ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, an editorial relating to the subject from the Washington Post of yesterday morning.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SLACKERS IN UNIFORM?

The astounding revelation, coming from an apparently reliable source, that there are 62,000 noncombatant officers holding commissions in the United States Army and but 63,000 combatant officers has aroused the indignation of Senators and Representatives, who threaten an exposé in Congress, with a demand for an investigation of the facts in connection with the granting of commissions to this legion of nonfighting officers. There is no disposition to cast reflection upon the large number of men who, from patriotic motives, have sacrificed their personal interests and donned the uniform of their country in order that they may serve in the capacity in which they will be most useful, but there is a very strong inclination to put a stop to the granting of commissions through influence and to place an absolute ban upon the commissioning in the noncombatant forces of young men of draft age.

That it has been necessary in the quick expansion of the War Department organization to commission a large number of men from civil life is fully appreciated by all. There was no time for the training of staff officers, the training facilities of the country being exhausted in turning out the line officers necessary to command the National Army and the National Guard. But the inequalities that have crept in have become so glaring in many instances as to arouse a feeling of deep resentment. There have been numerous instances of young men who have gone through the grueling experiences of the officers' training camp and emerged with honor and a lieutenant's commission, only to find that some other man, specially favored, has stepped into a captaincy or majority without a day of training or any effort on his part. These incongruities naturally arouse feelings of resentment, which are not good for the morale of the Army.

It was announced as the fixed policy of the War Department that it would not grant a commission to any man of draft age unless it was found that his services were indispensable to the Government in the line for which he was commissioned. This policy, it is believed, has been adhered to in the great majority of cases. But it is stated that some conspicuous exceptions have been made, and these promise to be used as the theme for pointed remarks in Congress. It is difficult to conceive of any young man's services being so markedly needful to the United States as to justify an exception to this rule.

What particular ability must a young man have to warrant giving him shoulder straps with an officer's pay and allowances and an assignment to duty which keeps him permanently in this country, back of the lines, safe from enemy bullets or shrapnel, when millions of other men of the same age, many of them with equal or superior physical and mental equipment, are obliged to go out on the battle line and take the chances of war? It will require a very strong marshaling of argument to justify the commissioning of young men of draft age and assigning them to duty which involves no personal danger or even inconvenience.

If the mutterings heard in Congress mean anything, an investigation of such cases is impending, and it will be well for the Army and the country to have a probe of the circumstances surrounding the granting of commissions to civilians. It will result not only in weeding out those who may have secured their shoulder straps through influence or favoritism, but it also will vindicate those who are making a real and patriotic sacrifice in order to serve their Government. A little ray of light on the subject would be very helpful.

SHORTAGE OF COAL AND SUGAR.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to make an announcement that to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the morning business, if I may obtain permission from the Senate, I wish to submit some remarks upon questions in connection with the investigation of coal and sugar. I am induced to this action by the speech of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which was delivered some days ago.

THE NATION'S HEALTH.

Mr. OWEN. I ask to have sent to the Committee on Printing, with a view to having it printed as a Senate document, an address delivered before the Conservation Congress in Washington on "The Nation's Health," by Susanna Cocroft.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

TIMBER FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are a number of bills on the calendar that have been reported by the Military Affairs Committee, most, if not all, of which were introduced at the request of the War Department, and it is quite important that some of them should be acted on speedily. I do not like to interfere with the pending measure, but I give notice now that at the first opportunity I shall ask unanimous consent that the several bills may be taken up and acted upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. We had better take them up now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think probably the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina might be proper, to take them up now, and I ask unanimous consent that the bills may be considered, at least until the expiration of the morning hour. I think some of them will not require discussion. If so, those particular measures that would lead to any extended discussion might be postponed until a later date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. What bill would the Senator have taken up first?

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator has no objection, I would call his attention to the bill (S. 3426) to empower the President to requisition timber and timber products for war purposes. The bill was introduced and referred to the committee in the Senator's absence. It was twice considered by the committee and finally reported.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would just as soon take up that bill first if there is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. As these bills are to be taken up I think Senators ought to be notified, so that if they have any objection they may be present, or if they desire to speak upon them they may have a chance to do so, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Nugent	Sutherland
Baird	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Swanson
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Thomas
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Thompson

Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Hale	Martin	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

Mr. WARREN. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KENDRICK] on public business and ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BECKHAM. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], is detained by illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. One of the most important bills is the bill (S. 3426) to empower the President to requisition timber and timber products for war purposes. It has more particular reference to the acquirement of spruce for use in the production of aircraft and timber for building of ships. As the Senate understands, there has been more or less difficulty in procuring spruce, which is absolutely necessary for aircraft construction. It is the object of the bill to enable the Government to take such steps as may be necessary to acquire spruce and lumber for ships in sufficient quantities to meet the Government's purpose.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent has already been granted.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is this the bill which was referred back to the committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The bill was referred back to the committee and some amendments were made, after which the bill was finally reported by unanimous action of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. The bill is up for consideration now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 1, line 3, before the word "war," to strike out "in time of" and insert "during the period of the present," so as to make the clause read:

That during the period of the present war the President is hereby authorized and empowered within the limits of amounts heretofore or hereafter appropriated therefor—

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "Navy," to strike out "the United States Shipping Board," and on page 2, line 3, after the word "Navy," to strike out "the United States Shipping Board," so as to make the clause read:

First. To take possession of any standing or fallen timber required for use by the Army, Navy, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or required in the production of any article necessary for use by the Army, Navy, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "lands," to insert "including Indian and military reservations," and in line 11, after the word "timber," to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "to erect and maintain such machinery, appliances, and temporary structures upon any portion of said lands as may be necessary for the accomplishment of any of said purposes, and to remove the same; to construct and maintain such roads and logging railroads across and over said lands as may be required for rapid cutting, removal, or appropriation of such timber, and to operate such logging railroads and remove all rails and equipment thereof," so as to make the clause read:

Second. To enter upon any lands, including Indian and military reservations, on which is situated any such standing or fallen timber so required, and to cut, remove, and appropriate such timber therefrom; also to enter upon and occupy any other lands or premises required in cutting or removing such standing or fallen timber; to erect and maintain such machinery, appliances, and temporary structures upon any portion of said lands as may be necessary for the accomplishment of any of said purposes, and to remove the same; to construct and maintain such roads and logging railroads across and over said lands as may be required for rapid cutting, removal, or appropriation of such timber, and to operate such logging railroads and remove all rails and equipment thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 21, after the word "products," to insert "and all machinery, cables, rails, equipment, and appliances of every character and description necessary for the production of logs, as may be"; in line 24, after the word "Navy," to strike out "the United States Shipping Board"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "Corporation," to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That a reasonable supply of logs shall always be left with any mill conducting its own logging operations to insure its continued operation as a sawmill.

So as to make the clause read:

Third. To take possession of and use any logs or manufactured lumber or other timber products and all machinery, cables, rails, equipment, and appliances of every character and description necessary for the production of logs, as may be required for use by the Army, Navy, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation: Provided, That a reasonable supply of logs shall always be left with any mill conducting its own logging operations to insure its continued operation as a sawmill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 6, after the words "commit to," to strike out "the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the United States Shipping Board" and insert "a department or agency of the Government designated by him for that purpose," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for the President to commit to a department or agency of the Government designated by him for that purpose the exercise of the powers granted by section 1 hereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before that amendment is agreed to I should like to hear from the Senator from Oregon, having this bill in charge, whether the purpose is to create another agency or instrumentality for the purpose of operating under the provisions of this bill? It seems to me we have already too many agencies and instrumentalities and boards, and that it would be far better to avail ourselves of some that are already in existence. I would be glad to have the Senator having this bill in charge, if he cares to answer, state what reason there is to justify the creation of another agency or board or bureau for the purpose of administering the duties required by this act?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I can answer the Senator from Utah, if he will permit me. Probably that is proposed in order to make another necessity for a bill to authorize coordination.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that, as I understand it, the intention of this proposed act is that the department or agency of the Government to be designated by the President is to perform these duties and that under this authority several such bodies might be consolidated into one.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the bill as it was originally prepared committed to the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the United States Shipping Board the duties imposed by the act, but it was thought best to establish some other agency—one agency, if need be—that could do this work with greater effectiveness than where it was divided among three different boards or departments.

I will say that this bill was recommitted because there was some difference of opinion amongst the men who were engaged in the production of lumber, particularly of spruce for aeroplane construction and of white pine and fir for the building of ships. After the bill was recommitted a hearing was had of the lumbermen of all sections of the country where these particular lumbers are produced. They were satisfied with the terms of the bill, I am advised, and many of the amendments which were made were made at their suggestion. I did not happen to be present at the time the hearing was had, on account of illness, but I believe the Senator from Florida [Mr.

FLETCHER] was present, and he knows just what was the reason for that particular change.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does this mean that we are to have a sawmill commission now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does not contemplate that there will be a sawmill commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. But will there not have to be some new authority created to perform this work?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It might be that the President would have the power under this legislation to name the chairman of the Shipping Board, or any particular individual, as an agency to attend to this particular part of the service.

Mr. BORAH. But he would have to name some agency already created.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is that really the case?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Georgia what the object of the amendment was. The question of getting timber was very important, not only for the Aircraft Board but for the Emergency Fleet Corporation in the building of ships. In one case, for instance, in Washington and Oregon, the Aircraft Board are particularly interested, and in the yellow-pine region the Emergency Fleet Corporation are particularly interested; so that it was thought advisable to have this legislation provide that the President might designate a particular agency, which is already a Government agency, to do this thing in one part of the country and another such agency to do it in another part of the country.

Mr. HARDWICK. I quite understand the desirability of that; but in order to accomplish that and no more, would the Senator object to this additional amendment—"any existing department or agency"—so that it will be certain that no new agency will be created?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I make a suggestion in answer to that question? Mr. President, the principal spruce districts in the country are in Oregon and Washington. I think the greater portion of spruce is produced there. It was a physical impossibility for the agents here in the city of Washington to undertake to get at these small bodies of spruce that were scattered throughout those two States. It was found that the agencies acting here in Washington could not reach it at all with any degree of efficiency. They did not understand the situation. It finally resulted in Col. Disque, an Army officer, being appointed as the agent of the Government to go out there and take charge of spruce production. For instance, in a single 40-acre tract of timber there might be only a few large trees that were spruce and that were suited for aircraft production. The man on the ground is the best agency employed to attend to it, and not men in Washington who do not understand conditions.

I will say to the Senator that the War Department has detailed enlisted men from Camp Meade to go into the lumber regions and get out this timber, because the I. W. W.'s would not allow men to go in there. It requires a man, an agency, on the ground to take charge of the production.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not object at all to that. What I want to do is not to provide for some new board. Let us allow the President to use any existing agency of the Government he wants to use in order to get this timber—whether in Oregon, in Georgia, in South Carolina, in Florida, or anywhere else—and let him employ an officer of the War Department, like the colonel the Senator has mentioned or some other man; but do not let us so provide that we will probably have a new sawmill board created as the result of this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have understood that Col. Disque, who is looking after the spruce supply in Oregon, has formed his force wholly out of enlisted men, and that by military authority they are seeking to acquire a supply of spruce timber for airplane construction.

Mr. HARDWICK. Be that as it may, we are using the War Department, then, in that particular matter; we are not creating at least a new and useless board.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This was done by Col Disque, however, under military authority. I think the Senator from Oregon is familiar with this work. I happen to be familiar with it, because the matter came up in the Committee on Commerce one day during a discussion of the labor problems that were affecting the timber supply for shipbuilding and for airplane construction; and it came out during that hearing that an officer of the Army was directing the timber supply so far as it related to Oregon, where we obtain most of our spruce timber for airplane construction. I think, however, I ought to say that in taking enlisted men into that service they are being paid wages that would ordinarily be paid to men in that field of labor, as they ought to be. If the work is not going along satisfactorily under the management of the officer it is not because he lacks authority. It was quite necessary that something drastic be undertaken in order to insure this supply.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that attached to the report is a telegram from Col. Disque which explains the situation and shows the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did not hear the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. When the time comes, Mr. President, I intend to move to strike out the word "a," in line 7, of page 3, and substitute the words "any existing."

Mr. REED. "Agency?"

Mr. HARDWICK. That word will be left in. I desire to have it read "any existing department or agency of the Government."

Mr. REED. Does the Senator propose to make it in the singular or the plural?

Mr. HARDWICK. Just as it is, execept I want to insert the word "existing" before the language the committee employs.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words about this bill. I think the agency ought to be an existing agency, but I think it ought to be a civilian agency.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that out in the sections where the I. W. W. are active it will be necessary to have some military authority.

Mr. REED. The military can go along with the civil. I am talking about the requisitioning authority. I do not know what kind of conditions may prevail in some parts of the country. The Senator speaks of the I. W. W. I did not suppose there was a place in the United States where the civil authority had been superseded by mobs or by unlawful organizations.

Mr. BORAH. Well, there are instances where troops had to be called on.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing that the civil agents may be backed by any amount of power necessary. I want to call attention to a circumstance——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment before he gets away from that point, I wish to suggest that, if we are getting the timber for the War Department or for the Navy Department, it might be just as well to permit an agency of those departments to be employed in getting the timber. Therefore I would not want to limit them in the way the Senator suggests. I would say "any agency of the Government already existing that the President wants to employ."

Mr. REED. I desire simply to relate one circumstance; there are several of them, but I will relate only one. An old farmer in my State who has lived on the same piece of land—he and his ancestors—for probably 75 years, among other things has nursed and kept on this splendid farm a walnut grove, in which there are many fine trees. It was a matter of great pride to him. Something like eight or nine months ago a couple of gentlemen arrived at his place, who had with them a man wearing the uniform of an Army lieutenant. They told this old farmer they had come down to buy his timber; that it was his patriotic duty to sell it. They intimated to him very broadly that, if he did not sell it, it would be taken from him; and that any man who did not turn over his timber was a bad citizen, if not a traitor. The old gentleman was greatly alarmed and greatly distressed. He said, "I am perfectly willing to give my walnut timber to the Government to make gunstocks with; I will give it to the Government if the Government wants it; but I should like to know the authority you gentlemen have to come here and demand it." They continued to deliver lectures to him; but he is a pretty game sort of an old American, and finally he said to them, "Now, I want to know whether you are here representing the United States Government and want this timber for the United States Government; and if so, I want to see your authority." Finally he forced the admission from them that they wanted this timber to sell to somebody who they said had an Army contract. Some of these trees were worth $200 apiece. The same thing that was attempted in this instance and that failed, because this old gentleman was a pretty sturdy character, was attempted in other places.

I want the Government of the United States to have the fullest authority to take timber where it is necessary; but I believe the authority ought to be lodged in some civil officer of the Government; it ought not to be lodged in the military. I am perfectly willing, of course, after the civil authority has taken action, that, if necessary, force shall be used to take the timber. I think the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is a good amendment; but if this is to be done through a war agency, I want to offer another amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a suggestion, Mr. President.

In the getting out of spruce there has been very great difficulty encountered on account of the activities of the I. W. W.'s in the western country. I do not know that they were guilty of any particular overt acts, either in the destruction of life or the destruction of property; but conditions got to be such in Oregon and part of Washington, at least, that men were afraid to go into the timber to work. It was all a man's life was worth to leave his home and go into the lumber camps for the purpose of getting out lumber that was to be used for governmental purposes. In order to meet that situation—and this is in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that he prefers to have a civilian agency—it became necessary to send an Army officer out there, in the person of Col. Disque, and to detail enlisted men from Camp Meade into the lumber camps with guns on their shoulders, to see to it that nobody interfered with the work.

This was a benefit to these young enlisted men. They went into these camps armed and uniformed, if you please, as United States soldiers. They never had to use the guns, but their presence there maintained order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not object to that. I do not object to the necessary force being employed to guard the men who propose to take the timber. What I am suggesting is in response to the statement that was made here that the board that requisitions this timber ought to be a civil board; it ought to be the civil authority that is employed; and if there is resistance, then, of course, the necessary power can be used.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Completing what I had to say, Mr. President, this was not only of benefit to the Government itself, but it was of benefit to these young enlisted men. They went into these camps and they got paid for their services just what the men working in the lumber camps got. They got the standard wages. We have not had any trouble with the I. W. W.'s or any other of that element since these young men went into the field.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator also, by way of strengthening his idea—because I agree with him about it—that if the War Department themselves want this timber, they may want a certain kind that they can get better than anybody else. Why should they not be allowed to send out their own officials to get it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say this to the Senator: The Senator has not had occasion, of course, to go into this situation. Here is the Shipping Board, that want one class of timber. They want the fir and white pine. They require timber of a certain size. They were not acting in conjunction with the Aircraft Production Board. They had their agencies there looking after fir production. The Aircraft Board had an agency—a civilian agency, if you please—looking after the production of spruce. After a good deal of negotiation and a good deal of work some of us succeeded in getting the Aircraft Production Board and the Shipping Board to get together. I think Mr. Bloedel, of Seattle, was named by the Shipping Board as its civilian representative on this board, and a gentleman from Oregon, another civilian, was suggested as the representative of the Aircraft Production Board, and there are others on this board, so that both of these boards are now acting together. If you limit this to an existing agency, as the Senator from Georgia proposes, I question very much if the Aircraft Production Board or the Shipping Board could go to work and select civilians to try to work in harmony in getting out both fir for ship production and spruce for aircraft production. That is the purpose of this.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for just a moment, does the Senator then contend that under this language an absolutely new board or commission could be created by the President?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is not the creation of a commission, but——

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, could be employed, then, I will say?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I question very much if these different branches of the Government—the Aircraft Production Board and the Shipping Board—would have the right to name these civilians who are offering their services for the purpose of assisting in this work.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, under the discretionary power residing in the President, and with a fund absolutely at his disposal, they could do exactly what the Senator from Georgia says.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, it is barely possible that that might be done; but this bill was prepared after a good deal of effort and a good deal of consideration by the Aircraft Production Board as well as the Shipping Board, and we have changed it and modified it so as to meet the opposing views of each.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not mean to criticize that feature of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In order to avoid further discussion, Mr. President, so far as I can do it, I am willing to accept the one amendment the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] proposes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think that language would be entirely satisfactory, and I really think that was the purpose of the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what you meant.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was not our intention to create a new or additional agency.

Mr. HARDWICK. I suggest that amendment, then, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee, in his opening statement with reference to the bill, made a remark that I understood to mean that the necessity for this bill largely grows out of the needs of the Government to get spruce for airplanes. I want to ask him whether or not he meant by that that legislation of this kind is necessary, so far as the Pacific coast is concerned, in order to get the timber from the owners?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is; and I will state to the Senator why. As the Senator knows, coming from the State of Washington, spruce is scattered over a large area. For instance, in a 40-acre tract——

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the Senator does not get my point.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I think I will answer the Senator. There are a number of small tracts of land covered by spruce, the owners of which are scattered or unknown. The original owners in some cases are dead. The parties who are in control of it are willing that the Government should take off the spruce, but the owners of it are so scattered that it is impossible for the Government to get action on it, even at the request of the men who appear to be in control.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That explains the situation from the viewpoint of the Senator, and probably there may be some conditions like that; but I want to say that the lumber people of the Pacific coast have assured me that they have placed their timber at the disposal of the Government absolutely, upon any terms that the Government may desire, and that it is not necessary to give the administration or administrative officers authority to commandeer timber because of the refusal of the owners to let the Government have it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was told, with reference to this bill, that there are some sections of the country where the owners of timber are refusing to let the Government have their timber, and that this legislation might be necessary because of the situation in those sections of the country; but I want to say that, so far as the lumber people of the Pacific coast are concerned, this legislation is not necessary to get them to let the Government take their timber. They are all glad and willing to let the Government have it upon whatever terms it may fix. Of course, the difficulty disclosed by what the Senator has just mentioned may exist with reference to some tracts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him for a moment, if the Senator will read the telegram from Col. Disque which is part of the report on this bill, he will find that Col. Disque corroborates what the Senator says about the willingness of the great majority of the timber owners to let the Government have whatever it wants; but I call the Senator's attention to that telegram. He says:

> At request of Hammond Lumber Co. permit me to say that Chamberlain commandeer bill is not made necessary because of attitude of timber owners in Washington and Oregon who are operating at the present time. I have had nothing but most patriotic support from the great majority. Necessity for bill lies in the fact that considerable spruce timber is held by absent owners—sometimes in direction enemy sympathizers, sometimes estates and ownership involved in court proceedings, and sometimes we can not locate owners. These are the reasons why this bill should become a law at once. In addition, frequently stands in Indian reservations and military reservations are tied up by restrictive laws which seem impossible to overcome. When our operations are directed through a given territory it is mandatory in the interest of our war program that we proceed with rapidity to take all the spruce as we go. The patriotic action of employers and employees, as well as owners of timber present in this section, has been beyond question, and I know of none who oppose this bill, which should not be considered as a coercive measure as regards those who are at present in the lumber business in the Northwest.

There is quite a considerable body of that class of timber, as Col. Disque explained to me personally, which he could not reach at all, and it was absolutely essential for the Government's use.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means he could not reach the owners.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad the Senator has read that telegram. When this bill was reported some little time ago, I received telegrams from a number of people in my State suggesting that they ought to have an opportunity to be heard. I spoke to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who reported the bill, and I think it was at my request that the bill was sent back to the committee. I did not, in fact, know that the bill had been reported again. I have not had time to examine it and have not had time to examine the report which the Senator has read, but that telegram coincides with the information I have had, and I wanted to emphasize that.

Now, I want to say just a word or two.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. While the Senator is on his feet, I wish he would tell the Senate whether the lumbermen in his part of the country have been fully informed as to the nature of this bill and have been heard before the committee, and whether they are satisfied with it?

I ask that question for this reason: Minnesota is not a large lumber-producing State any more, but very many of her citizens are interested in Washington and Oregon, on the Pacific coast. I have heard nothing from them, but I am very sure that, so far as my State is concerned, the lumber there belonging to Minnesota owners is at the disposal of the Government on its own terms. I have never heard anything about this bill, and I should like to know whether the lumber interests have been informed as to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, it was at the request of lumber people from my State that I asked the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to have the bill recommitted, in order that they might have a hearing. I understand that representatives of the lumber industry from the State were here, and they appeared before the committee, and they have had their hearing, and none of them has spoken to me since the hearing was had. I understand that they have gone home. My impression is that they are satisfied with the measure as amended; that is, they are willing to accept cheerfully whatever is deemed necessary, even though they may doubt the wisdom of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, that there did appear before the committee representatives of the lumber interests from the Pacific coast and from the Gulf coast and from the Atlantic coast, and the committee agreed to the amendments which they desired to have made to the bill.

One objection urged to the bill was that it probably would give some sort of control over the operation of the mills. That was not the purpose. The main purpose is to get timber in suitable sizes for building ships and suitable sizes for carrying on the aircraft work. This necessity arises not because the people who own the timber are unpatriotic or want to hold up the Government, or anything of that kind, but frequently the timber is owned by people who are away and can not be reached. Sometimes it is owned by minors, sometimes by estates, sometimes by trustees who can not sell. Sometimes it is under mortgage and can not be released, and it is not available to the Government. On the other hand, we need the timber; we need these sizes; and this power is given to commandeer the timber in the woods, the logs; not to operate sawmills. That was not the purpose, and we do not attempt to go into that field at all. So that the bill was amended in accordance with the wishes of the gentlemen to whom the Senator refers and others who appeared before the committee, and, so far as I know now, there is no objection whatever on the part of anybody to the passage of the bill as it has been amended.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I want to ask him one question about what this bill means.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will not the Senator defer that for a moment?

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator from Washington still the floor? I do not want to interfere with the Senator if he has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have just a few more words to say.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say, Mr. President, that my understanding is, and my recollection of the terms of the bill as originally introduced is, that it did give control over sawmills, and everything of that kind. This just illustrates what the trouble is with the legislation that comes down to Congress. With the purpose of the legislation everybody can agree; but the trouble is that those who frame the legislation not only try to carry out a particular purpose, but they put within the terms of the bill all sorts of authority outside of and beyond the purpose that is intended to be served by the measure.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is exactly what I had in mind, Mr. President. If the Senator will yield to me, perhaps I can get from him the information that I desire. I see that section 4 of the bill provides as follows:

> That the President is hereby authorized, during the period of the present war, * * * to issue orders to persons engaged in lumbering and in operating sawmills prescribing the dimensions of lumber and timber products which shall be manufactured in the course of such operations.

Taking that entire section and construing it together, does the Senator from Washington believe that under this bill the President can generally direct the operation of sawmills and prescribe what lengths and dimensions of lumber shall be sawed throughout this country, whether it is intended for war purposes or not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That language sounds pretty broad. As I said awhile ago, I have not had an opportunity to read the bill since it was reported by the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida, then——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator may ask some one in charge of the bill about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from Florida, then, give me the information he has in answer to that question? The question I ask is this: Under this bill, and particularly under section 4 of it, is the President limited, in the orders that he may issue to sawmills as to the kind and character and length and breadth of their output, to such necessities as the Government may have with relation to war, or is he generally to have a supervisory control over all sawmill operations in this country?

Mr. FLETCHER. Why, Mr. President, the effort distinctly was to avoid anything of that sort; that is, the general control over sawmills or the power to make any rules or regulations respecting the operation of sawmills. The bill refers to the necessities of the Army, the Navy, and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. At the beginning of section 4 it specifies that the President is authorized to do these things "in so far as may be necessary to insure an adequate supply of lumber and timber products required by the Army, Navy, and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation." The language in the original bill, "the manner of conducting all logging and lumbering operations," was stricken out by the committee, because it was feared that that might give the broad power that the Senator suggests. That was eliminated, and as the bill is now reported that language is out of it.

Mr. HARDWICK. To get that construction plainly before the Senate, then, as the committee understands it, the contention is that the President is given this power to direct the operation of sawmills only in so far as it is necessary to secure what this country needs for war purposes?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; precisely.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wanted to be informed on that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. REED. But the bill does not say that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. It refers to that kind of operation, and the only operation authorized is the operation to secure the necessary timber for the purposes named.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Washington has the floor, and I will not interfere with him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was brought out before the Commerce Committee on the hearing in reference to the operation of the Shipping Board some time ago that there was one man out on the Pacific coast representing the Shipping Board in getting out the timber for building the ships; that there was another man representing the War Department getting out material for certain war purposes connected with the War Department; and that there was somebody else looking after the airplane production. Now, a system like that can result only in waste and delay and confusion.

It has never seemed to me that it was outside of the power of the departments to coordinate their efforts along those lines. It seems that there is hardly any occasion comes up but what it must be met by the creation of some new board or the giving of new authority or the employment of new agencies in order to accomplish what it would seem we have agencies enough to accomplish. But if we have not the authority to concentrate the power in one body to look after all those various interests, then we ought to grant it; and the sooner it is granted the better it will be.

It is absolutely essential to avoid waste and to avoid great loss to the lumber industry that this authority should be centralized so that one controlling body or person may supervise the getting out of timber for these various operations so as to use and conserve the timber that must be cut in order to get out the timber that we need for these particular purposes and that will be wasted unless some provision is made to take care of it. With a proper control and with a proper handling of the matter, not only can the Government get out what it needs but conserve what we must necessarily have cut after what is needed by the Government is taken.

The Senator from Oregon referred to the activities of the Industrial Workers of the World in that section of the country. In the last few days I have seen people from our section of the country, and while we have thought that that condition was very much under control the indications now are that it is likely to break out this spring and this summer as bad, if not worse, than it was before. There is a situation there which should be met, and it should be met promptly, and it should be met vigorously by the administration. The military power should be used, so far as it is possible to use it, in order to suppress this agency and this evil that is doing more in the Northwest to hinder and delay the operations of the Government than anything else.

We hear a great deal now about spies in this country. You hardly pick up a paper but you find a reference to spies, and statements that the country is filled with spies. Government officials warn us against spies and intimate that they are on every corner. If there are spies anything like what the papers would indicate, why are not the agencies of the Government doing their duty in catching some of them, and when they are caught there ought to be some drastic punishment meted out to them. If there are spies here, we ought to catch them and we ought to try them promptly by court-martial, and if found guilty we ought to mete out to them the punishment that has always been meted out to spies in time of war—they should be shot. If we do that, we will get rid of some of the spies anyhow, and the others will not do much at their nefarious work.

The same drastic methods will have to be used with the Industrial Workers of the World. A gentleman came from my State just a few days ago who told me of an incident that occurred a few weeks ago at Aberdeen, Wash. He stated that a great spruce log was taken into one of the lumber mills to be sawed up into lumber for airplanes. The great belt saw began to turn, the log moved forward, and the saw broke into a thousand pieces. It had run against an iron hasp that had been driven into the log before it was brought there. This not only ruined the saw, damaged the log, but delayed the work several days and endangered the lives of the workmen. So it is that our laboring people are really afraid to work about the sawmills. They are afraid of things like this that endanger their lives at any moment of time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not say that anybody is derelict in not finding out a thing like that, but such conditions should spur the administration and the agencies of the Government to do everything in their power to stop and suppress anything of that sort, especially when it affects the war activities of the Government. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Along the line of the information which the Senator has just been giving us I would like also to refer to what occurred at Covington, Ky., the other day when 600 horses belonging to the Government were poisoned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I noticed in yesterday morning's paper a little dispatch down in one corner of the paper from the little city in which I lived for over 25 years. It stated that the people of Yakima had taken the secretary of the Industrial Workers of the World local about a mile out of town and had tarred and feathered him.

Mr. President, that is as peace loving and as peaceable a community as there is in the country, but the people of the localities in that section are getting desperate and they propose to take the law into their own hands unless something is done to suppress this evil that is traitorous in its conduct and most disastrous in its effect. I hope that the Government agencies will increase their efforts to suppress and eradicate these terrible evils that are threatening the very success of our armies and of our arms. Most drastic and radical methods will have to be used.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator tell me why the people of Oregon and the people of Washington and the people of California can not take that matter into their own hands if the Government is engaged in other matters requiring all its attention. There is power in the State to deal with it. There is manhood enough in those States to deal with it. I should like to have the Senator tell me why it is not dealt with.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. It is a pretty difficult situation to meet in a community without a National Guard or militia or without an army—without anyone to deal with the situation. I am very much of the opinion of the able Senator. I really know from actual, physical contact with the I. W. W. that they are about as elusive a proposition and at the same time as destructive a proposition as you ever ran up against, and it is almost impossible to deal with them unless you have a regular military force with which to operate. It should be remembered that these are not law-abiding laborers who may be dissatisfied with their wage, but they are a lawless class.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me answer the Senator right here. I have had no occasion myself to come into physical contact with the I. W. W., but the people of my State have had opportunity to exercise their vigilance upon this class of American traitors. I will not call them American traitors, because most of them probably are foreigners. In a little town of only about four or five thousand, a year or two ago, in my State, some 600 of them congregated. They were ordered to leave. They refused. They were arrested. They refused to work. There were so many of them that there were not jails enough to take care of them, but within two days there was an organization of farmers who came to town with their shotguns, and they gave the orders for those people to leave—and they did not buy them any tickets, either—and they left. I have no doubt but that the people of the States of Oregon and California can deal with them in the same way. They got out, and they did not come back, and if they had come back there would have been a great many funerals in that part of the State.

Mr. BORAH. North Dakota evidently ran them out into some other State. All they did was to put them across the State line.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then let the next State drive them away.

Mr. BORAH. That does not solve the question at all. If the 600 men of whom the Senator speaks had been scattered over a vast area of country—timberland and forests, and so forth—as large, perhaps, as North Dakota itself, it would have been almost impossible to deal with the situation. You might have driven a few of them out, as we have driven them into Senator JONES's State sometimes from Idaho, and into Montana, but it does not solve the situation. It must be taken charge of and taken possession of, and they must be given a trial and punished.

Mr. McCUMBER. The organization should be destroyed, and you can do that.

Mr. BORAH. You can not destroy the organization. That is an intangible proposition. It is something that you can not get at. You can not reach it. You do not know where it is. It is not in writing. It is not in anything else. It is a simple understanding between men, and they act upon it without any evidence of existence whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some of them—secretaries and several others—have been arrested and dealt with. The Federal authority, of course, can not catch a man and hang him by law on suspicion.

Mr. BORAH. Another thing. The system which the Senator from North Dakota speaks of might work in one particular instance, but it would not be conducive to law and order or to the protection of human life if adopted generally throughout the country; and certainly we have not reached the point in this war or in this country where we can not in an orderly way take into custody a violator of law and punish him according to the law, and that, so far as I am concerned, I want my State to do and insist upon it doing. I do not want mob law even against the I. W. W.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Washington will allow me just a moment, I want to take the very last sentence of the Senator, that we have not reached the condition in this country in which we can not in a regular and orderly method deal with these people. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] in opening his address upon this bill this morning used this language:

> But conditions got to be such in Oregon and parts of Washington, at least, that men were afraid to go into the timber to work. It was all a man's life was worth to leave his home and go into the lumber camps for the purpose of getting out lumber that was to be used for governmental purposes.

If what the Senator from Oregon states is correct, it seems to me that we are not able to deal with this situation in an orderly way, and if we have not sufficient officials to subserve the interests and the demands of the peace-loving part of our population, then I say that we are justified in doing exactly what the frontiersmen have had to do in many instance, organize their defense forces and destroy the criminals.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to make a personal reference, but I have had some experience with these people. There is always a class in a community that want to take the law into their own hands. To my mind that is just another form of I. W. W.'s. That is their principal doctrine, their theory of force, and it resolves itself into a question of who can exert the greater force.

The best administration that you can possibly give to the I. W. W. organization is to demonstrate that the Government itself is strong enough and efficient enough to prosecute them and prosecute them under the law. If you appeal to brute force or to mob force, it does not accomplish anything in the way of exterminating them at all. It simply drives them into another community for the time. But when they become satisfied that law can take hold of them and prosecute them under the law to success and punish them under the law, it inspires in them a respect for government which has its effect.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not disagree with me at all. I believe in using the ordinary processes of law if they can be used, but if we have reached a condition in which we can not protect the lives of the citizens and in which we can not protect the interests of the Government in a great war, then I certainly believe in taking whatever steps are necessary to accomplish the purpose of subserving the interests of the people and protecting the Government.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator and I only disagree in one thing apparently. The Senator seems to think that mob violence is all right to be used against a mob. I utterly disagree with the doctrine. I do not believe that is the way to deal with the situation at all. I believe that we should proceed under the law and in an orderly way and prosecute them and deal with them under the law and not by mob violence. I do not want to see the people——

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator entirely if you can do it, but you have presented here a situation that has got beyond the control of the people themselves and the law-abiding section of the country.

Mr. BORAH. I do not concede that at all. I do not say it has got beyond their control. I say there are certain forces of the Government which are necessary to deal with it, and that when they are called into action they can deal with it effectively, orderly, and under the law.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have not dealt with them, Mr. President. We have not dealt with them for a year now that we have been preparing for this war. They have checked the production of timber necessary for ships. They have systematically prevented the efficiency of labor in the construction of ships upon which the very life of the Nation depends and we have not been able, or at least we have not so far, to control them sufficiently to produce what we ought to produce for the use of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator that we have not controlled them, but I do not agree that we have not been able to do so had we gone about it in a proper way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho, before he takes his seat, if he does not think that it is incumbent upon the State government to take action in the matter.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly it is incumbent upon the State, and what I say is that the State is left now without any home guard or any National Guard or any militia, and they have no means by which to deal with it as effectively as they would otherwise do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but the State has the power in dealing with anything that takes the proportions of a mob or insurrection to call on the Federal Government for the military to execute the State decrees or the decrees of the State court.

Mr. BORAH. That is one of the ways in which I believe it may be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the way in which it should be done. One more thing. A great many things have been done by these people not in the shape of insurrection and mobs at all. It is sabotage, as they call it, driving nails into timber, and all that sort of thing, all of which are punishable under State criminal laws.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But none are punishable under Federal law unless you can connect it with espionage or with treason.

Mr. BORAH. Of course the State law must administer the punishment, and after policing the situation or controlling the situation may call for the aid of the Federal Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may, and whenever it does it is incumbent upon the State authorities to ask the Federal Government for that aid. Of course the sheriff has, in the first place, the right to call upon the entire population of the county, or wherever his jurisdiction is, to help him execute the law, and you can avoid the mob effect by simply having the sheriff summon all the good citizens. They cease to be a mob then. Let them get their shotguns and deal with these people to whom I have had reference, and if they find the sheriff, with a posse comitatus, is not able to do it, then there comes an appeal to the military.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not want to be understood as advocating that the National Government shall interfere with or supplant the administration of the State law; but I did want to emphasize the situation that confronts us in the Northwest, and I am glad to have it emphasized in the views stated by the different Senators. As the Senator from Idaho said, our militia is all gone and there is no authority there of a military character that we can call upon, unless the sheriff will call upon the governor and the governor call upon the National Government. That was done last year. The governor called upon the National Government and the National Government acted promptly and sent troops out there, and the I. W. W. faded away just like frost before the morning sun. We heard nothing more of them. Finally the troops were taken out and the bad situation seems to be returning. We found this difficulty in some places, with reference to the National Government: As I went out home I went through Wenatchee, in the fruit section, and the National Government had arrested a whole lot of I. W. W.'s and had turned them over to the sheriff to hold for them, and they were in the jail, and they were almost tearing the jail down. They paid no attention to the sheriff. They had no respect for the local authorities. He turned the hose on them, and that only stopped them for a little while.

The sheriff finally insisted upon some member of the home guard being sent there, and, without authority from higher authority, the captain of the home guard sent two or three men up to this jail. The I. W. W.'s happened to look out and saw a man walking along there in uniform, and one said to another, "Why, the soldiers are here," and they stopped their noise immediately and their tearing at the jail and all that sort of thing. They have the greatest respect for the uniform.

Mr. NELSON. Not respect, but fear.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; they have fear; the Senator from Minnesota is right. It is not respect; it is abject fear of the uniform.

The sheriff had been trying to get the Federal authorities to take these men off his hands and prosecute them, if they were to be prosecuted, and punish them, if they were to be punished; but he could not get them to do it; they would not do it. I know he told me that day that unless they did take these men by the next day he would turn them loose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Had these men violated the laws of the State or of the Federal Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Mississippi asks whether these men had violated the laws of the State or of the Federal Government. I do not know; but I do know that they had been arrested by the authority of the Federal Government. What the charge was I do not know. They were not held by the local authorities for violating any State law, but they were held by the Federal authorities for alleged violation of some Federal law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me, from the very fact that they were surrendered to the State authorities, that the people who had arrested them and in whose minds suspicion of their guilt had been aroused, thought they had violated a State law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were not surrendered to the State authorities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They were surrendered to the sheriff?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were simply placed in his charge as a representative of the Federal Government. They were not turned over to him as a county official or as a sheriff.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me if they had violated the laws of the Federal Government they ought to have been turned over to the United States marshal.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, they should have been, but——

Mr. WILLIAMS. They could then, in the ordinary way, have found custody for them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But there was no marshal there, and there was no deputy marshal there. The marshal was 150 miles away at Spokane. The sheriff did try to get the United States marshal to take these men off his hands, but he would not do it, but said, "Hold them; keep them there." That ought not to have been done. As the Senator from Mississippi has suggested, the sheriff had authority to call upon every citizen of the community to help him enforce the law, and I hope that our county and State officials will do that, but I want the cooperation also of the National Government, especially in connection with the operations of the National Government. The presence of Federal troops around the various activities of the National Government will have a very salutary effect upon these people. It will do much toward preventing these nefarious practices.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it may not have a bearing upon this bill, but as the question has been discussed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I wish to say that I substantially agree with those Senators.

In times of peace, of course, the State is going to maintain order through its governor and county officials, and prosecute all crimes within the borders of the State, but there are some things which State governments can not do in time of war. When this war broke out the Legislature of Minnesota made a large appropriation and appointed a public safety commission of eminent personnel, not only to maintain order but to do everything that was necessary in the State to make most effective the State resources for the purposes of this war. But the militia had been ordered away from the State, and, consequently, the State was compelled to provide a State guard, by legislative act, which involved the drilling and preparation of the men composing the State guard in order that they might be fit for service, all of which took time. Seventy-five per cent of the ore which is used in the manufacture of steel in this country goes through the Soo Canal, and about 70 per cent passes through the ports of Duluth and Allouez Bay. All private property in that section had to be protected, embracing docks, lines, and the Soo Canal. A blast of dynamite would absolutely have stopped the ore production of this country, and this section was at that time infested with I. W. W.'s. Some of them were undoubtedly traitors and spies. There was every indication of that. The only thing they were afraid of was a Federal uniform. They did not respect the civil authorities, the sheriff of the county, or an ordinary policeman. The harbors had to be patrolled. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] stated, the State of Minnesota could have driven them from their harbors, perhaps over into Wisconsin, but nothing would have been accomplished.

While, of course, it is not the duty of the Federal Government to preserve order in the States and to enforce State laws, or ordinarily to use the Army and the Navy to protect private property, yet in time of war it is necessary to do everything to maintain the resources of the Nation. The mines, docks, and the canals were absolutely necessary, and if they had been destroyed the industries of this country would have been paralyzed. Men, of course, should not be convicted under mob law without trial, either in time of war or at any other time, and therefore the Government in time of war should be called upon to preserve order in some instances where a State is unable to do so.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in the discussion so far it seems to have been taken for granted that this bill deals only with lumber and logs that are to be used by sawmills. It seems to me that the provisions of the bill are very much broader than that, and that it can apply to lumber and logs that are to be used for any purpose whatever. In my State a great deal of the spruce is used in the pulp mills. I should, therefore, like to ask the Senator from Florida whether the pulp manufacturers of the East have been heard from on this question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I will say that I never heard that the pulp manufacturers desired to present their views. We had before us people who were interested in timber and in the manufacture of lumber—the sawmill people and the logging people—and they were the only ones who seemed to be concerned in this matter at all. I do not think there is any sort of proposal here to deal with timber that is used for making pulp.

Mr. HALE. I do not agree with the Senator from Florida as to that. The same kind of timber that is used in sawmills in my State is also used for manufacturing pulp.

Mr. FLETCHER. The whole subject came up by reason of the difficulty of getting timber of sufficient size for building ships and also timber of such dimensions as was needed for the building of aircraft. It has nothing to do with pulp timber.

Mr. HALE. That may be very true, but I think the Senator will agree that under the provisions of this bill the Government would have the right to take timber of any kind or description whatsoever.

Mr. FLETCHER. Only for the use of the Army, the Navy, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. HALE. Precisely.

Mr. FLETCHER. Where does the Army or the Navy need to deal with pulp?

Mr. HALE. The Army or the Navy may need a supply of spruce timber for whatever purpose that may be necessary, and in such case they might take it from the pulp manufacturers as well as from anybody else. There is a provision of the bill as follows:

Provided, That a reasonable supply of logs shall always be left with any mill conducting its own logging operations to insure its continued operation as a sawmill.

I see no reason why there should not be another provision inserted to the effect that a sufficient number of logs may be left for the pulp mills to conduct their business.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is more important, I think, that we should have timber with which to build ships than it is that we should have timber out of which to make pulp. We have got to have these ships and we have got to have these aeroplanes.

Mr. NEW addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HALE. I should like to make a further statement.

Within a short time we had a joint resolution before us, which the Senate rejected, proposing to allow the Government to take control of the print-paper manufacturing business of the country. I think we ought to be very careful to know that in this apparently innocent bill the same power is not given to the Government now.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I will simply say, for the information of the Senator from Maine, that I am personally acquainted with some of the witnesses who appeared at the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs. While they are not directly connected with the pulp industry, they are collaterally associated, to my knowledge, with parties who are interested in the pulp production in Michigan and the Central West. From their relations to those people, it is a matter of inference wholly on my part that the pulp paper men were advised of the merits of the bill, and, so far as my knowledge goes, no request came from any of them for a hearing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely want to ask the Senator from Indiana what possible difference it could make whether they had any objection or not, because the only thing this bill does is to give the Government machinery to commandeer lumber and timber that it needs for military purposes for the prosecution of this war? And if that is all it does, it ought to have that power, no matter what other interests it touches or affects.

Mr. NEW. That is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the same section to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] referred a few moments ago, and to express a view different from that announced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. In examining the bill very hastily—and I suppose none of us have seen it, except the members of the committee, until it was presented to the Senate a few moments ago—it occurred to me that section 4 grants power and authority that the committee did not desire to confer upon the President or the agency hereby created, and power not necessary for the stated purpose of the bill. Section 4 authorizes the President to issue and enforce orders to persons engaged in logging operations, prescribing the length of logs which shall be cut in the course of such operations, and to issue orders to persons engaged in lumbering and in operating sawmills, prescribing the dimensions of lumber and timber products which shall be manufactured in the course of such operations.

The next section provides a penal clause and makes a violation of any of the orders of the President or the provisions of the act a misdemeanor, and the offender may be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or be both fined and imprisoned. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the fair interpretation to be placed upon section 4 is that the agency to be created by the bill may prescribe the dimensions of all timber cut by mills and all timber products manufactured in any plants operating in the United States. While the intention may be to limit the section to those firms or persons who have contracted with the Government, the language employed is not free from ambiguity. I think there is room for the contention that all lumber plants will be placed under the control of a governmental agency.

There is a growing disposition to place all business under national supervision. Some unwise persons seem to think that whatever the Government or some petty agent of the Government touches it eo instanti becomes sacred and success is assured. Our experience demonstrates that governmental operations are costly and usually inefficient. I should be opposed to the Government taking over the sawmills and timber plants of the country, and I am opposed to enacting penal statutes to aid in controlling private enterprise.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is limited, however, if the Senator will pardon me, by this language:

In so far as it may be necessary to insure an adequate supply of lumber and timber products required by the Army, Navy—

And so forth. They would not have the right to do any of the things subsequently outlined in that section, unless it was necessary to do them in order to supply the Army and the Navy. That is a reasonable view, and I am very much inclined to oppose large grants of power.

Mr. KING. If I were sure that the construction placed upon this section by the Senator from Georgia were the only one that would be given it, I do not think I would be making this criticism of the section, but I am afraid it goes further than that.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is limited by the words "in so far as may be necessary to secure an adequate supply for the Army and Navy."

Mr. KING. I am afraid that some agent of the Government, anxious to assert his authority, may invade the manufacturing plants and give orders as to the manner in which timbers shall be cut, even though there be no contractual relation between him and the Government and neither his plant nor his logs may have been requisitioned by the Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, if that sort of thing were done, the sawmill man would not be forced to submit to it at all, unless, as a matter of fact, the orders were given as a part of the military program to supply the military or naval necessities of the Government. If I did not think the bill meant that, I would never vote for it, and if it means no more than that, no Senator, of course, can afford to oppose it, because it is necessary to give the Government this power in order to prosecute the war.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Government must have the power to requisition whatever property, real or personal, may be necessary to aid in the prosecution of the war. It should have the power to condemn and take possession of mills as well as standing timber. But my objection is that there may be an abuse or perversion of the authority conferred by this measure and officious employees attempt to interfere with the operations of private persons.

I suggest, Mr. President, to the committee that if the bill shall go to conference, or when it shall go to the other House, that the language of this section be changed, so as to relieve it from the criticism which I am now urging against the measure.

Just one further observation, Mr. President, in view of the discussion which has occurred concerning the Industrial Workers of the World and their activities. My only reason for recurring to the subject at this time is that I have recently received a number of communications from individuals and corporations in the West who are engaged in industrial pursuits and in supplying power for manufacturing, municipal, and other purposes, urging that the National Government shall not withdraw the troops that are now stationed in many of the Western States doing police duty and furnishing protection to the plants and properties there being operated. It is urged as one of the reasons why the Government should furnish troops and afford protection to mines, smelters, railroads, and manufacturing plants that the Industrial Workers of the World are so active and are such a menace that property will be destroyed and business paralyzed if the troops are withdrawn.

It is also claimed that the Government is directly interested in the output of some of the mines, smelters, and plants now being operated, and the operation of which is threatened. The criminal acts of this disloyal and outlawed organization are known to the people of the West. I used the word "outlawed" because the members of the organization claim to be outlaws—that is, without the pale of law and not subject to law.

Members of this organization know no country, owe allegiance to no flag, and are the avowed enemies of law and order and of the civilization of our land. They are the enemies of our country, and are giving aid and comfort to our foes. They resort to all forms of violence, and have no regard for human life. Their strikes are not to secure higher wages or improved conditions for labor. They seek the destruction of our industrial system and the overthrow of our Government. If possible, they would close every factory, shut down every manufacturing plant, destroy every ship, and have our soldiers to starve in lands beyond the sea.

They do not seek work or desire to increase the prosperity of our land or of other lands. Their creed is diabolical and abhorrent to all men who love liberty and law.

They are now aiding Germany and endeavoring to create a reign of terror in the sections where they operate.

They must be dealt with in a firm and unyielding manner. There has been too much maudlin sympathy lavished upon them by silly cranks and foolish "uplifters."

There are some well-meaning persons who are dangerous to society when they attempt to deal with labor and labor questions. They become apologists for crimes and wicked industrial upheavals if they think labor is in any manner involved.

Sabotage, destruction of property by violence, strikes in which no grievance upon the part of honest labor is involved—all these things are defended and justified by some foolish, hare-brained "reformers" who worm their way into public position and who seek the limelight of publicity.

The attitude of persons of this character encourages the Industrial Workers of the World and agitators who seek the dislocation of our industrial system. In my opinion there has been too much sympathy manifested by some of the representatives of branches of the Government toward lawbreakers and lawless elements of the Industrial Workers of the World organization.

Recently a large number of Industrial Workers of the World gathered in one of the mining towns of Arizona. They called strikes, defied the law, committed many crimes, took possession of property, prevented honest men from working, and created a condition of anarchy and terror. Finally the residents of the town organized and drove the Industrial Workers of the World from their midst. It was a drastic step. It was perhaps without legal sanction. But the frightful condition brought about by the reign of the organization which knows no law became intolerable to those who had homes and property and who desired peace and opportunity to labor.

An investigation was conducted by some persons representing certain branches of the Government. I have not seen the report, but have seen references to it. If it is of the character represented, it is in my opinion too much of an apology for this criminal organization and expresses too great sympathy for its members.

The Government of the United States and the State authorities must deal with those who are spreading disloyalty, who are inciting domestic violence, and who are endeavoring to help Prussian militarism to win in this titanic conflict in a stern and relentless way. Acts which amount to treason must bring the penalty of treason. We are in war with a mighty foe, and the cowards and traitors within our own bosom must be dealt with as persons of that character should be treated in time of war.

Some of the leaders of the Industrial Workers of the World organization are now being tried in Chicago for alleged violations of criminal statutes of the United States.

The authorities, both State and National, should courageously and effectively deal with this evil. We can not constantly be menaced by an enemy so treacherous and deadly.

Recurring to the requests made that the Government continue to maintain troops in the States in order to protect property, I desire to add that I have written to a number of persons stating that the States should furnish proper police protection; that if authority had not been given to the governors of the respective States, the legislatures should be convened and adequate provision made by law for the proper police protection of the people and their property.

It may prove a heavy burden for some States, but they should not hesitate to discharge the functions required of sovereign States. I do not think that the Government ought to be called upon now, when it needs every soldier that is available, to furnish police protection in the States. Of course there may arise situations which demand Federal intervention for the protection of life and property.

In many of the Eastern States, such as New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, ample provisions are made by the States themselves to protect private enterprises and the manufacturing plants as well as to furnish adequate police protection to the people. I do not think that the States ought to shirk the responsibility resting upon them and attempt to devolve upon the Federal Government the duty and responsibility of policing the States.

Of course, in view of the activities of the Industrial Workers of the World, it is obvious that something must be done. They are a menace to the peace and security of the people; they constitute a constant conspiracy; they are committing crimes daily and hourly; the organization itself is a conspiracy, and every member of the organization, by reason of membership in the organization and in view of the proclamations and the avowed purposes of the organization, is committing a crime. The States should enforce their criminal statutes, and the Federal Government should apply the criminal statutes which reach the activities of this organization.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am on the Military Affairs Committee, and was present when this bill was first considered. I do not feel that I want to oppose any measure which will interfere with the aircraft program or the shipbuilding program. I am not convinced, however, that the shortage in spruce is due entirely to a lack of authority by the War Department, nor did I see or hear any evidence before the committee that the Shipping Board was not getting all the lumber it desired.

I think the shortage in spruce is due more to the bad management of the Aircraft Production Board than to a lack of authority. I think if they had had proper efficiency they could have gotten all the spruce they wanted. That is the impression that I gained from the evidence. This bill is very broad in its provisions. It has been the policy of this Government for the past 15 or 20 years to conserve the forests of the country. The bill permits the Government to go into any private forest and cut timber therein, to go into the Government lands and cut timber—for war purposes, it is true—but we should be absolutely sure, we should be convinced, that it is necessary before we empower these various agencies of Government to go into these forests and cut ad libitum, without any restrictions of forestation, without any regulations, this standing timber, because if they destroy it carelessly or wantonly the forests never can be restored. I think the Senate ought to have more evidence of the necessity of this act before it gives these broad powers to the War Department.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I am surprised that there has been so much discussion about this question here this morning. It seems to me to be a very simple one. Much of the discussion has been interesting, but it seems to me altogether beside the question.

What the Government desired was authority to use certain timbers in a certain way, to make selections of the timbers where it was found necessary to do so, to have them manufactured if the necessity required that it should be done, and to have them manufactured at a different plant than the one where the logs might have been in the first instance expected to be manufactured if the necessity requires it. The testimony before the Military Affairs Committee showed conclusively to me that there was a necessity for the exercise of this power, and the committee well-nigh unanimously reported this bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator kindly show me in the evidence where there was any testimony as to the necessity for additional authority? I think the evidence all showed that there was a lack of efficiency.

Mr. KIRBY. I am not saying that the evidence did not show that there was a lack of efficiency; but the evidence showed that these airplanes have not been built, that the ships have not been built, and that we could not get the lumber. Then the people who are in charge of these things said, "We can get the lumber if we have this additional power," and all the people who manufactured lumber and all the people who own the timber said that there was no complaint about the price that the Government was offering for the timber standing or the lumber manufactured. Sometimes there is a tract of timber the owner of which is not on the ground. Sometimes the trees are found on tracts of land where you can not get in communication with the owner, perhaps. You can use that timber under this sort of a bill. You can use any timber that is desired or necessary, and nobody who owns the timber is complaining about it, and the Government says it must have it. Then why should they not have this kind of authority?

It is safeguarded everywhere. The individual owner can not lose anything. The people who are in the manufacturing part of the business have said the prices that the Government is paying are reasonable. I think the prices are exorbitant; but there was no complaint made on the part of the Government. It said, "We need these logs and timbers, we need them now, and we can get them without any further trouble, obstruction, or delay only in this way."

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KIRBY. I do.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator by what means the railroads will be constructed and machinery will be acquired for the purpose of procuring the timber? This bill, as I read it, carries no appropriation for that object.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it is not contemplated that the Government will have to go into the manufacture at all. It might find it necessary to take certain trees from certain people, to haul them to the plants that are already installed out there, or to direct that that be done, and it would be done in that way. The Government does not expect to go into the manufacturing of lumber at all, but to use the plants that are already constructed and are already engaged in that sort of industry. It seemed to me that the testimony indicated that while certain mills stated that they were perfectly willing to do everything that the Government desired to have done, yet it was not done. When they know that the Government expects to do these things itself, or to require them to be done, that it has the power to do it, there will be no further objection.

I think probably it will not be necessary to use this power at all if it is granted; and, as I understand, everybody, or almost everybody, engaged in this industry conceded that the provisions of this bill were fair; that everybody will be taken care of properly under it. The committee, some members of which are accustomed to construing laws, thought that this bill would be fair to every interest, and that every private and individual interest was properly safeguarded by its terms.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. This spruce is to be used, if needed, in the construction of airplanes, I believe.

Mr. KIRBY. Aircraft and shipbuilding.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Now, as I recall, we appropriated $640,000,000 to construct fighting aircraft.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator tell me how many have been constructed?

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I am not very well advised as to that, but very few have been constructed and completed here yet.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have had spruce enough to build a great many, have they not?

Mr. KIRBY. Oh, the spruce is out there, I will say to the Senator, and a great deal of spruce has been manufactured, and probably they could have gotten more spruce than has been used; but they regard this necessary, under the conditions as they exist in order to facilitate the work both of ship construction and of airplane construction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do they use much spruce in ship construction?

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that they have to get all their big timbers from the West. The southern pine is not large enough to cut the timbers required in the construction of ships, and they must get the big timbers from out there.

Mr. GALLINGER. What puzzles me is this—and I am entirely frank about it, and do not ask any question or make any suggestion to embarrass the consideration of the bill: If they have had spruce enough to construct a good many airships, why have they not constructed more than they have now? Why are they anxious about getting spruce that can not be used for a long time at best, because it will take a long time to use up what they have on hand, as I understand the situation?

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not so understand it; and if we do not get out this lumber until the day we need it we never will have any airships constructed. I do not know what the fact is about the amount of lumber already purchased that is available for airship construction; but I do understand that they are going forward with it now at good speed, and in such a way as will produce in great quantities the airships that we regard as absolutely necessary in the fighting yonder in France.

Mr. GALLINGER. As they have used $640,000,000—and I understand that that has been exhausted, and that they have a deficit of $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 at the present time—it seems to me they ought to have used up more spruce than they have up to this moment. I do not know what they are doing, but we are not getting any airships; that is certain.

Mr. KIRBY. I was only speaking of what is regarded as the necessity for the introduction of this bill asking for this additional power. I do not think there is any necessity for putting in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. He refers to an existing agency. It seems to be apparent from the language of the bill that an existing agency is referred to, but no agency except one designated by the President can exercise this power.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the chairman of the committee, contended that the language might mean just exactly that.

Mr. KIRBY. That it might mean that?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; that it might mean that the President could create an entirely new agency.

Mr. KIRBY. Well, it is possible that that construction might be adopted; but what is the difference? If the necessity exists, and only an agency designated by the President for the purpose can put into operation the provisions of the bill, and he can only operate in accordance with the provisions of the bill, that will protect everybody amply; so what difference does it make whether the agency is now in existence or whether it shall be created hereafter?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell the Senator what difference it makes. We have a thousand useless commissions already and I do not want to create another one. I should like to abolish a few of those we already have.

Mr. KIRBY. I might agree with the Senator on some of that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then, what is the need of creating a new one?

Mr. KIRBY. But here is the proposition: This bill is introduced to meet an emergency, and the people who are engaged in this operation and construction now are evidently the people who will be designated to take care of it and to go on with the operation and the construction. Certainly they would not go and hunt up somebody else to do it, under the conditions existing.

As to the objection raised by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], about its interfering with pulp production, I do not think there is a possibility of that being done under this bill, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has already said. If they have logs on hand in a pulp mill that might be used and that could be commandeered under this bill for use by the Government, they certainly would not go and take them from a mill where it could not be manufactured into lumber unless it was reasonably in the vicinity of another place where it could be manufactured, and under the provisions of the bill they would be bound anyway to leave all the logs at that mill that could be reasonably required for its continued operation, whether it was a pulp mill or a lumber mill, under any fair construction of this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KIRBY. I do.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] a moment ago stated, as I understood his observation, that there was inefficiency in the Aircraft Board, which brought about the necessity of some legislation, if any legislation of this character was required. I want to ask the Senator if, in his investigations—and I do not want him to disclose anything that would not be proper—there was inefficiency exhibited in the Aircraft Board, and if that inefficiency was found upon the part of civilian members, such as Mr. Coffin, or was found upon the part of the officers?

I want to say to the Senator that my experience in connection with some of these civilians who are offering their services to the Government has somewhat shaken my confidence in the business ability of civilians and increased my confidence in the business ability of officers of the Army.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not want to be in the attitude of rendering judgment about whether a particular man is efficient or inefficient, when I do not know the conditions surrounding the man, or the operations in which he has been engaged. I do not know whether a civilian or an officer might have better business ability. Whether a man has sense or not does not depend on whether he is a civilian or an officer in the Army. It never has been properly determined in that way, and it can not be determined in that way now.

It may be that some of these officers in the Army have more sense than the civilian business men. It may be that they are better qualified to do some of these things; but because a man wears the uniform of the Government of the United States it does not follow that he is a better business man than somebody else on the outside who has devoted his whole time to business and the pursuit of it.

I do not know whether there has been much inefficiency or not. I do not believe there is, in a broad and liberal way of discussing it. But if there has been inefficiency, if it has delayed the construction of the aircraft, we need the aircraft now, and this will conduce to their speedy construction. This remedies the condition and completes it so far as the Government is concerned.

I hope this bill will be passed without any further discussion. I have been surprised that there was so much. I tried for half an hour to stay out of it, but was unable to do so because of the apparent misunderstanding by some Senators of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to suggest an amendment after the word "operations," at the end of line 19, page 4.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would it not be better if the Senator would wait until we get to that part of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. FLETCHER. We have been talking about the amendment of the Senator from Georgia so far.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not think the reasons advanced for supporting the bill have been sufficient. They are not the real ones. I do not think any mill owner in the United States has refused to operate his mill in accordance with the demands of the Government as fully as it was possible for him to do it. I have had some correspondence in reference to this measure, and I have heard from no source that there was any disposition on the part of any bona fide lumberman or mill owner to do otherwise than act in harmony with the wishes of the Government.

That there has been inefficiency in the conduct of the Government's end of the lumber business required for airplane production there is not the slightest doubt. The evidence has been disclosed before the Military Affairs Committee, and it is overwhelming. It is known to every man who has investigated the subject. I think it is a fact, however, that in the region of the United States where spruce is grown a great deal of timber is owned either by aliens, by estates in court, or by people whose residences are not known. It is that particular timber that the Government is seeking to obtain—that is, if it is acting in good faith with this measure.

In my judgment it is a mistake to impute anything but a willingness to cooperate with the Government to the persons owning and operating the mills; but this timber which is sought to be obtained, the ownership of which is not known, could be reached by some other measure than one of this kind. I do not care to oppose the bill, however, although I dislike very much to have the excuse offered that there is some difficulty with the mills as the cause of our lack of production of airplanes. The lumbermen are not causing the delay in aircraft production, if there is delay. Sufficient spruce is and has been available for the construction of many planes. We have distressingly few.

I do not wish to criticize the Aircraft Production Board. This probably is not the time or the place to do it, and I am not prepared to do it, but I do know that the reasons given here this morning are not the real cause of the failure to produce aircraft. It is this camouflage, this misrepresentation of facts, to which I object. If, instead of creating artificial scapegoats, more airships were created from the material at hand I would be better satisfied. We all want to build airplanes. We all want to pass any kind of a law necessary to speed up production, but that speeding up can not be obtained by charging the timber and mill owners, who are operating as the Government wants them to operate, with obstructing Government operations. This bill, like many others of recent birth, is unnecessary for effective war preparation. I wish the administration would use effectively the power which it already has before it asks for more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it is probable that this bill could be disposed of in a short time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to have that done, especially as that is the view of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not ask it, because I shall be compelled to object to his request. There are Senators who have told me they desire to speak on the bill to-morrow morning, and if the Senator from Oregon will bring it up at that time I have no doubt it will be passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the request is going to meet with objection, of course I will yield. I give notice that I shall undertake to bring the bill up again for consideration at the close of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he does not think there ought to be a time given to take up the calendar and consider the 15 or 18 military bills on it relating to war measures and consider them all?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so. I think some of them are very, very important.

Mr. WARREN. Indeed they are important.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And the department requests us to have them disposed of. I shall ask in due course in the next day or two that those bills shall be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will do so, because on the subject of the draft and other matters there ought to be legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire at this time to submit an amendment to Senate bill 3426, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] desires to address himself to this motion. I do not just know where the Senator is. He is temporarily out of the Chamber.

Mr. HARDWICK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to suspend the rules.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I know there is a Senator who desires to discuss this matter further. I do not desire to do it myself, but the Senator has been sent for. As I have not anything to say myself I can only call attention to the fact that there is a Senator who desires to discuss the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BORAH. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, this bill has been discussed at some length before on both sides of the proposition, but it seems to me it is a question which involves the gravest consequences and it ought to be considered with due deliberation.

We ought to do, Mr. President, whatever is best calculated to stimulate the production of wheat in the situation in which we find ourselves now. If it be true that we can stimulate the production of wheat best by not increasing the minimum price guaranteed by law, then we ought not to increase that minimum price.

The view has been urged in some quarters that the effect of increasing the minimum price would be simply and solely to cause the farmer to hold the wheat he has already made and to hoard it or to cause it to be hoarded by some one, and for that reason it is unsafe and unwise to adopt the plan suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Personally I have been inclined to the other view. With no such governmental control exercised over the price of other grains—barley, corn, and rye—and with a rapid rising price of those grains the farmer has been tempted to plant them. He would rather raise these grains at $3 than wheat at $2.20, or even at $2.50. So it has appeared to me that the wise thing to do is to follow the plan suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma and increase the minimum we are willing to guarantee the farmer. For that reason I have been prepared, although I live in a wheat-consuming rather than a wheat-producing State, to vote for a larger guaranty to the farmer with respect to this particular matter.

It seems to me, however, that the principal value of the lesson that we are learning from this whole thing is how utterly useless it is to attempt to regulate such matters by statute law at all. I think we would really be a great deal better off if we had never undertaken it in the first instance. Still we are confronted by a situation and not by a theory, and it is necessary to do whatever we think is best for the country as a whole and for the world as a whole when it comes to the disposition of this matter.

Believing, as I do, that it is absolutely for the best interests of the world, with great fields in other continents laid in ruins almost by the war, to stimulate production in this country, operating under the system that we are now operating under, I am willing to take rather extreme measures in order to stimulate that production and to increase the world's bread supply.

I do not think the Senate in voting on this question ought to look at it from a local standpoint, certainly not from the standpoint of a State, certainly not from the standpoint even of this country, but we ought to consider the world condition and the world situation; and when we consider the world condition and the world situation I believe we will be forced to the conclusion that any possible way of stimulating and increasing production is an absolute necessity at this juncture if the people of the world are to be fed and if this war is to be fought at all and if it is to be maintained at all.

Personally I feel very great reluctance to support a proposition to increase the price of bread to the consumer, but we had better furnish the consumer with bread even at a little higher price than to have the consumer unable to buy bread at any price, as he was recently unable to buy coal at any price on account of a proposition just about like this, throwing another monkey wrench into the machinery.

So, while I would rather not increase the price or raise the guaranty, yet if Senators believe, as I believe, that production will not be great enough and can not be stimulated enough without that being done, I can see no other plan or method except to support the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

I assume that before the vote is taken not only the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], but the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], will address the Senate at length in support of that proposition and in advocacy of the motion presented by the Senator from Oklahoma. I shall expect those Senators who have served on the committee and who have had the opportunity of hearing the testimony that was given and of weighing the contentions that were made and of knowing the facts accurately as relating to this situation to give to the Senate and to the country valuable information upon which to base an opinion with respect to this matter, and that they will be able to give to the Senate itself and to the Members of the Senate valuable information upon which we can base our votes with respect to the matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from New York [Mr CALDER], the Senator from California [Mr JOHNSON], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, whenever a motion has been made to suspend the rules of the Senate, as long as I have been in the Senate I have voted against it. I have given my reasons for that course in the past, and I am not going to take the time of the Senate to repeat them, but simply to say that I never expect to vote to suspend the rules of the Senate unless there is a national crisis involved.

In this case I do not believe that to be the case, and therefore I shall vote against suspending the rule. I do not know that it is necessary for me to go into the question of the price of wheat at this time. It has been discussed thoroughly. I know the critical condition existing in our country, and I know that something must be done to get the farmers to raise wheat, in order not only to feed the American people but to feed our allies, and it seems to me to accomplish this it ought to be done by direct legislation. If it comes up in that way I am going to support the increase, but, Mr. President, I do not feel justified in voting for a suspension of the rule.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to discuss upon its merits the question, Should the law be so amended that the price of the farmer's wheat can not be forced by the Food Administration to a point below $2.50 per bushel? I shall only speak on one point and very briefly. I do not think that we sufficiently appreciate the fact that the basis of money values has in recent months tactically changed. This is the great force back of advancing prices that few of us have fully comprehended. I think the sooner we do appreciate the truth that money has depreciated in value to an enormous extent and that business must be done upon a different money-value basis the better it will be for the country.

Mr. President, the production of gold for many years prior to 1873 was only about one-fifth what the production has been for the last 10 or 12 years. That is one of the causes for the increase in the volume of money. Since the war began the money of the world has been inflated by paper issues, so that in some of the countries of the world it is nearly nine times what it was prior to the beginning of the war. In our own country there has been an enormous inflation of gold growing out of the fact that there has been a favorable balance of trade since the European war began.

In addition to that there has been an increased coinage of silver, and in addition to that there has been a very large increase in bank currency arising from the issues of the Federal reserve banks.

Beyond all this there has been a vast multiplication of bank deposits. Everyone who has given the question study knows that an increase of bank deposits means a multiplication of what I intend to call, for the sake of a descriptive term, check currency.

There has also been an increased activity in the movement of bank deposits and the movement of money, and now on top of all that comes an enormous issue of bonds; and the issuance of bonds, as everyone who has studied the question knows, is in itself, if not actual inflation, in the nature of inflation.

So I do not think that I am at all outside the fact when I say that in my opinion the purchasing value of a dollar has depreciated in the last three years 50 per cent, and, I am inclined to think, even more than 50 per cent.

I have refrained from putting into the few remarks I have made long lists of figures that I might give. At some other time I may claim the attention of the Senate in order to state the figures in detail. If I am even approximately correct in the conclusion I have just announced, then we may as well get ready to acknowledge the fact that money has gone down. It follows that a price expressed in dollars may seem large when, in fact, the purchasing value of a dollar has so decreased that the price is not as great as it was a few years ago.

I offer that observation, and it will be found that it is true wherever we apply it to concrete facts. When we undertook to fix the price of wheat a year ago—that is, a minimum price—there were many Senators on the floor who were appalled at the proposition of $2 wheat; but $2 wheat it was at once discovered was too low, even the Garfield Commission found that it was too low. The price mentioned was for the high grades of wheat, and at their terminal markets the farmer did not realize anything like $2.20. It may be seriously questioned whether the price paid the farmer would buy as much as the price he received some years ago.

I call the Senate's attention to the fact that in the first address which he delivered to the present session of Congress the President expressly stated that the farmer had been unjustly treated. He could have had reference to nothing except wheat, because up to that time wheat was the only thing the farmer raised that had been regulated, and yet the President told us that the farmer had just cause for complaint. I do not undertake to quote his exact language, but that is, in substance, the language. I, however, want to put my appeal to the Senate in this matter upon a higher ground than even the interest of the farmers. I put it upon the ground that Mr. Hoover and every man who is concerned or interested in the wheat question has certified to us over and over again that wheat is absolutely necessary in order to win the war.

We have been told not once but hundreds of times by those occupying positions of high authority that our allies can not be fed upon corn; that they can not be fed upon rye; that they can not be fed upon barley; but that they must have wheat. Hence the American people are asked to eat great quantities of the coarser cereals in order that we may send large amounts of wheat to Europe.

Moreover, we have recently been told that there is an actual shortage of wheat for the supply of the allies and the supply of ourselves. Mr. President, we are at the spring wheat-planting time. At the prices as they existed a few days ago a farmer can make out of planting his 100 acres of land to corn approximately 50 per cent more than he can possibly make by planting it to wheat, understanding that the crops shall run on the average as they have for 50 years. He can make more money in planting his 100 acres to oats, and next year very much more money putting the land to clover or alfalfa or to tiomthy hay, than he can to planting wheat.

Under these circumstances, what is the wise thing for the Congress to do? We want more wheat. If we want more wheat, we ought not to allow a condition to exist which penalize the farmer upon every acre he sows to wheat, which makes it the most unprofitable crop he can possibly plant, which advises him in advance that when he plants wheat he is planting the crop which will bring him the least possible return. I appeal to Senators, therefore, whether this very modest and slight increase in the price of wheat is not in the interest of the whole country; is not in the interest of the consumer as well as the interest of the producer?

I need not say that I have strenuously advocated a policy of no price fixing, except to reach profiteering or gambling; but that advocacy has been overruled and we have entered upon the policy of price fixing. It is absolutely necessary, if we are to have a wheat crop that will come to the volume necessary to supply ourselves and the world, that the farmers shall be induced to plant as much wheat as can possiby be grown. If that is done, we shall have cheaper flour in the fall and we shall be out of danger of a serious bread shortage. But if we are short of wheat, prices will go up, for there never was a shortage of grain yet that did not produce very high prices to the consumer.

I hope that the proposition to suspend the rules will be adopted, so that we may be permitted to pass the amendment. Let us encourage the farmers by granting them this slight increase in the price of wheat.

That is all I desire to say, and I thank the Senate for its courteous attention.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] had read into the RECORD a quotation from Mr. Cotton, who is at the head of the meat division of the Food Administration, in which Mr. Cotton declared that the price of corn was fictitious and that he hoped the price would be reduced. It is fair to assume that, in giving expression to that view, he reflected the view of the Food Administration. The price of corn has been reduced within the last few days; I believe there has been a decline of something like 30 cents a bushel in its price. As shedding some light upon that decline I ask to have read into the RECORD a telegram from the Dazey-Moore Grain Co., of Fort Worth, Tex. If the statements contained in this telegram be true, the suspicion of duplicity can hardly be avoided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FORT WORTH, TEX., March 18, 1918.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.:

Ten days ago there was an urgent demand for corn; producers and dealers were told by the Food Administration that it was far behind its program of supplying Europe, and they were urged to strain every nerve to ship as much corn as possible during the next 30 days. The railroad administration was criticized for failure to supply cars, and in every way the impression was created that every bushel of corn that could be shipped before spring farm work commenced would be urgently needed. Producers and shippers of grain have responded to the appeals that were made to them. They have held back their oats and other grains and have given preference to shipping corn, never suspecting for a moment that there would be any interference with the demand for a commodity in such abundant supply as corn, of which the largest crop ever produced was raised during the crop year of 1917. It is therefore difficult to imagine the feeling of producers and shippers when all of a sudden and without warning the export demand for corn came to a sudden stop, and they are forced to sacrifice grain for which they expected to find an urgent demand. Foreign buying having been placed entirely in the hands of one buyer, the Wheat Export Co., an organization supposed to be composed of the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Italy, this organization was not naturally suspected of market manipulating. We to-day, however, are in receipt of a telegram from the Wheat Export Co. stating it to be a matter of regret that they can not buy more corn, assigning as a reason that they are under strict instructions from the Food Administration not to do so. There are several questions presented by this situation, but the outstanding one and the question that deserves immediate and serious consideration is the good faith of the Food Administration in appealing for the largest possible movement of corn and then withdrawing the main support of the market when the heavy movement is at its height. Another question relates to the wisdom of intrusting to one man as much power as is used by the Food Administration and still another—and one of very great magnitude—is whether he has not acted in bad faith with Congress by exercising far greater powers than were conferred upon him. So far as we are personally concerned the time has come when we can not conduct our business with any degree of certainty. We never know what a day will bring forth. The immutable law of supply and demand has been suspended, competition between foreign buyers has been destroyed. Concentration and monopoly have superseded the open competitive market and producers and distributers are now at the mercy of one man, and that man is the man selected by a foreign Government to evolve a system for holding in check the prices of the surplus food produced in the United States. Please furnish copies to Senator GORE and Senator REED.

DAZEY-MOORE GRAIN CO.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the only point I care to make on this telegram is this: Mr. Cotton was before the Committee on Agriculture this morning. He reiterated the declaration that the price of corn was fictitious; he reiterated the hope that the price of corn would decline. Now, whether it be a concerted plan or not, evidently the Food Administration share Mr. Cotton's views, and this telegram indicates that they have been able to find ways and means to realize the hope expressed by Mr. Cotton.

The motives for that I am, of course, unable to divine. It may be that they desire to break the price of corn on the eve of the spring wheat sowing, with the hope that the relative profits will be shifted and the farmers who had intended to plant corn on the basis of the prevailing high prices will now shift to wheat, with the hope that possibly they might squeeze as much out of wheat as out of corn. Further than that I have no observation to make.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in connection with the telegram the Senator from Oklahoma has just presented, I desire to say that when I heard that the price of corn was suddenly breaking I wired one of the best-informed grain men in the West asking the cause. I received a reply in which he stated that at this time he could not tell the cause further than that all the orders for corn which had been placed in that market from the East had suddenly been canceled and that it looked like a concert of action for the purpose of breaking the market. That is not his exact language, but that is the inference.

I am very sorry if the thing which seems to be indicated is true, and I say to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that it is undoubtedly the duty of that committee at once to go to the bottom of this matter.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I asked Mr. Cotton this morning to furnish me the names of those who would be in a situation to tell the truth and the whole truth about this transaction.

Mr. REED. Let me ask, Who is Mr. Cotton?

Mr. GORE. Mr. Cotton is at the head of the meat division of the Food Administration.

Mr. REED. What was his business before he took that place, if the Senator knows?

Mr. GORE. By profession he is an attorney.

Mr. REED. Who was he attorney for, especially?

Mr. GORE. He was a member of the firm of Spooner & Cotton, Mr. Spooner formerly being a distinguished Member of this body, and he had a considerable clientele, as I understand, in New York City. He was examined upon that point this morning at some length, and I may say that he said that he had no experience in the production of live stock, which was the particular matter under consideration; and in connection with that the corn situation was brought out.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it will be observed that the signer of that telegram requested me to send copies of it to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This I did in compliance with the request of my constituent. The Senator from Oklahoma had the telegram published in the RECORD on his own responsibility. So far as I am concerned, I am not in sympathy with any charge of bad faith against Mr. Hoover or the Food Administration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Texas has any knowledge as to the facts stated in this telegram?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not have.

Mr. GORE. Does the Senator know the gentleman who signed the telegram?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I know a member of the firm. I do not know all the members of the firm.

Mr. GORE. Does the Senator regard them as a responsible firm?

Mr. SHEPPARD. So far as I know, they are a responsible firm.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say on this subject, except that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has for the last five weeks held hearings for the purpose of ascertaining if there is any untruth in the statement that production is being interfered with on account both of the price fixed and the regulations promulgated by the Food Administration. As one of the members of that committee, I feel that I have done my duty. I have called to the attention of the Senate as best I could the facts as they have been presented to the committee. They were not conclusions of my own, but were the facts presented by witnesses from various parts of the United States.

It is true, Mr. President, that there is great danger of production being decreased, due in part to the price, but more so to the drastic orders being issued and by regulations which, while not directly fixing prices, by indirection do so, and constitute the real cause of the reduced price. That applies, of course, to cattle and to hogs. I do not say that it applies so much to grain. We know, however, that wheat brings a higher price in the Argentine Republic to-day than it does in the United States.

I do not think that the statement of Mr. Cotton should stand unchallenged when he states that the price of corn to-day is a fictitious price. Of course, we have placed a minimum, which has become the maximum price of wheat. It has operated absolutely as a maximum, and it can not be anything but a maximum, when it is admitted both by Mr. Cotton and by Mr. Durand, who have both testified before our committee, that the Government of the United States and the allies have pooled their interests and have but one purchasing agency. I think any Senator will see that, if this system is continued and if the Food Administration shall proceed in that way, they will cripple the industries and decrease not only the production of wheat but they will discourage the production of other cereals absolutely necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. They will succeed also in decreasing the meat supply; and, of course, nothing of that kind should be done.

Mr. President, there are a great many facts which were presented to the Committee on Agriculture which we can not take the time of the Senate to explain now, but I believe that in the main those who have spoken upon this subject have fairly presented the conditions as they exist.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words with relation to the motion to suspend the rules proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma for the purpose of adopting an amendment to fix the minimum price of wheat at $2.50 per bushel.

The papers of last Monday tell us that the London Telegraph of the 15th instant contained a leading editorial which states that there is more necessity for our food than there is for our soldiers in Europe. It was said to be an elaborate editorial, going into details and showing the deplorable condition of shipping and the great necessity for our wheat.

It seems to me that the fact that the farmer has been feeding wheat to his stock, when it is not the usual food for them, and selling his corn, barley, and rye, is the best evidence that it is lower in price and less profitable to raise than the other cereal grains which he ordinarily produces. Human nature being the same the world over, the farmer is going to plant that crop which will yield him the most money, and will not plant that which brings him less money. Wheat averages 14.7 bushels per acres; price now, $2.20; yields per acre $32.34. Corn averages 26.1 bushels per acre; price now, $1.85; yields per acre $48.29. Rye averages 16.1 bushels per acre; price now, $2.99; yields per acre $48.14. Barley averages 24.2 bushels per acre; price now $2.25; yields per acre $54.45. Oats averages 31.2 bushels per acre; price now, 98 cents; yields per acre $30.58. The condition to which I have referred demonstrates conclusively to me that wheat is not commanding the price to which it would be entitled under the principle of supply and demand. He will therefore plant those cereals which will bring the best prices. The public will not be benefited because they will be compelled to buy the high-priced substitutes.

I believe that it is necessary to have wheat raised in large quantities in order to win this war. I think all concede that it is necessary in order to prevent starvation almost in many sections of Europe that the wheat crop should be as large as possible. That being the case, why is it that we will not remove the limit that has been placed upon the price of wheat? Why is it that we will not allow it to command that price which the application of the law of supply and demand would entitle it? In the consideration of the food-control bill last summer all conceded that only a minimum price was fixed, which would stimulate the production of wheat.

There is no danger of the farmers making a corner on wheat; the farmers never have tried to do that; every one of the corners that have been manipulated successfully in the United States has been accomplished by speculators. The object that was intended to be accomplished by the licensing of elevators and of mills was not to curb the price of wheat to the farmer, but it was for the purpose of preventing the speculation in which brokers and others indulge in endeavoring to increase abnormally the price of this staple product.

It is better for even the consumer to have wheat at a higher price than it is not to have wheat at all. Senators have said that some States have not planted up to this time within 25 per cent of the wheat they planted last year; and yet the demand is greater and is increasing, and the necessity for the wheat is growing greater all the time. It is said in my State that wheat will be absolutely out of the market after the 1st day of May. Now, is it possible that we are not going to encourage the production of that thing so absolutely necessary to the winning of the war?

A minimum price for wheat will encourage its production, but a maximum price for it will prove a failure.

Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the vote upon this measure; but it seems to me that this proposed amendment is nothing but fair and right to the farmer, and that we ought to suspend the rules and adopt the same.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Colorado have suggested one observation that I wish to make. I need not say to the Senate that I do not believe in any scheme of price fixing. In my judgment such an effort is foreordained to fail. Perhaps the oldest blunder known to the sons of men is the attempt at price fixing. The history of the effort is one dreary tale of uniform and unvarying failure, of disappointment, and ofttimes of disaster.

Whenever the attempt is made to regulate prices, the effort must inevitably work more or less mischief. I have offered the pending amendment in order to bring about a situation where we will work less rather than more mischief. I seek to minimize the mischief which must come; I seek to keep the mischief down to the irreducible minimum. That is the object of the proposed amendment.

We have been told on every hand that food is the key to the situation and that wheat is the pivotal food grain. Mr. Hoover assured us that there was a psychology about a wheaten loaf that was indispensable. There is no sufficient substitute for wheat; we have been appealed to to produce wheat in abundance on the assurance that wheat might win the war.

There is but one excuse or plea which renders the attempt at price fixing even rational. If there be some article like wheat which is of preeminent and of indispensable necessity, then fix a price upon that one article higher than the law of supply and demand would award. That will stimulate its production, and that will do all that human foresight can do to meet a crisis and to avert the possibility of disaster. Even that attempt will be attended with more or less mischief, because it throws other relations out of their proper proportion; but we ought like men to make up our minds to take those consequences whenever the necessity is overpowering.

Mr. President, what have we done? We have fixed a price on wheat. We have fixed a price on wheat, which may be needed to win this war, at a lower point than the law of supply and demand would award. Now, you can not encourage production by reducing prices. You can increase and stimulate production by increasing prices, but the reduction of prices must inevitably discourage production. Ought we to discourage the production of a grain which may be indispensable to our success in this war and to the guaranty of our destiny?

Mr. President, the fixing of a price on an article of indispensable necessity at a lower point than the law of supply and demand would award, with the hope of stimulating its production, is a transaction which, as a perfected specimen of human folly, has absolutely no competitor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). The question is, Shall the Senate suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI in order that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] may present in order the amendment proposed by him? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness in his family, but that if present he would vote for this motion and also for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is detained from the Chamber by reason of sickness, and I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS. I find that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], with whom I have a general pair, is absent. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I do not know how that Senator would vote on this question, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who, I understand, would vote as I shall vote, if present. I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on public business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to suspend the rules, the yeas are 48, the nays are 22. More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rule is suspended. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays. Let us go on record.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment and differences in price for the several standard grades at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced, adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent as the basis. Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring, or its equivalent, at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced.

"This guaranty shall not be dependent upon the action of the President under the first part of this section, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May 1, 1919. When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely material to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States. For the purpose of making any guaranteed price effective under this section, or whenever he deems it essential in order to protect the Government of the United States against material enhancement of its liabilities arising out of any guaranty under this section, the President is authorized also, in his discretion, to purchase any wheat for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed under this section, and to hold, transport, or store it, or to sell, dispose of, and deliver the same to any citizen of the United States or to any Government engaged in war with any country with which the Government of the United States is or may be at war, or to use the same as supplies for any department or agency of the Government of the United States. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the sale or disposal of wheat under this section may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this section. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the amendment as read at the desk is long, is involved, and sounds very formidable, but I will say for the information of the Senate that it is a literal transcript of section 14 of the food-control act passed in August last, with only four changes.

One of the changes substitutes $2.50 for $2.

Another substitutes No. 2 northern for No. 1 northern.

Another change substitutes the local elevator or local railway market for the principal interior primary markets.

Another change is a proviso for settling the question which arose some weeks ago as to whether the guaranteed price of $2 per bushel was an absolute and a maximum price or was only a minimum price, subject to increase by the President. It makes it clear that that price was prescribed by Congress as a minimum, and that it was subject to change by the President. I may add that it has since been changed by the President, being raised to $2.20.

Those are the only changes proposed by this amendment to section 14 of the food-control act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, can the Secretary read that portion of the amendment which provides for the last suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Senator from Oklahoma made four changes from the original text. I understand the first, second, and third changes to which he referred, but I did not gather the fourth change to which he referred.

Mr. GORE. I do not know that the changes appear in the amendment in the order that I mentioned. The last one I mentioned was this:

The act passed last summer carried a guaranty of $2 a bushel for wheat. It was contended by some that that was not a minimum, and was not intended by Congress to be a minimum, but that, as a matter of fact, it was an absolute price—a maximum as well as a minimum price—and was not subject to change by the President. In order to make that point perfectly clear I inserted a proviso which removed the doubt upon the subject. I may say that that proviso is now unnecessary, because the President has, as a matter of fact, increased the price. I took occasion to get an interpretation of it the best way I could.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then it is that proviso that I wish to hear read. The Senator from Oklahoma was considering at one time a provision that looked toward a test in the courts.

Mr. GORE. That has been eliminated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is nothing of that sort in this amendment?

Mr. GORE. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not affect the status of past sales in any way?

Mr. GORE. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was to guard against that thought on the part of the Senator from Oklahoma, to which I was opposed, that I desired to hear it.

Mr. GORE. This has no relation whatever to that. It is a different amendment.

The SECRETARY. The amendment, on page 3, line 3, reads as follows:

The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring, or its equivalent, at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced.

This guaranty shall not be dependent upon the action of the President under the first part of this section, but is hereby made absolute, and shall be binding until May 1, 1919.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Secretary has not read the portion I desired to hear read; but I understand now what it is, and I do not press further my inquiry to have any more read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], on which the yeas and nays have been requested and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALDER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is detained by sickness, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made a few minutes ago, I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of sickness in his family. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made by me upon the previous roll call with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on public business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], with whom I have a general pair, is out of the Chamber. I therefore withdraw my vote.

I desire also to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 18, as follows:

So Mr. GORE'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I gave notice on the 18th of March that I would move to suspend the rule for the purpose of considering an amendment to what is termed the Borland amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill. I should like to have that considered at this time. I ask that the notice be read by the Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, the Borland amendment has already been approved in Committee of the Whole, and some Senator reserved the right to offer a motion to strike it out when the bill reaches the Senate. Would it not be the proper time to vote upon suspending the rule for this purpose when the bill gets into the Senate, rather than while it is in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not hear what the Senator from Utah said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair might as well make a ruling now so as to settle the question.

There is not any Borland amendment here, but there is a certain portion of the text of the bill which has been denominated in the Senate as the Borland amendment. The state of the record is that a motion was made to strike that language from the bill. Pending the motion to strike out, certain amendments were presented and considered and disposed of; two were agreed to and one went out on a point of order. Then subsequently the vote was taken on the motion to strike it out, and it was lost.

The Chair thinks this is the rule, that that ends the matter so far as the consideration by the Senate in Committee of the Whole is concerned; that it had to be amended before the vote was taken upon the question to strike it out; and that after the question to strike out had been once disposed of in Committee of the Whole, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has exhausted all of its parliamentary right. However, when the bill comes into the Senate that does not prevent the proposal to set aside the rule or a motion to strike out. What the Chair desires to make clear is that it is the opinion of the Chair that so far as this particular language is concerned, it is settled in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand there is no doubt about the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] gave notice that he would ask for a separate vote upon the Borland amendment in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt in the mind of the Chair that in the Senate a Senator can move to strike it out; he can move to set aside the rule for the purpose of offering an amendment to it, or do what the Senate may please in the matter; but as far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, it is ended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question because I understand the Chair's ruling not to affect a separate vote upon the proposition in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume the Chair rules that without a motion to amend the rule an amendment can be offered to the text in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, certainly. In other words, all the rights are preserved in the Senate, but the rights are gone in Committee of the Whole, as the Chair believes the law to be.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is absolutely right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do I understand the Chair holds, then, that it is not in order until the bill is in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And then it is in order for the purpose of setting aside the rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; every right is preserved in the Senate that obtained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like at this juncture, if in order, to offer an amendment to the bill, on page 15, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 9, insert, after the words "Provided further," the following words:

That of the sum thus appropriated $25,000 may be used for the maintenance of the United States Poultry Feeding and Breeding Experiment Station in the Salt River Valley, Arizona: And provided further.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, just a word in explanation of the amendment.

There is appropriated "for all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry, for experiments in animal feeding and breeding," and so forth, $308,680. There is also under one of the provisos of this appropriation $61,040 appropriated for experiments in poultry feeding and breeding. Inasmuch as the Government has a poultry farm in what is conceded to be the very ideal sort of land needed for the purpose, and in order to carry out that desire on the part of the Government, I have asked for this appropriation. It is immaterial to me whether it is subtracted from the $61,040 to be used for experiments in poultry feeding or breeding or whether it comes in as a part of the original appropriation.

I will only say that great difficulty has been found in experimenting in the arid country in the raising of poultry with success with the intense heat of the summer months. This is an experiment to meet diseases peculiar to poultry in that condition. Some have made great success where they have gotten a little higher altitude, but the great feeding ground is in an absolute desert country. It is in order to demonstrate that it can be done that this amendment is proposed. I think when we are encouraging the production of wheat by adding 30 cents a bushel to the price guaranteed, we might also see if we can not do something toward the industrial hen, that is a great producer of nutritious food.

Mr. BORAH. Is this adding an additional sum?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No.

Mr. BORAH. It is simply subtracting from the sum already appropriated and designating a certain place where it is to be expended.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is a lump sum of $308,680 appropriated for three or four specified purposes. An exception is made in the bill that $61,040 may be used for experiments in poultry feeding and breeding. I am only asking that in these experiments this amount shall be given to this particular farm that the Government now has.

Mr. BORAH. The $25,000?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I get it exactly. Out of this $61,040 the Senator desires to have $25,000 set aside for this particular poultry farm?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir. I notice that Fremont County, Idaho, gets $8,000 for the equipment of a sheep experiment station, and as sheep are not one-fifth of the value of the hen product we could multiply it by the amount of the Idaho appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is unduly sensitive about the Arizona henroost. I was not criticizing it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; on the contrary, I am not fearful about my hennery, as long as my friend's constituents stay out of my part of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. I simply wished to know whether it is an additional sum.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I said no; it is not.

Mr. THOMAS. May I interrupt the Senator. I am very glad to know that, because if it were an extra amount it would certainly pass the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am inclined to think so too, but with my own care for public funds I am not asking to go beyond the general appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had forgotten about this Government appropriation that had been made for investigating the poultry business. Will the Senator state what results have come from it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I can not state what results have come from it any more than I can from any other specific appropriation in all the appropriation bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the Government trying to do with the hens in Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I imagine the Government is trying to have the hens lay eggs, and the eggs hatch chickens, and the chickens are sold when people can not get beef.

Mr. GALLINGER. But why in Arizona? Why not in New Hampshire, for instance, or any other State?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Probably New Hampshire ought to have such a station, but I have heard that the conditions there are such that the main question in New Hampshire would be the feeding of the hens. We have no trouble about that in Arizona. It is the diseases we are fighting.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are those diseases peculiar to Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think they are. That is my information.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is something of an argument indeed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the only ground I put it on.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was that the ground upon which the original appropriation was made?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I presume there was no other reason to make it except that there was a condition there that they wanted to investigate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I have been wanting to find out.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am unable to tell the Senator exactly why the Government started it. I can only say it has started it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If there was a disease in Arizona affecting the poultry that did not exist elsewhere, I can see very clearly that there was reason for the appropriation, and I have been seeking information on that point.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am obliged to the Senator. He displays his usual liberality in these matters touching our part of the country. I can assure the Senator that from my own observation I have seen great numbers of poultry and have noted the effort to raise them at certain times in the intense heat of summer. They lose on the ranches hundreds and hundreds of them, and I imagine, without speaking by the card, that that is the condition that is being attended to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would repeat my question if the Senator had not told me he had not any information as to what result can come from the use of this money.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think it is an entirely new proposition. I do not know that such an item was ever in any other appropriation bill, but here is a lump sum appropriated and $61,040 of it may be used in the investigation of these maladies; and knowing the condition in that part of the country and having letters from a number of people in the community claiming they have met the difficulties of which I am speaking, I have asked that this appropriation be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, that I may understand the ruling of the Chair with regard to the so-called Borland provision. I offered an amendment, which is lying on the table, to that provision by way of limitation. Do I understand the Chair to hold that that is not in order until we reach the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not until we reach the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. I give notice that it will be brought up in the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry. I have not been able to find the Senator that I thought could give me the information privately. The bill contains no provision for the increase of salaries that, I think, it is conceded must be made to all the employees. It was made last year on all the appropriation bills. I did not offer an amendment in the committee and, I think, the committee did not consider it, because they had an understanding that there was a general bill coming over from the other House. I have been told to-day that the Post Office appropriation bill, which has been ordered reported, contains a provision confined to post-office employees.

Mr. WARREN. Since that time the legislative bill has passed the House with a provision covering all.

Mr. NORRIS. It covers all? That is all I wanted to know. If that is true, I have no disposition to offer such an amendment; but we ought not to put this bill in a parliamentary position where that could not be done for the Agricultural Department as well as the other departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Except those that have been reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What amendments have been reserved?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood other Senators had reserved some amendments. I have not reserved any myself.

Mr. GORE. I desire to have a separate vote on the committee amendment striking out the appropriation for the distribution of valuable seeds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on concurring in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole that are not reserved. They are concurred in without objection. The Senator from Oklahoma asks for a separate vote on concurring in the amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, striking out the provision "for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," disagreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on striking out the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, beginning on line 20, page 27.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May we have a statement by the Chair as to what we are voting on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate committee reported an amendment striking out the clause of the bill known as the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds embracing two pages and a half. The provision is well known to all Senators. That was disagreed to in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Oklahoma is now asking for a separate vote as to whether the clause shall be stricken out or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to occupy just a moment of the Senate's time. In the debate, when the bill was in Committee of the Whole, I suggested I had been sending seeds which were given to me by the Agricultural Department under the law to the schools largely in my State. I have probably 20 letters in my committee room from children thanking me for sending the seeds and saying that they were being used, that they had results from them last year, and asking me to send them more this year, which I have done.

I believe if the seeds were sent to the schools of every State in the Union we would have results that would be gratifying to everybody and fully justify this small expenditure, if it needed justification. I do not think it needs justification. It is a small appropriation at best. The results, so far as my observations have gone, satisfy me that no better expenditure of a small amount of money can be made than to continue the practice we have followed for so many years.

I received a letter the other day from Bryan, Ohio, which I am going to ask to have read, because it touches upon this question in a very practical way, and with the reading of the letter, if I may be permitted to ask the Secretary to read it, I shall have nothing further to say on the subject, except that I shall continue to vote to retain this appropriation in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BRYAN, OHIO, March 11, 1918.

HON. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been greatly interested in the discussion on the Senate floor concerning the free distribution of garden seeds by the Government, and heartily appreciate what you said on the floor March 5, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

Let me take a little of your time, as I know you are a very busy man, to give a little of my personal experience on that score. Some years ago, when I lived in a small town where I was mayor and also justice of the peace, I had our Congressman send me some garden seeds for general distribution. I was pleasantly surprised by receiving a large mail bag full. I apportioned these out so that I could reach every one of the 36 sections in the township, and sent word, without telephone at that, as no system had been installed then, to the parties I had selected to receive the seeds, in each case people of small means, who were good, reliable people, who could not buy seeds as easily as those better financially situated. In three days' time every one of those packages had been called for by the parties I designated, and I had so many more calls for seeds by others that I wrote the Congressman, explaining the matter, and received a lot more. I am sure all those seeds were planted, because in the winter a farmer's wife, an old lady, came to my office and introduced herself, she being a stranger to me, and told me she had never in all her life raised finer radishes than those grown from the seed I had given her husband, that she had heard others expressing themselves as being greatly pleased with the products of the seeds planted and wished me to be sure and get her seeds again in the spring.

This, my dear Senator, is one instance where the free distribution of seeds certainly met the requirements of the Department of Agriculture. Moreover, I never knew of anyone receiving garden seeds, or flower seeds either, for that matter, who did not make use of them and were thankful to get them, for I yet attend to this to some extent.

During the course of my experience as a public-school teacher, I paid particular attention to the agricultural phase, it being one of the prescribed studies, and many a package of agricultural bulletins were selected by my pupils, with their parents' assistance, for home reading, and I had many a copy of what I called the Government horse book sent to interested farmers, also the Yearbook. I generally kept a full set of the bulletins on my desk for use in the agriculture class, also for written work, as essays, drawings, etc. I also had quite a number of the large 5 by 7 foot United States maps distributed and saw that some of them went into schoolrooms. Pupils often wrote to the Congressman asking for documents or books they thought would be of interest to them, and how proud those boys and girls were when they came to school with their mail and showed the kindly letter personally signed by the Congressman, who did not feel above being bothered by the well-meaning youngsters.

You are at liberty to use my letter in any way you deem fit, and in closing would only add that I have not the least idea that at any time any of the Congressmen referred to herein had any thought of politics in administering to our needs.

With kind regards, I remain,

Yours, very sincerely, U. G. FEGLEY.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee what is the amount of this appropriation?

Mr. GORE. It is about a quarter of a million dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the action, as in Committee of the Whole, rejecting the amendment to strike out, reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] [A pause.] The action as in Committee of the Whole is concurred in.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary read a notice which I gave on the 18th instant of my intention to suspend Rule XVI of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On March 18 Mr. SHAFROTH gave the following notice:

I hereby give notice in writing that when the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054) is being considered in the Senate I shall move to suspend paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of Rule XVI of the Senate, which provide that no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation; that amendments proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and that when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received, in order that I may propose the following amendment:

"Provided, That work required in excess of eight hours shall be paid for at the rate of one and one-half times the regular compensation of the employee, computed on an hourly basis."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the action of the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, was to the effect that an amendment was rejected to strike out what is called the Borland amendment in the House bill, providing that there should be eight hours' service in a day by departmental employees. The law as it now exists provides that there shall be seven hours' service in a day and that the heads of departments shall have the right to require that the clerks or the stenographers shall work any number of hours in excess of that number without pay as the heads of the departments may care to impose.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Just a moment, as I desire to get through with this statement.

That leaves the question on the adoption or rejection of an eight-hour day, with the provision of existing law that there shall be a right in the person in charge of a department to require the employee not only to serve eight hours each day, but to serve any number of hours in excess of that number, without receiving any additional compensation. The proposition which is contained in the notice which I have given, and which I shall ask to have voted on, if the rule is suspended, is as follows:

On page 91, at the end of line 16, insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That work required in excess of eight hours shall be paid for at the rate of one and one-half times the regular compensation of the employee, computed on an hourly basis."

Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to ask the Senator if he would not withhold his motion until we take another vote on striking from the bill the so-called Borland provision? I will say to the Senator that I assume, if that provision should be stricken from the bill, it would satisfy him.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I feel that this proposition embodies a true and just compromise of these differences. The idea of requiring people who are working seven hours a day not only to increase that number of hours to eight hours a day, but to require them to work free for hours in excess of eight hours, is something that is wrong. I think the provision which I propose is one to which the majority of the Senate should agree.

Mr. GALLINGER. But does the Senator desire to have the time-and-a-half pay in addition to that of the regular day imposed upon the Government if the present law stands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think the present law is right. I think the hours of service should be eight, with extra pay for extra time. That is my judgment with relation to that matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is the Senator's view, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in relation to my amendment, as I presume the amendment itself will be discussed under the motion to suspend the rules.

There has been a great controversy in the world at large, including the United States, as to the length of time that men ought to work each day. That matter has been the subject of agitation for hundreds of years. There has been, of course, a diminution of the number of hours which it had been thought best should constitute a working day. There was a time when 12 hours and even 14 hours were thought to be the proper working day for persons engaged in all kinds of labor, but the general consensus of opinion has about arrived at the conclusion that an 8-hour day is best for the employer and is also best for the employee.

In the matter of health, there is no question but that a reasonable amount of labor is requisite and that a diminution of the numerous hours of labor is necessary. That being the case, we ought to make the hours of labor as nearly uniform as we can.

We find that labor organizations have invariably insisted upon an eight-hour day. We know that is the ruling working day throughout the United States in almost all occupations. It creates discontent if some people work only seven hours and receive a full day's pay for doing so. Consequently, it is natural that those employees of the Government who work eight hours should insist that it is not fair to them that they should only have the same compensation as those who work only seven hours a day. Inasmuch as the Government ought to get good service and ought to get a fair day's service, it seems to me that what we ought to do is to amend the provision which is now in the bill and to so frame it that a provision for eight hours shall prevail, and that there shall be allowed time and a half for extra time which may be required of the employee.

The beneficial effects of that, it seems to me, must be plain to everybody. If a stenographer or clerk is required to return to the department after supper, he is not going to do that voluntarily or cheerfully; he is not going to perform good work when he has probably been disturbed in what he thinks is his right. On that account it seems to me that by the adoption of this amendment you will create contentment upon the part of the men and the women who perform this labor and you will get good work, because labor cheerfully performed is always good labor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, in that connection I desire to suggest to the Senator that it is always, or usually at least, the case that the most competent clerks, those out of whom they can get the best work in the departments, are those who will be called on to work overtime without compensation. It is those men who will be required to work extra hours, and then to have responsibility thrown upon them long after the others have gone.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I thank the Senator from Arizona for the statement. The amendment which is to be proposed, if the rule is suspended, will give the Government one hour's more time from its employees. Consequently, it is in the interest of economy; it is something that we ought to take into consideration, in view of the existing conditions which have been created by reason of the war. There is no doubt that extra time is necessary at certain periods, and especially during the present time, when work of an immense volume may have to be done at any moment. I believe the employees ought to be required to work eight hours and that they ought, in addition, to be required to work more than eight hours when it is necessary that they should do so; but, Mr. President, it is absurd to say that we shall have people coming down to the departments at night and performing work that is not within the ordinary eight hours and that they should receive no compensation whatever for performing it. That creates discontent; it makes dissatisfaction.

If there is any question of fewer hours' work, it makes those who have to perform eight hours' work say that their salary ought to be raised, because the people who work seven hours do not have to do as much work as they do. So, taking it all in all, the uniformity of a rule for eight hours' work is something which, it seems to me, would have an excellent effect upon the amount of work that can be done and also upon the contentment of the people who perform that work.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is also in line with the general rule.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As the Senator from Arizona suggests, it is in line with the rule which has been recognized and established as the proper day for people to work in all occupations.

Mr. President, objection has been made to the amendment upon the ground that it would require extra compensation and an extra appropriation, and that by reason of that fact it is contrary to the rule of the Senate. This motion, however, is for the very purpose of avoiding that. It is very doubtful whether there will be any extra compensation required, because these extra hours of work may complete all the work to be done. Consequently there will probably be no extra pay by reason of it; and if there should be, then, in my judgment, it ought to be paid for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator from Colorado considered the question as to whether or not it would be better to allow extra pay for the extra hours rather than to give extra leave for the extra work done, in the latter case equalizing the entire year's work at eight hours a day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I heard the Senator from Georgia speak in behalf of his amendment to the effect which he has just stated, and I am willing to say that in my judgment his amendment is better than no amendment at all. But there ought to be an inducement to the employees—the stenographers and the clerks—by which, when they are called upon to perform extra labor, it will not be counted as a leave for them in the future, but a direct compensation and benefit to them at the time the service is performed.

You will then find that clerks will come down to the departments cheerfully to perform extra work; you will find that the inconvenience of coming after dinner will not be considered great; and that there will be cheerful and contented employees performing this work.

Then, Mr. President, we shall find that there will be no protests on the part of anyone engaged in business affairs on the outside. They will not contend that the Government is not getting a good day's work; that it is a sinecure to get into a Government job, when they know that eight hours' work has to be performed. They will recognize and realize that the Government is getting full compensation for the amount paid to its clerks and other employees.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator if he has made any provision in his amendment for anyone to look after and to keep an account of this overtime, so that the heads of departments or the auditors may know how much employees ought to be paid for overtime?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I take it that nearly all of the departments now have officials who keep accurate time accounts of the arrival and departure of each one of the employees. I understand that is done in all the departments; and the failure of an employee to report on time, if he be even only five minutes late, is noted, and consequently must be made up in some way.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator make that statement from personal knowledge or from hearsay?

Mr. SHAFROTH. From hearsay.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very much surprised to hear that any one of the departments exhibits such a degree of efficiency as that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My understanding is that each foreman of a room, for the purpose of making up his efficiency report, which is very important in the consideration of the promotion or demotion of employees, keeps the time of the employees as well as notes concerning their vigilance, fidelity, and so forth. Otherwise efficiency reports could not well be made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I know of a number of employees who are always exceedingly anxious to get to their offices on the minute set by the department for the beginning of work.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I think, if the Senator will investigate, he will find that not only is the time kept with great accuracy and great stringency, but, in at least one department that I know of, if the operator of a machine strikes a single letter wrong, it constitutes a mark against him. I think it will be found that at least nearly all of the old departments have rules that are sufficiently rigid. In the newly organized departments and bureaus, which are still in a transitory or creative condition, there may be some laxity; but I do not think you will find that to be the case in the old departments.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator understand that any department keeps a record of time lost by its employees and requires the employees to make up that time?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand so; yes. I know several employees who are as anxious as can be to reach their desks at the appointed time, for otherwise there would be a mark against them, and they will be required to make up the lost time or have a demerit mark placed against them.

Mr. KIRBY. If, as the Senator and as some others seem to think, a man or a woman should not do more than eight hours of work in one of these departments, why would it not be well to say they shall work only eight hours a day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The reason I object to that is that we are at war, and it may be necessary at times to require employees to stay at their work all night; and they should stay there all night, if it is necessary.

Mr. KIRBY. Why could not others be employed to do the night work?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That would involve the employment of persons unfamiliar with the routine of the work required, and therefore there would no doubt be great inefficiency.

Mr. KIRBY. Then, eight hours a day is not as much work as anybody can do efficiently at all, provided you pay them time and a half for overtime?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Eight hours in the long run, year in and year out, is, in my judgment, the proper standard for daily hours of labor; but, Mr. President, pressure of business, the fact that something may come up which it is absolutely requisite to attend to promptly, makes it necessary that on occasions employees should work longer than eight hours. It is not going to injure a person for one night or two nights or ten nights to perform extra work, but the work should be done voluntarily and cheerfully; and it is impossible to get it done cheerfully unless extra compensation is given to the employee who is required to work extra hours. For that reason I believe that there should be provision made for overtime payment.

I want to say one further thing with relation to the appropriation. There has been a protest against the proposed amendment on the ground that it is difficult, if not impossible, to estimate how much money should be appropriated. Why, Mr. President, it is unnecessary to provide for that now. There are probably more deficiency appropriation bills presented to the Congress of the United States in these days than any other kind of measures. The first bill that we passed in the extra session appropriated $7,750,000,000 for deficiencies, and we passed another deficiency bill just a short time ago carrying over a billion dollars. Consequently, if it should develop that a larger amount of money is required to meet extra pay, it can be provided for under deficiency bills. It can also be covered in another way. There can be appropriated in the bill which provides for the salaries of the various officers of the United States a lump sum for the very purpose of meeting the extra compensation which may be paid. So that there is absolutely nothing, it seems to me, that would prevent the fair and effective operation of this proposed amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think that the few times when the clerks may be called upon to work extra hours may well be charged up against the 60 days leave—30 days for general leave and 30 days for sick leave—during the year?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, that has been disputed; they do not have 60 days vacation.

Mr. WARREN. Just a moment. I do not believe that there has ever been a time, either under the stress of war or otherwise, when, as a class, the employees of any department have been called upon to work over hours to an extent that would exceed the real number of hours for which they are paid; in other words, the 60 days allowed them for regular leave and for sick leave.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, there is a possibility of 60 days leave, but nothing but 30 days is assured. The law provides that sick leave may be granted if the employee is actually sick or some member of his family requires his attention. In that event the employees can receive 30 days sick leave in excess of the 30 days regular leave; but that is not a leave of 60 days. The only leave that is given that is certain is a vacation leave of 30 days. I believe that is fair; I believe that is just; I believe it is proper; and when we consider the fact that these employees may be called upon quite frequently, especially during the period of the war, to perform extra services, it seems to me it would be an outrage to require them to work eight hours and then require them to work overtime without any extra compensation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator has made a statement that is inaccurate; that is either the case or else my information is inaccurate. My understanding is that the clerks do not receive 30 days' vacation as a matter of right at all.

Mr. WARREN. It is a matter of absolute law, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. REED. No; I think that they receive not to exceed 30 days, and that the head of a department regulates that. I may be in error; but that is the information that has been conveyed to me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have understood the rule to be that they are entitled to 30 days' leave without anything more than the filing of an application for that leave.

Mr. WARREN. They are by law entitled to 30 days' regular leave and national holidays.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Thirty days and holidays; that is right.

Mr. WARREN. And also sick leave.

Mr. SHAFROTH. When it comes to sick leave, then the employee must be actually sick or must come within the statute permitting such leave if a member of his family is sick and requires his attention.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. Is it contemplated in the Senator's amendment that if eight hours is not required to discharge effectively the work of the office, the employee shall not be given eight hours' pay for that day, but shall make up the time on the next day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; the requirement is that the employees shall work eight hours a day.

Mr. KIRBY. Suppose it is not necessary to have them work eight hours in order to perform the work?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will be found that all the departments are behind in their work. There is no danger of that being the case, and in the event a condition should arise whereby they were not required to work eight hours the force could be diminished and the work made to go around so as to keep all employed for eight hours.

Mr. WARREN. They usually get half a day on Saturday all through the summer, do they not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; they get half a day on Saturdays in the hot weather; but everybody else gets the same. Mr. President, it has been found that if those who work do not have the benefit of a limited number of hours, and do not receive the benefit of some sort of a vacation, they will have to take weeks or will have to take months, and sometimes will have to take years, to recuperate their condition. It has been recognized by physicians and by the highest authorities upon such subjects that 8 hours of labor and 30 days' vacation in the summer is a reasonable schedule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the object of the motion to suspend the rules is simply to give an opportunity to the Senate to vote, notwithstanding the rules, to modify the Borland amendment as it passed the other House. The present condition of things is this: A clerk is required to work seven hours; and the Senator from Arkansas need not concern himself about his being required to work at least seven hours, except upon holidays and during his vacation. Then, too, a clerk may be called upon to work more hours, as the exigencies of the service may require, without compensation. Hitherto, considering the fact that he did not perform an ordinary day's work, but worked only seven hours, it was thought to be negligible to insert a provision for extra pay. Now, the House adopts and sends to the Senate a provision to make the clerks work eight hours a day. I think that they ought to work eight hours; I think that public employees ought to give a full day's work, just like employees of corporations or of individuals; but I think that when they are made to do that that they ought to be put upon the same footing as other laborers.

I therefore introduced the motion to give them time and a half extra pay for extra time. That motion was ruled out on a point of order. That left the Senate in this situation: It had either to adopt the Borland amendment as it came from the House or reject it. The Senate had no initiative of its own, no volition of its own, as to how the eight-hour law should be modified, limited, or framed. An appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, and the Senate sustained the Chair. That settled that question.

I think that these employees ought to be made to give a fair day's work for a fair day's pay; and I think that eight hours is a fair day's work. The labor unions and the workingmen in the United States have all said that they would be satisfied with that; but under the present system obtaining in the departments a clerk working seven hours can be worked over seven hours without extra pay; and, with the Borland amendment, merely changing the number of hours from seven to eight, they are left in the situation where if the provision of the House bill becomes a law they can be worked over eight hours without any extra pay.

While I contend that eight hours is a fair day's work, I also contend that more than eight hours is overwork for almost anybody in any sort of business of this description or in any sort of manual labor for that matter. I suppose the Senate understands the situation; but being a Senator myself I can not resist the temptation to add perfume to the violet and to make the red of the rose still redder, and therefore have attempted to explain the sole object of the motion, which is to give the Senate itself a chance to say whether it wants the amendment or not, it having been deprived of that chance by the technical rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall only detain the Senate for a moment. I think we are falling into rather a bad habit in that whenever an amendment is offered which is subject to a point of order we move to suspend the rules so as to make it in order. We have occupied several days discussing one motion of that kind, and I presume we shall occupy a day in discussing the pending motion, and pretty soon we shall be spending half our time in controversies over suspending the rules. I have never voted to suspend the rules, and will not do so unless there is involved a matter of great importance to the country.

Now, as regards this matter, I voted against the motion of the Senator from Texas to strike out the so-called Borland amendment. I have changed my mind on that question; and, if the Senator from Texas renews that motion, I shall vote for it, because I believe it is the easiest way to settle this question.

There are certain uncontroverted points in this controversy. The clerks are a favored class; they get 30 days' leave of absence, and they all take it; they get 30 days' sick leave, and some of them take a part of it; they get holidays with pay. There is no other class of laborers in the United States that have those privileges; so that it ought not to be made to appear here that the Government clerks are being oppressed in any way. They are satisfied with the law as it stands. I have had, I think, at least 50 letters protesting against the Borland amendment, and saying that the clerks are perfectly satisfied with the law as it stands. Why not leave it in that shape? Why not strike out the provision in the bill, the so-called Borland amendment, and let matters go along as they are at present?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The very ground upon which my motion is based is that there should be more time given by the clerks, more service performed; and, eight hours being a reasonable requirement, that that standard should be fixed; but when the clerks are called upon to work extra hours extra pay should be allowed them.

I will say to the Senator that the amendment I have proposed is perfectly satisfactory to the employees, particularly in view of the fact that they do not work only seven hours, but in many cases are required to work eight hours or more a day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator may be well informed; but I have had numerous letters protesting against the eight-hour amendment and asking that it shall not be agreed to. I do not think the clerks are satisfied with it. They are satisfied with the present condition as it exists to-day. I have not heard a whisper of complaint along that line.

Another thing, Mr. President. These clerks are employed by the year, at $1,000, $1,080, $1,100, $1,200, $1,400, and so on. If we are to pay them upon the same basis that workmen are paid in the factories of the United States, it will be necessary to have a ledger account entered into with every clerk, and the hours and the minutes that they work overtime will have to be reckoned. It will require a force to do that The Government service is not suffering. They have called to this city about 10,000 clerks, and I do not know but 20,000 clerks, within the last few weeks, and they are all glad to come here. Many of them are getting twice as much here as they would get at home. While I sympathize with them in every right that they ought to have, I do not think we ought to become hysterical over this thing. Inasmuch as they are satisfied with the existing law, it seems to me that what we ought to do is to agree to the motion made by the Senator from Texas, to strike out the so-called Borland amendment and let the law remain as it is at the present time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have here the law on the subject of vacation and sick leave. I quote from the United States Compiled Statutes, 1916, page 96:

Provided further, That the head of any department may grant 30 days' annual leave with pay in any one year to each clerk or employee: And provided further, That where some member of the immediate family of a clerk or employee is afflicted with a contagious disease and requires the care and attendance of such employee, or where his or her presence in the department would jeopardize the health of fellow clerks, and in exceptional and meritorious cases where a clerk or employee is personally ill and where to limit the annual leave to 30 days in any one calendar year would work peculiar hardship it may be extended, in the discretion of the head of the department, with pay, not exceeding 30 days in any one case or in any one calendar year.

The clerks do not have this leave as a matter of right. It is simply a matter of discretion on the part of the head of the department.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows very well, however, that it is taken every year, and has been allowed for a great many years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am informed by many clerks that many of them do not get it at all.

Mr. WARREN. They do not ask for it then.

Mr. SMOOT. If they do not ask for it they do not get it. There is no clerk of the Government that ever asks for his 30 days leave of absence but that he gets it. He is entitled to it under the law, and he ought to get it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He is not entitled to it, because the law says he is not entitled to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; he is entitled to it, just exactly the same as in the case of the seven-hour provision of the law. That was suggestive on the part of Congress, and the heads of the departments obeyed it; and this is suggestive, and the heads of the departments have obeyed it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The provision for seven hours' work a day is made obligatory.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all, as the Senator will see if he reads the law.

Mr. SHEPPARD (reading)—

> Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees, of whatever grade or class, in their respective departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, yes; not less than seven hours.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The seven-hour provision is obligatory as a minimum.

Mr. SMOOT. I was speaking about the question of working over the seven hours. There is not anything obligatory on the part of the head of any department to compel them to work more than seven hours.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not see that it is any argument against this provision that the clerks have a holiday or that they have certain hours of vacation. The fact is that very few of these clerks are worked overtime. That is an absolute fact; but that does not relieve the clerks who are worked overtime. As a matter of fact, there are just a few clerks in each department who are so skilled that it is worth while to work them overtime, and those poor clerks are worked nearly to death.

I know of instances by personal knowledge where clerks have been worked 12 hours a day, and are worked 12 hours a day now, because they are familiar with the work and no one else is. It is no answer to such a clerk to say that 99 per cent of the other clerks work only 8 hours or 7 hours. It is no answer to such a clerk to say that everybody gets 30 days' vacation. He is working 12 hours, and he is working 12 hours because the department, unfortunately, has to have him work 12 hours.

The situation is this, as has been suggested: Those that are not efficient are worked only 7 hours and those that are efficient are worked 12 hours; and because 99 per cent of them are worked only 7 hours and have a holiday, therefore the other 1 per cent have to work 12 hours without any difference in their compensation. Now, is that fair?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that what he has stated is absolutely correct. I stated on the floor of the Senate the other day that I did not think 1 per cent of the clerks in the Government employ were working over 7 hours per day.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator from Utah is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want the Senator to know that I am not opposing ample pay for the clerks of the Government. That I want them to have, and I shall vote for it whenever I get a chance to do so, although I know that it ought to be provided for in a different way than we are going to do it by voting a horizontal increase. That is unscientific and never will be satisfactory. But I want to say to the Senator now that the clerks who are working 12 hours to-day are the most efficient clerks in the employment of the Government, as he has already stated, and they are the ones that are going to get the efficiency marks; they are the ones that are going to get the promotions as soon as the promotions possibly can be made by the head of the department; and that happens every week and every month of the year.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, that is something like the reward hereafter. I am satisfied that some of us here are going to get rewarded hereafter; but the only scientific way to pay a man for something he does is to pay him while he does it instead of hoping that at some time somebody will promote him so that he can get a fair wage.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that that is what they will get, and I think it is right that they should get it. I think they are the ones that ought to be taken care of the very first moment the head of the department can promote them; and all of the departments, so far as I know, are following that policy.

Mr. PITTMAN. The main object in the time-and-a-half provision is not to pay extra wages. It is to prevent people from unnecessarily working a man longer than he should work. That is the reason of it. No man is going to pay time and a half for extra-hour work unless the employee's services are absolutely necessary. On the other hand, many careless foremen will work a man overtime if it does not cost anything or does not detract from the foreman's own record. This will cost the Government practically nothing, because I should say only 1 per cent or less of these people are now worked overtime. It will not cost the Government anything; but we have just as much of a duty imposed on us to protect the 1 per cent as we have to protect the 99 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a suggestion for my own information—because I do not claim to know anything about it—can not the Senator conceive of a condition as to a future reward along this line: Are not some of these clerks in the departments of such efficiency in their present positions that the mere fact of their being indispensable in those positions would of itself prevent them from getting a higher place, because it would be robbing the one in power of the very service he needed?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have known a transfer to be refused to another department by reason of the necessity of a clerk in a particular department. I have asked for transfers from one department because they were working certain employees 12 hours a day, and the answer was that they had to have those particular employees.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the present law provides that seven hours shall constitute a minimum day's work. To say that we should enact a law compelling the clerks to work an additional hour without additional pay would simply be to say to these clerks that they are getting overpaid.

I voted for the so-called Borland amendment as amended by the Senate. When it came to the Senate it provided for an hour's increase, with no limitation. The Senate has amended the Borland amendment by providing that it shall be only for the period of the war; and, of course, the amendment which will be proposed by the Senator from Colorado, so far as the increase is concerned, would apply only to the period of the war.

I felt, Mr. President, that during the war we ought to ask the clerks to work eight hours; but if we ask them to work eight hours, and if they do work eight hours, we ought to give them additional pay. For that reason I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Colorado to suspend the rule so as to give the Senate the right to vote as to whether or not we shall increase the pay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate suspend paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of Rule XVI in order that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] may present, in order, the amendment proposed by him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I suggest that we had better have a quorum.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That will bring a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] I withhold my vote.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], who is unavoidably absent. At his special request I observe the pair upon this question and withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. As he is not in the Chamber I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. As he is not in the Chamber I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of sickness in his family. I am informed that if he were present he would vote for the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. As he is absent I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating my announcement of my pair and its transfer, which announcement I ask may stand for the day, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Has the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING. I inquire if the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HARDING. I have a general pair with that Senator and in his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] with whom I am paired is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The roll call resulted—yeas 33, nays 24, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Less than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the motion is lost.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the amendment that I offered in the Committee of the Whole and reserved for consideration in the Senate, and ask for a vote on it. I ask that it may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, at the end of line 16, after the word "day," it is proposed to insert "or to pay salaries of the heads of executive departments having charge of the employment of labor who require more than eight hours' labor of an employee each day, unless such employee is paid at the rate of time and a half for each hour over eight hours."

Mr. GORE. I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. And is not estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I now renew my motion to strike out lines 10 to 16, inclusive, on page 91, as amended; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Texas if this is a motion to strike out what is known as the Borland amendment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am glad that we have at last gotten that far in this matter.

Mr. President, I said before, and I wish to reiterate, that I voted for the eight-hour law. I voted to suspend the rules and put on the bill the provision giving pay and a half for the additional time over the eight hours required under that amendment. I was extremely anxious to see the labor at Washington equalized with the other labor of the country and to have the rule prevail here that prevails generally in all systems of organized labor in my part of the country as well as in the East. I was desirous, also, to see time and a half paid for overtime. Inasmuch as that effort has failed in getting remuneration for the clerks for the hours of labor after others have quit, I shall vote to strike out this amendment, because under it, without that provision, I think it unfair not only to the Government in requiring this extraordinary labor but very unfair to the men themselves who have to bear that burden.

I shall, therefore, with this explanation, change the vote I gave before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALDER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. On this question he would vote in the affirmative. I also shall vote that way. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and not knowing how he would vote upon this question, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the previous roll call and withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. Being unable to get a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as before, that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent because of illness in his family. I am also informed that if present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present. I am not able to obtain a transfer of my pair, and therefore withhold my vote If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Announcing my pair as on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] appears to be absent. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am informed the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I have a pair, would if present vote "yea" upon this proposition. I therefore feel at liberty to vote the same way without any transfer. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—40.

So Mr. SHEPPARD's motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I desire to offer an amendment, suggested by the Department of Agriculture.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 11, page 90, insert:

Any moneys hereafter received in payment of charges fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture on account of such cleaning and disinfection at plants constructed therefor out of any appropriation made on account of the pink bollworm of cotton to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I move the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk, also prepared in the Department of Agriculture and sent to me. It is a companion to the amendment just adopted.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, after line 9, insert:

And provided further, That not to exceed 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts appropriated for the eradication of the pink bollworm of cotton shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture among the several items under that head.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he desires that amendment to be adopted? I notice that now all the departments are beginning to suggest the same thing in almost every lump-sum appropriation. I do not believe that it is good policy for Congress to undertake that way of legislating. I think whenever a department asks for an appropriation they ought to ask for what they really need, and there should be no part of it transferred to some other purpose. I do not believe the Senate ought to adopt the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that a provision like this is in the bill, but it relates to preceding appropriations and not to succeeding appropriations. It happened that the appropriation for the pink bollworm follows that provision which relates only to preceding appropriations. I will say to the Senator we had an amendment reported by the committee that the funds used in this inspection should be revolving funds. That was stricken out by the Senate. Now, that renders the appropriation insufficient, in view of the fact that it does not revolve, but has to be covered into the Treasury, and it would render the amount inadequate. This is intended to meet that situation. Otherwise the work of disinfecting these cars coming from Mexico, from which we import the bollworm, can not go forward. The funds might be exhausted before the end of the fiscal year. I think, in this case at least, there ought to be an exception made.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course hearing an amendment read from the desk and not having any chance at all to see it, it is almost impossible to judge of the effect of the amendment. I was speaking against the principle. It began two years ago, and it is being followed up now by all the departments, and it ought to cease.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is right about it, generally speaking.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8696, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator from Arizona to allow the bill to be laid aside for the present.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 22, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 21, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in Heaven, for that finer, purer, nobler spirit, pouring itself out in a thousand kind, generous, philanthropic, altruistic, and God-like methods, to alleviate the widespread suffering thrust into the world by the ruthless and brutal methods of the enemies of civil, political, and religious liberty.

Grant, O most merciful Father, that out of it all shall come a larger, purer, grander civilization, which shall transform every child of the living God into a good Samaritan, through that love which poured itself out on the cross of Calvary for a sinful world. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 154. Joint resolution authorizing the erection of a memorial in Washington to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address recently delivered by the governor of Louisiana, Hon. R. G. Pleasant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address recently delivered by Gov. Pleasant. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RENTALS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It will take only three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter which I received this morning, which I wish to read to the House. I read:

"WITH THE COLORS,"
WALTER REED GENERAL HOSPITAL,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1918.

Representative JOHNSON.

DEAR SIR: I wish to complain to you about the rent profiteering in Washington.

I am a sergeant in the Aviation Corps and in the hospital with a broken leg. My wife is living in a house at 73 New York Avenue, owned by Mrs. Kearnon, 71 New York Avenue. Prior to March 1 the rent was $35. Now the rent is $60 a month for the upstairs and $50 for three rooms downstairs. Now my rent is raised and my wife is to be put out April 1, because my wife is to be a mother soon, and Mrs. Kearnon is taking advantage of my being in the hospital.

Yours, respectfully,

Sergt. NEWELL F. JOHNSTONE.

I also have a letter, received this morning, from an old woman, which I will read. I might say, in advance of the reading of this letter, that this is from a woman 76 years old, who is a widow of a Union soldier, and it is not so legibly written or so well expressed as Lord Macaulay might do it. But I will read it just as it is:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 20, 1918.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I being in much trouble regarding my home, having occupied same one year and seven months at rental $25 per month, in advance usually paid. I have been notified by agent in charge to vacate premises by April 15, 1918, next month, without any reason given. Six weeks ago agent raised my rent $10.50 more than been paying, by notice given in less than two weeks; came to my home saying my rent would be $25 as before, only I believed he feared trouble by some of you in authority.

I am a Civil War widow, self-supporting, 76 years old. I would be glad to confer with you and learn if anything can be done. Am unable to find another house, and must I be put out on the street? Please oblige, answer.

Yours, truly, Mrs. C. C. ABBOTT.

With that letter, Mr. Speaker, is another sheet of paper, at the top of which is pasted a slip bearing the following:

Daniel J. Sullivan, real estate, loans, and insurance, 412 H Street NW., Washington, D. C.

On this additional sheet of paper the old lady adds:

Address and name of agent in charge of home.
I would call and bring other evidence if desired.
I trust you may find some one who will take the matter up, that right may prevail and I not suffer wrongly.
Yours, sincerely, Mrs. C. C. ABBOTT.

It has been stated so often that the owners of private property are not profiteering; that tenants only——

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the persons who gave these men and women notice to vacate property are the owners of the property?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I was about to say, these letters giving notice to quit clearly appear to be from owners and not from tenants, who are charged by owners as doing practically all of the profiteering.

Mr. KEARNS. The reason I wanted to ask that question is, as I recall the testimony submitted to the House the other day on the part of the Real Estate Exchange, that it was to the effect that all the profiteering rents in this city came from tenants who were subleasing, and, according to that testimony, this letter contradicts the statement of the Board of Exchange.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. I have called attention to these letters because they recite facts about merciless and pitiless owners.

INSURANCE FOR PRISONERS OF WAR.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass at this time Senate joint resolution 133.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 133. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read Senate joint resolution 133, authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, shall be granted by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance on application made by the person to be insured or, subject to such regulations as the bureau may prescribe, by any other person.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the purpose of this resolution is primarily to extend the protection of the insurance to those who have been taken prisoners of war, and who therefore can not avail themselves of its benefits under the present law. The gentleman proposes to offer an amendment to specify that special purpose?

Mr. RAYBURN. To cover only those; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to having that amendment reported?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; none at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "other," in line 2, page 2, and strike out also the period after the word "person," in line 2, insert a comma, and add the following: "Within the permitted class, as specified in section 402 of said act, provided the person to be insured has been taken a prisoner of war before April 12, 1918: And provided further, That no one but the insured may designate a beneficiary, and nothing in this resolution shall be deemed to change or effect the permitted class of beneficiaries or impose any obligation on the insured against his will."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the present construction of the law, any person within the classes that may be designated as beneficiaries may take out the insurance for the soldier, provided it is subsequently approved by him.

Mr. RAYBURN. They may make application, but before the insurance can be issued the application must be approved by the insured.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of this joint resolution is to take care of those who are prisoners of war and who can not approve the application.

Mr. RAYBURN. Who can neither make the application nor indorse it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the reading of the joint resolution, any person other than the insured may make this application. Does not the gentleman from Texas think that should be limited to the beneficiaries?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have limited it, and that is the reason for the amendment I propose to offer, so that only the people in the permitted class of beneficiaries will be allowed to make this application.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No one except those in the permitted class.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This does not change in any respect the character of the beneficiary?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A case has recently been brought to my attention, in which a boy was taken from an orphan asylum and reared by a family, but the legal processes of adoption were not complied with. It is held, and doubtless properly, that the foster parents can not in such a case be beneficiaries. But it has occurred to me that there are cases of that sort which present very strong equities, and I want to ask the gentleman if his committee has given any thought to an amendment that would cover cases of that kind?

Mr. RAYBURN. We have, and I have been in communication with the department, and it is my intention within a few days to introduce a bill covering several minor details of that sort. It is our intention to try to provide by that bill that anybody who stands in the place of the parent shall be a beneficiary of this insurance, the same as the parents. That is one of the things we intend to cover in the bill that I propose to introduce.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In a case such as I have described the purpose of the committee is to make the bill broad enough to cover those who stand in the place of parents, whether the legal formalities of adoption have been gone through with or not?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is my intention.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to inquire whether under the present law the parents or next of kin can not make application for insurance in the place of the soldier?

Mr. RAYBURN. They can make application, but before the insurance can be issued upon it, it must have the indorsement of the soldier. These boys who are prisoners of war can not be reached, even to indorse the application.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood that they could make the application, but I did not understand about the indorsement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not quite understand the gentleman with reference to the change which may be under consideration with reference to the beneficiaries. Did I correctly understand the gentleman that the change contemplated would authorize the foster parents, for example, who had always cared for a boy who had become a soldier, to be made beneficiaries?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is my intention within a few days to introduce a bill that will be broad enough to cover cases of that kind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that would be highly commendable.

Mr. RAYBURN. The present law does not cover that, and neither does this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have had cases called to my attention a number of times where foster parents had cared for the soldier ever since he was a small child, and yet they could get no benefits under the insurance law.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If this amendment is adopted and insurance is taken out for a prisoner, who will pay for that?

Mr. RAYBURN. It does not say. The department would hold that under the law as it now stands they do not question where the money to cover the premium comes from. The amendment specifically reads that there shall be no obligation placed on the insured by reason of some one else taking out insurance; and, furthermore, if he is in a place where he can not name the beneficiary, the policy, as far as the beneficiary is concerned, is left blank, and when he gets where he can name him he may do so. In case he dies and no beneficiary is named, the insurance would go to the estate and be distributed according to laws of the State.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The practical effect is that the beneficiaries themselves have to pay for it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; somebody besides the soldier.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. Under the law now in force the time for taking out insurance expires April 12. Under your bill is the time extended?

Mr. RAYBURN. It does not extend the time at all.

Mr. KEARNS. Suppose that some relative of the soldier who is taken prisoner should take out insurance to-morrow, or after the bill becomes a law, how does the Government know, or the person who took out the insurance know, that the soldier is still alive?

Mr. RAYBURN. That would have to be determined.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. COX. The regular order.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Rayburn amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "other," in line 2, page 2, and strike out also the period after the word "person" in line 2 and insert a comma, and add the following: "within the permitted class as specified in section 402 of said act: Provided, That the person to be insured has been taken prisoner of war before April 12, 1918: And provided further, That no one but the insured may designate the beneficiary, and nothing in this resolution shall be deemed to change or affect the permitted class of beneficiaries or impose any obligation upon the insured against his will."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Rayburn amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Is not the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. He is.

Mr. GARNER. I do not want the gentleman from Minnesota to get the floor for an hour's debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is not going to get the floor for an hour's debate. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to me to ask the chairman a question? I would like to ask if he has considered whether the language now used will not interfere with the present provision of law which allows an application to be made by the next of kin subject to the approval of the insured?

Mr. RAYBURN. This language was written by the counsel for the bureau.

Mr. TOWNER. The language of the amendment is that nobody but the insurer shall be allowed to name the beneficiary. Now, if that be the case, would not that constitute an interference per se with the provisions of the law which allows an application to be made by the next of kin subject to the approval of the insured?

Mr. RAYBURN. Under the present law that does not change it; nobody has a right to name the beneficiary but the insured himself.

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that, but my question is—the law now permits the application to be made for insurance by the next of kin subject to the approval of the insured, the soldier. Now, will this language stating that he only can name the beneficiary constitute an interference with that provision of the law?

Mr. RAYBURN. I can not conceive how it would. It specifically states that it does not change the law except as to the party taking out the insurance.

Mr. TOWNER. That may take care of it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will give me his attention I desire first to say that, listening as accurately as I could to the reading of the amendment twice by the Clerk, I do not quite see how it materially changes existing law. It may be that I did not hear it accurately. I do not see that it changes the existing order of things very much, but I will take the gentleman's word for it. If it does, we are all for it; and if it does not, no harm has been done.

I want to ask the gentleman in reference to an entirely different matter that I think should receive attention at the hands of his committee. The law providing for insurance makes the insurance available to those in the military and naval service of the United States, including nurses of the Red Cross in the hospital, units under control of the Medical Department, and certain other individuals.

At the outbreak of this war we sent to Russia a military organization consisting of officers who were commissioned but not in the Regular Establishment as we view the military forces and men who were to go as workers, and they are now in Russia under circumstances of grave peril. They went over there in furtherance of the interests of the United States to assist in the rebuilding of railways in Russia and in their operation. I have recently received a communication from quite a number of those men—they all united in signing it, and it was sent back and mailed from Japan—in which they say they have been notified by their insurance companies that their insurance is off, that their lives are not now insured, and they believe that they are engaged in military service of practically equal merit with those elsewhere engaged in military work for the United States, and they ask that they be included in this. I see no reason why they should not be.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that that question has been discussed in our committee. It was brought up by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], and we intend to cover such a case as that in the general overhauling of the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, do all of the policies of all of the companies in the United States have a clause in them where if the insured move from one place to another they can be canceled?

Mr. RAYBURN. They do not all have that clause.

Mr. GARNER. I think I have a couple of policies that have not that clause in them.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman why the date April 12, 1918, is inserted?

Mr. RAYBURN. For the reason that we thought there ought to be a definite date. This is in the law now. We do not change the law as it is now written.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas whether anything has been done by the committee in regard to the rehabilitation of the wounded soldier—the question we had up when the bill was under consideration before?

Mr. RAYBURN. Nothing has yet been done. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

INDUSTRIAL CREDITS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the third reading of the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes. The Clerk will read the bill the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 370, nays 2, answered "present" 2, not voting 57, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I have a general pair with my colleague [Mr. TALBOTT]. If he were present he would vote "aye" also, and therefore I let my vote stand.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill 10608 will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate bill and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate bill and asks for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia offers a motion in the nature of instructions to the conferees, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move that the managers on the part of the House be instructed to insist in conference on the retention of that part of the amendment embodied in section 13 of the House bill, on page 11, which is in these words:

"SEC. 13. That the Federal reserve banks shall be authorized, subject to the maturity limitations of the Federal reserve act and to regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, to discount the direct obligations of member banks secured by such bonds of the corporation and to rediscount eligible paper secured by such bonds and indorsed by a member bank. No discount or rediscount under this section shall be granted at a less interest charge than 1 per cent per annum above the prevailing rates for eligible commercial paper of corresponding maturity, nor, in any event, unless such member bank satisfies the Federal reserve bank that it has in its possession for the purposes of such transaction insufficient commercial paper eligible for discount or rediscount under the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board made under authority of the Federal reserve act."

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, when the bill just passed was first drawn to my attention it was quite obvious to me that it had been given a mistaken reference. The bill plainly was a banking and currency measure and should have been referred to the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. In this connection I want to say that the chairman and the members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House were perfectly courteous and reasonable about the suggestion that a rereference of the bill be had. They made no objection to it. I did not insist upon a rereference, notwithstanding the fact that some of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House were very anxious that there should be a reference of the bill. One reason why I did not insist upon a rereference was the very sane and fair attitude of the chairman and members of the Committee on Ways and Means. They asked the chairman and other members of the Committee on Banking and Currency to review the bill and offer suggestions, especially with reference to those provisions that brought the war-finance corporation in contact with the Federal Reserve System. Some of the amendments suggested in response to this invitation have been embodied in the bill. For instance, section 13, in my judgment, is the only thing that stands, textually, between the Federal Reserve System and utter wreck. It is the one literal safeguard which should not be abandoned or weakened. I do not believe the House or the country would desire to see the commercial banking credit system of the country impaired or menaced by the operations of an emergency system chiefly devised to refund the obligations and finance the business of public-service corporations, railroads, war-supply enterprises, and great concerns that relate themselves to the conduct of the war. This scheme was presented by those who designed it as an emergency measure. This particular provision of the bill—I mean section 13—makes it an emergency measure. The Senate bill, as it came to the House, in a kindred provision practically made the bonds of the war-finance corporation preferential security for discounts and rediscounts at Federal reserve banks and in the open-market transactions of these banks. The Senate provision practically issued an engraved invitation to the great concerns of the country that are in need of refunding facilities to come and get priority benefits of the Federal Reserve System, largely to the exclusion of current commerce and industry. That provision of the Senate bill, together with its open-market feature, if enacted into law, might and very likely would clutter up the Federal reserve banks with unliquid securities, and to that extent impair, if not exhaust, their ability to minister readily to current commerce and industry.

Those features of the Senate bill would, in my judgment, very greatly endanger our entire commercial banking system which, in any event, must endure a great strain. I was induced to support this bill because of the very reasonable and sane attitude of the Committee on Ways and Means, reflected in its willingness to make amendments that have largely cured its defects. By no means the least important of these amendments are those especially designed to safeguard the commercial banking system of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of that statement of the gentleman's confidence in the Committee on Ways and Means, does the gentleman think it wise to adopt this rather unusual matter of instructing the conferees in advance?

Mr. GLASS. The vital importance of this matter, the crucial nature of the question in issue, prompted me, with great reluctance, to offer this instruction. Ordinarily I do not believe in instructions, although I remind the gentleman that the Banking and Currency Committee has several times been instructed by the House on problems of vastly less consequence than the one I am now discussing. I have so often seen bills go into conference and brought back here in such a radically altered shape that I am fearful for this particular item. Gentlemen, if this House provision, this section 13, does not remain in this bill the Congress will have done a grave injury to the commercial interests of the country. It will have invited disaster.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. I have great confidence in the gentleman from Virginia and in his knowledge of these matters and shall be inclined to follow him. It occurred to me, however, that I suggest to the gentleman that, in the first place, this is a rather unusual feature that might be resented, and in addition, while it is tremendously important, and I am willing to take the judgment of the gentleman from Virginia that it is perhaps the most important provision in the bill, there are other very important provisions in the bill differing widely from the bill as it passed the Senate.

Might not this situation arise? In emphasizing the insistence of the House upon this vital and important matter, might it not leave the inference that we were not so insistent on other very important matters?

Mr. GLASS. I realize the force of what the gentleman has said. That very thought occurred to me; but I have reason to imagine that a very direct "drive" will be made at this particular section of the bill, because there was at the outset very strenuous objection by the proponents of this measure to the incorporation of this provision in the bill. And while I am as averse as anybody possibly could be to inviting resentments, I would rather incur the resentment of those who would strike this section out of the bill than to feel the righteous resentment to which the country will doubtless give expression unless this provision shall remain in the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to interrupt the gentleman a minute.

I practically agree with the gentleman that the substance of section 13 should be a part of this bill when it becomes a law; that it is essential for the protection of the Federal Reserve System; and the gentleman from Virginia fully knows my views on this section and on the relation that this bill should bear to the Federal reserve act. I trust he will withdraw his motion. I believe that I know the sentiment of the House with regard to that section as well as the gentleman's feelings about it and the feelings of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee, and I know that I know the feelings of each one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee. Therefore I can assure him that the managers on the part of the House would take care to preserve the Federal Reserve System in its integrity, and whatever we do with that section is not going to hurt the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GLASS. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. Would not the gentleman from North Carolina assure the House, as is often done by gentlemen having charge of a bill, that this section shall not be yielded in conference until the House has had an opportunity to express itself upon it?

Mr. GLASS. I was just about to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he would not be willing to give the House that assurance.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, of course, if it shall not be touched in any particular, there would be no conference on that section, and of course we would have to report a disagreement. But I can——

Mr. GILLETT. On the vital particulars?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can give this assurance to the House that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and other gentlemen who desire to instruct us, will be satisfied before we come back with it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. GLASS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a very important bill, and it is a bill with regard to which the sentiment of the House is very largely a unit, I think. It is quite different from the measure passed in the other body, not only with regard to this exceedingly important section but in regard to other sections. I assume that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and his conferees would not agree either to a vital modification of this section or of other vital sections without giving the House an opportunity to express its opinion.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman can——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] a question?

Mr. GLASS. You may.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that, where a motion like the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia has been offered and agreed to by the House and sent over to the Senate with the bill itself, the Senate has refused to have a conference until that was modified?

Mr. GLASS. I had occasion to look that up some time ago, when the House was wise enough to instruct the Banking and Currency Committee in a certain matter, and I found only one instance in which the Senate long ago declined a conference in circumstances of that sort.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I remember it was brought up here on the floor, but I do not recall when, and that precedent was, I think, the one that was cited, and the contention was that if the Senate should send over here a bill with its conferees already instructed not to consent to anything except what the Senate has already adopted, you might as well not have a conference.

Mr. GLASS. That is usually stated when a proposition like this is up.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me say that I think with the assurances I have given the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], the gentleman from Virginia could well withdraw his motion with respect to the section.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to say that neither this section nor other sections will be greatly amended.

Mr. KITCHIN. I said with regard to this section, which is so vitally important to the preservation of the Federal Reserve System in its integrity, that I would not come to an agreement in conference until gentlemen who had made these objections—that is, who seemed to favor this instruction—were satisfied with the action that the House conferees would take on it.

Mr. GLASS. With that statement, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I just desire to say that I fully agree with the statement in all respects made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I think this provision as it appears in the bill is one of the best, if not the best, amendment of all the amendments that the Ways and Means Committee put on it

I think the provision could well be strengthened, but I should hate to see it modified in any way so that it would weaken it.

Mr. GLASS. Well, that is precisely my position, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. McFADDEN. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the past when conferees have been instructed to maintain "the substance," or, in this instance, "assurances to that effect," the conferees have exceeded that authority; that the insertion of the word "substance" gives the conferees great latitude; and that almost the same condition that is presented here was presented when we last instructed the conferees on the Federal reserve act, in connection with the collection-charges provision amendments, with which the gentleman is familiar, because he was one of the conferees who, I contend, violated that very instruction given by this House to maintain a certain amendment to the bill——

Mr. GLASS. I will say to my colleague that I was wiser than he, and did not use the broad language which he unhappily used in the case cited. The House had an opportunity to pass on the dispute, and did not agree that the conferees disobeyed instructions. In this motion I have not asked for the retention of the "substance" of section 13, but its text.

Mr. McFADDEN. I was simply calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] used the word "substance" this morning when he said that the "substance" would be maintained, so as to not injure the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that I can rely on the assurance given by the gentleman from North Carolina. I wanted that assurance. I am glad the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] anticipated me in asking it; and, having received it, I withdraw the motion to instruct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the motion, and that is the end of it. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KITCHEN, Mr. RAINEY, Mr. DIXON, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. OVERMYER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

INCREASED COMPENSATION TO EMPLOYEES, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I send up House resolution 290 (H. Rept. No. 397).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 9414, entitled "A bill granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes"; that there shall be not to exceed three hours of general debate, to be divided between those supporting and those opposing the bill. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendments under the five-minute rule, and during such consideration it shall be in order, the general rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, to offer and consider as additional sections the following:

"I.

"That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer, and the delivery of articles necessary in the production of such food products to the producers, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes in the vicinity of such cities of the United States as he may select, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and the cost of such experiments, not exceeding $300,000, may be paid by the Postmaster General out of any unexpended appropriations of the Postal Service, and the Postmaster General shall report the result of such experiments to the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

"SEC. —. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General from time to time, and without charge therefor, for use in the Postal Service, such aeroplanes and automobiles or parts thereof as may prove to be, or as shall become, unsuitable for the purposes of the War Department; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to use the same, in his discretion, in the transportation of the mails and to pay the necessary expenses thereof out of the appropriation for inland transportation by steamboat or other power boat or by aeroplanes or star route.

"SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof."

"II.

"SEC. —. That hereafter the balance to the credit of any one person in a postal-savings depository, exclusive of accumulated interest, shall not exceed $3,000. Noninterest-paying deposits shall not be accepted. All laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"SEC. —. That section 6 of the act approved June 25, 1910, is hereby further amended so that the proviso in said section shall read as follows: 'Provided, That in order that smaller amounts may be accumulated for deposit, any person may purchase for 10 cents, from any postal savings depository, specially prepared adhesive stamps to be known as "postal savings stamps," and attach them to a card which shall be furnished for the purpose. A card with 10 postal savings stamps affixed shall be accepted as a deposit of $1 either in opening an account or in adding to an existing account, or may be redeemed in cash.'

"SEC. —. The additional compensation granted by the provisions of this bill shall be paid out of the revenues of the Post Office Department. If the revenues of the said department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1919, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster General."

After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the same shall be reported to the House, with such recommendation as the committee may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto for final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In a moment. Can I arrange with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] upon some time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think 20 minutes on a side will be satisfactory.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] for 20 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I may have two or three minutes without interruption, I think I can explain this rule, which upon its face may seem to be somewhat complicated, but which really is not very complicated.

The purpose of the rule is to make in order for consideration the bill H. R. 9414, granting increase of compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and in the Postal Service, and for other purposes. It is commonly referred to as the Moon-Madden postal bill. It provides for an increase in pay to postal clerks, and so forth.

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads this morning indicated to the Committee on Rules its desire that there should be made in order for consideration two other bills that have been favorably acted upon by that committee, to wit, Senate bill 2718, with certain amendments that the House committee had agreed upon, and H. R. 8637, with certain amendments that the House committee had agreed upon; and so the Committee on Rules, being agreeable to making these in order for consideration, determined that the simplest way to bring them before the House would be to quote the language of those bills in the rule itself, and that has been done. If gentlemen will obtain copies of Senate bill 2718 and House bill 8637 they will see the bills which the committee has reported in this resolution outside of H. R. 9414.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee this question: That, having originally provided in the rule that there should be three hours' debate on the Moon-Madden bill, does he think it would be exactly fair to bring in two other very important measures in this rule without increasing the time for debate?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on Rules considered that, and the committee thought that three hours for general debate would still be sufficient, assuming that, of course, there would be liberal debate granted under the five-minute rule upon these propositions.

Mr. WALSH. But the Committee on Rules provided for three hours' debate originally upon the Moon-Madden bill, so called.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It did.

Mr. WALSH. And these two other bills which have been tacked on to the rule which the gentleman has offered are very important measures, and if taken up in the ordinary course would undoubtedly consume more than three hours.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to my friend that that was discussed in the committee. I think I violate no confidence in saying that there was some suggestion that the debate be cut to two hours on the whole proposition. Finally it was decided that there should be three hours.

Now, if there is any other gentleman who wants to ask me a question on the rule itself, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. NORTON and Mr. BURNETT rose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield first to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if the gentleman thought that bringing in a rule of this kind, containing these two additional bills, was really fair to the House? It occurred to me that the rule should have been printed. The bills that the gentleman has mentioned have been pending for some time, but I have not been able to secure copies of them, and at the desk no provision has been made for Members to secure copies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In answer to that I will say it has been understood for many days that this resolution as to increasing compensation of postal employees would follow immediately after the conclusion of the war finance corporation bill. Word reached the committee late yesterday afternoon, and not all the members of the committee then, that consideration was also desired of these other bills at this time. There was not time to have it printed unless we had disarranged the whole program.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. As I understand from the reading of the rule, it is not the purpose of the committee, nor does the rule, as I understand it, operate as a limitation on the offering of other amendments that are germane?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. BURNETT. It makes these amendments germane without cutting off the right of Members to offer other amendments that are germane?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. It merely makes them in order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Was it not the understanding of the Committee on Rules that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had requested this kind of a rule? The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had a meeting and authorized the chairman to request a rule on the salary bill—on the original salary bill; but, as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I never heard that the chairman of the committee was authorized to ask for a rule on the other bills, and what I want to know is whether the Committee on Rules so understood it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on Rules understood that these measures had been reported favorably from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads came before the Committee on Rules and suggested that they be made in order on this proposition. Whether he did it by direction of the committee or upon his responsibility as chairman I do not know.

Mr. STEENERSON. It must have been on his own motion, because the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads authorized the chairman to ask for a rule on the salary bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Had the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads acted favorably upon these two other bills?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know. I doubt it. I made a minority report on that truck proposition; that is, if it is the same bill. I can not tell whether it is or not, from what I could hear of the reading of it.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOON. In the first place, the rule was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who, as a Member of the House, had a right to go before the Committee on Rules and make the request for its consideration. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads then formally directed the chairman of that committee to make the request. The chairman did not see fit to change the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. So he went before the committee with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and requested the rule on the original bill—House bill 9414. Then the chairman, as he had the right, asked the committee on his own initiative—after having talked with a number of the members of his committee—and requested that these two measures mentioned, with reference to motor trucks and the postal-savings bank, be also added for consideration at this time, because the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had acted favorably on both of those measures, and they had been favorably reported to the House. Now, it is a saving of time and a much more sensible proposition to consider all this legislation at one time than to have three separate measures up for consideration.

Mr. STEENERSON. I simply want it understood that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had not acted on the question of consolidating these three bills into one, as this rule does.

Mr. MOON. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have given no consideration at any meeting of the committee to the question of consolidating these bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wish to say that independent of that the view of the Committee on Rules is that if these propositions are to be considered—and we understand that undoubtedly there would be pressure for their consideration—it is better to consider them now, and it is a saving of time to consider them now.

Now, how much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 11 minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A question about the rule?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Do I understand that all the provisions of the rule were placed in the rule at the request of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, or were some of them placed in the rule on the initiative of the Rules Committee?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. None were placed in the rule on the initiative of the Rules Committee. All that the Rules Committee have reported is that which the committee understood the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had previously reported favorably.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. EMERSON. Does the rule provide the order in which the bill and these other propositions shall be considered? I can not get a copy of the rule to read it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The salary increase bill will be considered first. These other bills will come in as sections at the end of that bill.

I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing unusual or revolutionary about this rule. In the first place, it makes in order the bill for increase of pay for those employed in the Postal Service as distinguished from the postal clerks. The bill will give the House an opportunity to consider the increase of the pay of rural carriers and railway mail clerks and others known as employees in the Postal Service. This, of course, should be done.

This morning the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads notified the Committee on Rules that two important measures had been under consideration by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, one of them a Senate bill and one of them a House bill, and asked the Committee on Rules to permit the House to consider those bills as amendments to the bill for which the original rule had been asked; and in direct answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON], who wanted to know which of these bills would be considered first, I will say that the bill to be considered is the bill for the increase of the pay of the postal employees. These other bills are to be offered as amendments to that bill under the five-minute rule. They are made in order by this rule. Otherwise they would be ruled out on a point of order, not being germane to the bill. This rule simply makes them in order as amendments to the bill increasing the salaries or pay of the postal employees. That is all the rule does. It simplifies the business of the House.

I sincerely hope that the rule will be agreed to, and that the bill increasing the pay of the postal employees will be passed. It is for the House to consider these amendments. They are simply made in order, that is all. The House can reject them or vote them in as it sees fit.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is quite evident that so far as the Madden-Moon bill, increasing the compensation of rural carriers and mail clerks is concerned, there is a universal demand for that bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Now, it is proposed to attach these other bills as riders to that bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not as riders. They will be in order as amendments. The House can accept or reject them, as it sees fit.

Mr. ROBBINS. But would we not be compelled to accept the other two in order to get the first bill through?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There will be a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Members of the House can vote down these amendments if they see fit. If a majority of the House is in favor of them, I take it they will be attached to the bill. If a majority of the House is against them, they will undoubtedly be defeated.

Mr. ROBBINS. There will be ample opportunity to consider these measures?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; undoubtedly. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas, can he let me have 5 minutes of his time? I have 15 minutes promised on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. SNELL. I will be glad if the gentleman will let the gentleman from Tennessee have five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee and the remainder of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, of course, as originally intended, this resolution was to cover only House bill 9414, which simply provided for an increase in the compensation of certain officials and employees of the Post Office Department; but, as I understood, and as the committee understood from the chairman of the Post Office Committee, this other matter had been favorably reported by the committee, and they desired to have it considered at this time; and the rule, as I understand it, simply makes it in order to consider these other things as amendments, and it is simply before the House to take such action as it sees fit and can adopt or reject any or all of it.

Last year, when the House increased the compensation of various employees of the Government, it was intended to increase the compensation of the employees of the Postal Department the same as in other departments.

But on account of a technical ruling by the Treasury Department certain employees of the Post Office Department did not receive the increase. Therefore, these men have been going along this past year trying to meet increased living expense without the increase in pay that various other employees of other departments have received. And it has been not only manifestly unfair to them but absolutely detrimental to the Postal Service, on account of the number of resignations from the service, on account of our failure to give them the much-needed increase that would enable them to meet the increased cost of living in all parts of the country. Our people are accustomed to high efficiency in the Post Office Department, and the efficiency depends entirely upon the men of experience and older in the service, and these men are leaving the service at an alarming rate on account of the failure to act on this salary increase and better opportunities offered in other lines of work at the present time. I am informed that one-third of the employees of the Washington post office have resigned during the last year in order to take advantage of better opportunities offered in other departments of the Government service. And there are a great many others in all parts of the country that will soon do this unless we act on the salary question at an early date and give them the increase that the character of their work so richly deserves. And for the sake of right and justice to the individual employee and continued high efficiency in the Postal Service, I ask for immediate consideration and adjustment of these salary questions. Every one here well knows that the whole country is interested in this legislation. There are no other Government employees that come in so close touch with the people in city, village, and town as the members of the Post Office Department. There are no other employees in whose condition the people everywhere are so vitally interested, and I think I can truthfully say there are no employees, who year after year, winter and summer, hot or cold, wet or dry, continuously render such honest, conscientious, and courteous service as the employees of the Post Office Department.

The Post Office Committee has given very careful consideration to the question and voluminous hearings on the subject of salaries. There appeared before it representatives of every department of the service from all over the country. In addition 132 individual Members of Congress have appeared before the committee and requested this increase in pay for the postal employees and the early consideration by the House.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Has the Post Office Committee held voluminous hearings and filed a voluminous report on the other two measures that have been tacked on by the rule?

Mr. SNELL. It was originally intended to bring in only a rule making increase in salaries of this department in order, but at the request of the chairman of the Post Office Committee the other matters referred to were added to the rule this morning, and I can not inform you as to the hearings on the same.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman understand that the Post Office Committee is unanimous on the other two propositions?

Mr. SNELL. I understood it was a unanimous report.

Mr. WALSH. One is a Senate bill.

Mr. SNELL. I so understand, and that it has been approved by the Senate.

The provision of the bill I am specially interested in is that part which provides for the increased compensation to be paid to the employees of the Postal Service, and the provision in the bill which makes it effective immediately upon its passage. Therefore, I believe it is only fair to the employees of this department that this rule and bill should be acted upon at once, and also that it tends toward increased efficiency of the whole service that this rule should be adopted and the matter receive the immediate consideration by Members of this House.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. EMERSON. I have been listening for some reason why the other two bills were tacked on to the original Madden bill.

Mr. SNELL. It was at the request of the chairman of the Post Office Committee, who thought it was important legislation and it would not take any more time to consider it now than some time latter, and for that reason it was reported by the Rules Committee. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains on this side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. SNELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman if I should yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]?

Mr. NORTON. It would.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this rule, if adopted, will give an opportunity for the consideration of a measure that should have been passed months ago. On the first day of this session I introduced a measure providing for a 25 per cent increase for all postal employees in order that these faithful public servants might receive compensation which would in some degree enable them to meet the situation caused by the skyrocketing prices of the necessities of life.

When the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration I urged immediate action. Since this bill was reported by the committee I have gladly exerted myself to secure the favorable action of the Rules Committee. Now, this rule and the measure are under consideration, and both should be passed by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Speaker, it is a far cry from the beginning of postal service in this country to the present, when the United States Postal System excels any service in the world, its work every day a miracle of achievement. The history of that progress is a record of faithful work and arduous efforts on the part of those employed in the Postal Service.

Still the claims of those who have made the success of the United States system have been neglected. There has been but one increase in their pay in the last 40 years and that was 10 years ago. I maintain that a living wage in 1907 can not be made to cover the cost of living in 1917. The men in the Postal Service have been attempting an impossible task. It is unjust to force them longer to endure such a condition.

I have heard men talk about the necessity of a surplus in the Post Office Department. I submit that the Post Office Department was never intended as a money-making institution. It was established to give efficient postal service. You might as well ask how much money our public-school system is making or what dividends are paid by the fire departments. You can not translate such service into dollars and cents.

In 1885 Congress reduced postage rates when there was a deficit in the department. Newspapers were rated at a cent a pound and in some cases sent free. Franked matter from Governmetn offices was sent out by the ton free of charge. Rural free delivery was established when it was known to all that it would not pay expenses. There was a reason for all this. It was to make the Postal Service a profit-sharing association for the benefit of all the people. Its dividends were to be paid in a more intelligent, enlightened citizenship.

Any talk of a surplus means nothing. The Postmaster General states in his report that there was a surplus of $9,000,000 last year. But First Assistant Postmaster General Koons, in the hearings before the Post Office Committee of this House stated that there was a loss of $72,000,000 on second-class matter; that franked matter would have cost $20,000,000; and that the rural free delivery routes ran behind about $36,000,000.

Figuring these together you have a total which is as correctly the yearly surplus of the Post Office Department as any other figure that can be given. It equals as much as the entire Post Office equipment of the United States, post-office buildings, sites, and equipment.

In other words, there is 100 per cent dividend. No man can justly contend that no increase should be granted postal workers because it would result in a deficit. The first requirement is efficient service, and that can only be obtained through postal employees who are fairly paid and fairly treated.

The present rate of compensation of postal employees has resulted in enforced resignations at an alarming scale. Here is what the postmaster at Pittsburgh, Pa., writes me in urging the passage of this measure:

> The situation in this office at the present time is such as to make it almost hopeless for the Postal Service to keep its full quota of clerks and carriers. During the past year many of the higher-salaried clerks and carriers resigned, owing to the fact that they could secure much higher wages outside the service.

This condition is in evidence in almost every post office in the country, and in the Railway Mail Service as well. At the Pittsburgh terminal railway post office, from June 1, 1917, to February 15, 1918, 627 railway post-office clerks left the service or refused to accept appointments; 59 joined the Army; so that 569 left the service from all other causes. The reason is not hard to find. Substitute railway mail clerks are paid $2.22 a day when they work. The porters around the railroad station, some of whom can not even read or write, are paid $3.40 a day. Such a humiliating situation should not exist for a single day.

Mr. Speaker, the employees of Uncle Sam are entitled to at least a living wage. The postal employees have not been receiving it. The fact is that their salaries have been cut in two by the mounting cost of living.

I hold in my hand the report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which states that the cost of food has increased 31 per cent in the past year alone. In the past 10 years the price of almost every necessary of life has doubled, and still not one cent has been added to the compensation of postal employees. Increases have been made by private employers. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that increases from 38 to 58 per cent have been made in some industries, but the United States Government has lagged behind instead of being in the lead. This bill gives an opportunity to help remedy this intolerable situation.

The reclassification sections of this bill will be most beneficial. It is not generally known that the letter carrier usually puts in nine years of service before he reaches the present maximum of $1,200. That means an average salary of $742 a year. At the same time he is required to perform duties which require brains, ability, and determination. This bill raises the lowest rate to $1,000 and the maximum to $1,500. It will be a worthy step toward fair treatment of faithful employees and increased efficiency.

The measure itself should be amended so that it be made permanent law, and not a temporary measure. There is no just reason for making it apply only to the war period. Then, too, it should provide expressly for the employees who are to receive the higher rates under the new classification. Let us make this a real measure of justice and of permanent benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I number some of my oldest and best friends among the postal employees. I know them and their conditions and their fidelity to duty. They work harder and receive less money in proportion than any other class of Government employees; but they are loyal and faithful, and their efforts to secure additional compensation have been modest, seemly, and worthy of all commendation.

I have here a letter addressed to me by Benjamin F. Metz, president of the Pittsburgh Branch, National Association of Letter Carriers. In it he says:

> I have just noted in the newspaper that the Rules Committee, of which you are a member, has favorably reported a special rule for the consideration of the postal salary-increase measure. To-night, as I write this letter, the heart of every postal employee feels lighter, for he knows that at last this measure is to be given due consideration and that justice will be done these faithful employees. I want to extend to you the earnest thanks of every postal worker. Five years ago—in 1913—you helped splendidly in defeating a provision which would have endangered the Sunday-closing act. Time and again since then you have been our staunch friend and at the same time have fought the battles of the workers of all classes and conditions. You have well earned the gratitude of every believer in justice and a square deal, and the association which I represent extends thanks in full measure.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am glad to stand here and urge support of this measure. It is just recognition of worthy service. It is the square deal translated into action. It will put new heart into a host of hard-working, efficient employees. It will show that this Republic is not ungrateful to its own faithful servants. It will add to postal efficiency and make the Postal Service of greater usefulness than ever before in this critical period of American history. It will be an act worthy of this House of Representatives, and I hope it will pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, if this rule in the manner in which it has been brought in can be justified, then any rule and any hodgepodge method of legislation can be justified. Personally I have no objection to the Madden bill. I am in favor of the Madden bill. As far as I know I am in favor of the other two bills, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] attempts to justify a rule that brings unexpectedly on the floor of this House legislation that is not at all germane to the legislation that Members were given to understand the House would consider here to-day.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. In just a minute. Why not bring in a bill here, under a rule throwing it open to all character and kinds of legislation, if, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] suggests, such procedure would be justified on the ground that it would "expedite" legislation? The reason that the House has had almost since it was first organized among its rules of procedure the rule that amendments which are not germane to the principal legislation brought before the House shall not be in order is to protect and safeguard the public from carelessly considered legislation as well as from undesirable and dangerous legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman interested in a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture authorizing the purchase of seed wheat?

Mr. NORTON. I am very much interested in it. I have wanted that it be enacted long before this time. Let me ask the gentleman why he did not bring that bill in here under this rule as could have been done?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to suggest to the gentleman that he better let us get along and get to that bill quickly.

Mr. NORTON. Why was not that bill made in order under the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Because it had no relation to the Postal Service at all. There is a rule which has been reported to consider that bill, and if the gentleman will let us get to it, we will get to it quickly.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman could just as properly have brought in that bill under this rule as to make in order the bill to authorize experiments in motor-truck and aeroplane delivery of mail.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman says he is in favor of the Madden bill?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MOON. He is opposed, I take it, to the balance of the bill?

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman has no right to suppose that at all. His supposition can only be founded on his imagination and is not correct.

Mr. MOON. What part of this bill does the gentleman call the Madden bill?

Mr. NORTON. I call the bill H. R. 9414 the Madden bill.

Mr. MOON. That is the committee bill. The Madden bill has never been reported to this House.

Mr. NORTON. That is substantially what is frequently spoken of as the Madden bill.

Mr. MOON. No; it is not in substance the Madden bill. There is just one section of the Madden bill on this bill.

Mr. NORTON. Then I will say to the gentleman that I am in favor of the committee bill, H. R. 9414, the bill that it has been generally understood by the membership of this House was to be considered here to-day. I am opposed to this rule because the bringing in of a rule of this kind is a dangerous method of legislative procedure. If that procedure is to be followed in the House, while you may not get any bad legislation in this particular case, it will inevitably result in saddling onto the country legislation jokers—very undesirable legislation; legislation of a kind and character that would not receive favorable consideration in the House if proper and regular legislative procedure in the House were adhered to. I believe that if we are to maintain any order of legislation in this House this rule should be voted down. If these bills that have been suddenly tacked on here are to be considered by the House, they should be brought before the House under the regular and safe procedure of the House, and all Members of the House should have full and fair notice of their consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] takes a very peculiar attitude touching this rule. He says that he is for the Madden bill, but he is against the rule. This rule is the only way in which the Madden bill can be considered, and it is certainly not without precedent in this House.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that it is necessary, to consider the Madden bill, to bring in a rule here placing in order two bills not germane to the Madden bill?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Oh, I once heard a story of a dog running after a rabbit. After the dog had pursued the rabbit over hill and dale, through wood and field, and finally tired to exhaustion, the rabbit fell a prey to its pursuer. The dog, first, bit the rabbit, then licked the rabbit, and finally the rabbit said, "If you are a friend, why bite me? If a foe, why caress me."

Now, if the gentleman is a friend of the employees in the Postal Service of this country he can not be against this rule. Let me cite the gentleman to an occasion here some three years ago, when we brought in a rule for the Agricultural appropriation bill that made in order the standardization of grain, the cotton-warehouse bill, and the cotton-futures act. And, if I recollect correctly, the gentleman made a speech for that rule and voted for it. We did not understand there was any opposition on the part of the gentleman then. Those matters were not germane to the then pending question any more than is this aeroplane experimental transportation or the motor-truck experimental proposition to the main question. But both are very necessary legislation and can very appropriately be considered at this time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that the postal employees of this country in the first and second class post offices should be reclassified and be allowed an increase of pay. No opposition can possibly arise to the slight increase provided for the fourth-class postmasters. Last year we gave an increase in pay to practically all employees in the District of Columbia, but the postal employees did not get an increase, notwithstanding the fact that the living cost has very materially increased. Why, I understand that the rural carriers are resigning at the rate of 50 per cent more than they were during normal times; that last year 6,000 rural carriers in the United States resigned their positions because they were not remunerative. That is a bad condition and we ought to remedy it. These men perform a great service; they do it at times under very adverse conditions, fighting storms, bad roads, and hundreds of other inconveniences. The upkeep of their teams or machines and the general increase in cost of living is so great that certainly we should give these employees a reasonable increase. The adoption of this rule is the only way to do it.

Mr. Speaker, the aeroplane has come to stay. In a few years immediately following the war these aeroplanes and the men in that service will be utilized in carrying the mail from city to city. It is well that at this time we begin an experimental service, so that the system in time can be perfected. Why, I can not believe the gentleman from North Dakota would object to the provision in the bill that will permit the farmers of North Dakota to load their dairy and farm products on motor trucks at their front gates and carry them into the city, there to be sold. I have always thought the gentleman was a friend of the farmers of his section, but certainly if he opposes that provision in the bill—and that seems to be the one that he is driving at—he is doing the farmers of his section a very great injustice. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman knows he is making an unfair argument.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I think it is right along the line the gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman knows he is not making a fair argument, and he knows that I never said anything in opposition to the merit of the three measures mentioned.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Here is what I understood the gentleman to say. Let us see if I am correct. The gentleman is criticizing the Rules Committee because they are tacking on two other propositions to the Madden bill. One of those propositions is to try out an experimental motor system, so that the farmers of North Dakota and elsewhere can carry their dairy products and their farm products to market. The other provides for an experimental aviation service. Now, the gentleman is opposing these provisions. He says he would have no criticism of the Rules Committee if they had brought in a rule merely to make in order the Madden bill. Do I misunderstand the gentleman?

Mr. NORTON. If the gentleman will yield.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. NORTON. My argument was that when a rule is brought in and it is announced to 435 Members of this House that a certain bill is to be considered, and Members who are here and Members who are not understand that, that it is not a proper procedure to bring in two other bills under that rule.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. We are providing the means to do the farmers some good in this country, as well as giving to a class of governmental employees a very deserved increase in their pay. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the additional drain upon the Treasury this measure entails. I am also cognizant of the stupendous claims this war era demands and the uneasiness created in the minds of the public how we are to meet all the obligations. I agree that it is a time of all times when individual and Government must economize and conserve, as well as exercise the maximum energy in production. These considerations might lead to a conclusion that at this time there should not be an attempt to reclassify the Postal Service. I know opponents of this measure can make strong representations along this line.

But, Mr. Speaker, in this case, as in all others, real economy is not measured by size of the pay roll. If it was, then the smaller it is the greater the economy. The thing demanded in all Government service is the highest degree in efficient results. The Government will always stand ready to pay for service and pay a figure commensurate with the demands entailed. The Postal Service is the one great institution that brings the citizen and Government face to face. Every time a citizen enters the Federal building he is within the shelter of Uncle Sam; he faces one of Uncle Sam's live representatives; he transacts his business with his Government. He may not be fully aware of the stupendous operations of the lines of communications between citizen and citizen, whether living in the same city or county or whether in the remotest parts of the back country and, it may be, of the world. He certainly does not realize the most rigid responsibilities, under the severest penalties, the most exacting regulations as to character of service, hours of service, and details demanding a degree of ability above the average and a type of character suited to dealing with the public that is able to insure decent and cordial treatment in spite of the daily provocation to display the opposite, due to fickle public in its unreasonable demands. This service demands gentlemanly conduct, no matter what the provocation may be. This entails a higher than the average ability. The rate of pay in the Postal Service is too low. This bill promises a rating more commensurate with the importance of the country's work, more in keeping with the demands of efficient public service, and more adapted to the character of ability required to insure public satisfaction. I shall vote for it in the belief that the real economy the Nation demands is that which will insure the greatest efficiency and will place the Nation's public service on a plane where the maximum effort will be assured. I shall hope to see steps taken to insure relief in other channels in these days of high cost of living, such especially as will grant relief to the few surviving Union soldiers still among us.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have only one more speech.

Mr. SNELL. I have one more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman desire me to proceed now?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this rule is liberal and absolutely fair. It simply provides for giving the House of Representatives an opportunity to consider certain measures which it specifically points out. One of them is the bill H. R. 9414; the others are the two bills which have been mentioned, to wit, Senate bill 2718 and House bill 8637, both of which have been reported to the House by the Post Office Committee. It does not cut off any right of amendment of any kind or description, but it gives the House an opportunity to promptly take them up for consideration, with full opportunity to offer amendments for the consideration of the House when they are taken up. Now, the criticism of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is certainly unjust in view of the fact that these bills are both very short. They can be read and easily understood in a very short space of time. He will have opportunity to offer amendments to them, if he sees fit to offer them for consideration. If they were long and extensive in their provisions and difficult to understand and had complicated questions involved in them, then the criticism which he offers might be justified, but in view of the fact that they are short, simple, and easily understood the criticism, it seems to me, is without merit. Now, in this bill, H. R. 9414, of which this rule, if adopted, will give us prompt consideration, I want to call attention to the fact that it contains a provision which is as follows: "That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum increased allowance up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles." This is a just recognition of the honest, efficient, and faithful service being rendered by these employees of the Government of the United States who carry the mails day by day to the homes of the people. The Post Office Department states that there are no more efficient, faithful, honest, and competent employees in the Postal Service than are the rural letter carriers. They travel their routes amid the snows, sleets, and freezing cold of winter, as well as the intense heat and driving rains of summer. Whether the roads are good or bad, whether the clouds are dark and dreary or the sunshine is bright and cheerful, you will find these efficient public servants faithfully discharging their every duty to the delight and comfort of their patrons to whom they carry always the welcome visitor—the daily mail—carrying not only the important business mail but the sweet and affectionate messages of husband to wife, of mother to son, of sweethearts to each other, thus helping the commerce of the Nation in prompt delivery of business mail and making the people happy in prompt dispatch of personal mail. The carrier is thus a public benefactor deserving our kindest consideration. [Applause.]

The expenses of the rural letter carriers have increased enormously, and the facts absolutely show that they have increased to such an extent in increased cost of equipment, feed for his horses, and so forth, that their necessary and unavoidable expense takes away a very large part of the salary which they are receiving, and at the present time, by reason of that fact, many of them are resigning. A few days ago I was in the Post Office Department and I saw a postmaster there from a distant State who came into the Post Office Department to confer with the representative of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, who has, to a considerable extent, the management of the Rural Free Delivery Service, in reference to securing the services of carriers, and he said that in his office they were resigning day by day, and that he could not keep them in the service. That when vacancies occurred the substitute would try it for a while and quit, and he was having a lot of trouble to give the people prompt and necessary service. I wish I had time to longer discuss this situation. I hope this just and equitable provision will appeal to all, and when considered unanimously pass. [Applause.] Now, I call attention to another provision in this bill. It is in reference to fourth-class postmasters, and is as follows:

SEC. 3. That postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as provided by law prior to the passage of the act of Congress, "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses and other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations up to and including $100 quarterly.

This is a just and very reasonable provision. I introduced a bill myself on December 5, 1917, in which it was provided that fourth-class postmasters receive "all of the first $100 cancellation of stamps in his office" and a percentage of additional cancellations, and also "such a sum for rents, fuel, and lights as in the discretion of the Postmaster General may be just and right." I wish this latter provision in my bill was in the pending bill. It is not, but I am glad the first provision for the $100 cancellation is in the pending bill. The fourth-class postmasters have to pay all the expenses of their business. The Government pays the expense of the first-class post offices and second-class post offices and third-class post offices, but when it comes to the fourth-class post office the postmaster has to pay for his rent, he has to pay for his light, and he has to pay for his fuel and all of the expenses of his office. Do you think that just and right? I do not. For the fourth-class postmaster to receive the $100 cancellation provided for in the bill to be considered under this rule is at least some recognition of the faithful service which they are performing throughout the country. They should receive it, and I trust you will vote for this rule, so the bill can be considered and this provision enacted into law. They are resigning because they can not afford to discharge the duties required of them for the remuneration which they are receiving at the present time. Do them, at last, this tardy partial justice. [Applause.]

There are other provisions in the bill in reference to city carriers, postal clerks, railway mail clerks, laborers, messengers, and other efficient employees to which I direct your attention, but my limited time forbids my discussing them in detail. I know you will examine them and by voting for this rule give the House an opportunity to consider them, and upon consideration to do what is deemed just, honest, equitable, and right by all whose interest is in any way involved in the several provisions of the bill. To adopt the rule secures consideration. Therefore let us vote to adopt it. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York yields the remnant of his time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman yielded me five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for one minute, then.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the House, if I may, on this proposition. In this bill, House bill 9414, the department clerks are covered. It is the understanding that the department clerks, having been taken care of in the amendment that was provided to the legislative appropriation bill, the committee is going to move to strike them from this bill when the time arrives.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this rule because it gives the House an opportunity to enact legislation of urgent necessity for the postal employees of the Government. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] stated that many men had found it necessary to resign from the service because of the small pay they had been receiving. This is true not only as to the service in the country and small post offices, but especially so in the large cities. Many valued and experienced employees in the post office at St. Louis, Mo., have found it necessary to leave the service because they were not able to live decently and provide necessities and education for their families. Not only, Mr. Speaker, have many been compelled to resign because of the poor pay, but also many others have had to leave due to the fact that the Post Office Department has been applying the gag rule, so much criticized years ago. Postal employees have been called before their superiors and condemned, criticized, and abused unmercifully in many instances because of the connection that the postal employees have with organizations that have for their purpose the betterment of the service. I believed that when Congress enacted the antigag law in the Sixty-second Congress that the postal officials would respect it. That law was enacted August 24, 1912, and is found in section 6 of the Statutes at Large, and, in part, is as follows:

The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress or to any committee or member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with.

Notwithstanding that law, the postmaster of the post office at St. Louis, Mo., on December 15 last, had printed and distributed to all the employees a "special notice and warning to all employees." This notice prohibited any employee from furnishing information on any matter pertaining to the business of the office or the needs of the employees to any persons outside of the service unless permission was first had from either the Post Office Department or the postmaster. This order, in effect, forbids the right of post-office employees to petition Congress, their Representatives in Congress, or any committee of Congress regarding their betterment or their grievances, or to ask for investigation, and so forth, for the purpose of improving the service. In other words, the right given by the Congress to postal employees in the law referred to is being ignored and denied, so far as the Post Office Department is able to do. In fact, it is in effect a repeal of the law of the United States by the executive department of the Government. Congress voted for this law by a large majority of its Members, and I am sure that they want it respected even by the Postmaster General and his subordinates, who are wont to rule with an iron hand over the many faithful and efficient clerks, carriers, and other employees of the Postal Department.

The Postmaster General is opposed to employees acquainting the public with the true state of affairs within the service, yet he maintains a publicity bureau in the department, the sole function of which is to boost the present postal administration. One example of the activity of this news bureau is the fact that on the 22d of December last, three days before Christmas, it sent out a statement to the effect that, though the Christmas mail was 25 per cent heavier than ever before, it was worked up with little or no delay. This notice was sent out three days before the Christmas mail was really received. In other words, the department's press agent had the mail all disposed of before the mail was in the post offices. We all know that the Christmas mail, unless it be for distant points, is not mailed three days before Christmas. It is evident, therefore, that the press bureau of the Postmaster General does not always furnish information or facts, but ofttimes misinformation. Practically the only way to obtain correct information is from the splendid men and women who work in minor positions and who know of the difficulties of rendering efficient service because of the fault or faults being higher up. What Congress wants to know is how to give the country better service than we are now receiving and have been receiving for a number of years in the Post Office Department. If the post-office clerks and carriers and the members of organizations of which these men and women are members are to be denied the right to petition Congress and to write their Representatives the true situation, then there is not much hope for an improvement in the horrible service that we are now receiving in the Post Office Department.

I am unable to understand how the President, knowing these conditions and the violation of this act of Congress, as he must, permits it, for we have the views of the President concerning such matters of record. From his work on Congressional Government, published some years ago, I find this language:

> Unless Congress have and use every means of acquainting itself with the acts and disposition of the administrative agents of the Government the country must be helpless to learn how it is being served, and unless Congress both scrutinize these things and sift them by every form of discussion the country must remain in embarrassing and crippling ignorance of every force which it is most important it should understand and direct.
> The informing function of Congress should be specially preferred, even to its legislative function. The argument is not only that the discussed and interrogated administration is the only pure and efficient administration, but, more than that, that the only well self-governing people is that people which discusses and interrogates its administration.

Mr. Speaker, I am personally acquainted with hundreds of the efficient employees in the post office of my city, St. Louis. They are men and women of integrity and ability; they have been giving most efficient service; their pay has been and is very small. These employees are as good citizens in every respect as we have in our city. Many of them have served in their positions for many years. This bill will give to them some increase in their salaries. It is not enough, considering the conditions in which we are at present living. This bill provides only for this increase during the next fiscal year, but I understand it is the intention of the Post Office Committee to offer an amendment to make this provision for increase a permanent law. If no member of the committee does so, I shall myself offer it, believing, as I do, that the needs are not only temporary but are permanent. I congratulate the Committee on Post Offices for bringing in this bill. It speaks the sentiment of Members of Congress generally as to needs of an increase in pay for the postal employees. It is another evidence of the fact also that the House of Representatives is willing to assume the responsibility for legislation for the benefit of the Postal Service and its employees, even though it has not the support of the Postmaster General and other officials of that department whose judgment and action he controls. I mean, of course, his principal assistants and the postmasters throughout the country whose appointments are made more on the ground of their partisanship than their ability to handle this great department of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The question was taken, and the rule was adpoted.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time provided for general debate on this bill be controlled by the chairman of the committee and the ranking gentleman on the other side, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate on this bill be divided half and half between himself and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINT OF INDUSTRIAL CREDITS BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the Senate war finance corporation bill as it passed the Senate, together with the House amendments, be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the Senate finance corporation bill as it passed the Senate and also as it passed the House be printed. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INCREASED COMPENSATION, EMPLOYEES POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Accordingly the House automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9414, with Mr. CARAWAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, there is no question that we approach that gives more difficulty than the settlement of the question of salaries. And in this particular department of the Government it is, perhaps, more difficult than elsewhere, by reason of the fact that the compensation of employees in the Postal Department is computed in so many various ways. A flat per cent, perhaps, would not do justice to the greater portion of the employees in that department, as it would in the other departments, because of the fact that under the law as it exists and the discretion that is in the department with reference to some of these salaries, and the arbitrary rule fixed as to the manner of computing salaries in others, makes it impossible to utilize any one rule for the control of the salaries. I think it is hardly necessary for me to say that we can not now justly measure the compensation of employees of the Government by the rules that existed when the living conditions of the country were better than they are now. Nor is it necessary for me to advise this House, because it is well known to us all, as to the increased cost of living, and therefore the inadequacy now of a salary that obtained during the period when living was cheaper.

The committee has attempted, and it has done the best it can, the adjustment of the salaries of the postal employees. It is understood by the House that there is a distinction between the departmental employees and the postal employees. When we speak of the employees of the Government in the department, we mean those employees engaged in the service of the Government at the seat of government. When we speak of the Postal Service, we mean the whole service performed by the Post Office Department throughout the United States and in those foreign countries where it has a service.

As I remarked in the beginning, it is exceedingly hard to arbitrarily fix a just rate of compensation. No one wants to give more than is just, because we all want to protect the Government and the people the best we can in the proper distribution and the use of the revenues. Nor does any just man want to give less than ought to be given. Now, perhaps it is true that the cost of living has advanced 33 per cent; some people think it has increased more than that. A salary that was adequate before that advance is not now adequate, and yet we have not undertaken to cover by the increase in this bill the full cost of living.

But we have, in the figures fixed, required some measure of sacrifice on the part of employees, and we have fixed only the salaries that we think meet the present condition.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman refers to the increased cost of living. Does not that also affect those who do not work for the Government as well as those who do work for the Government?

Mr. MOON. Of course it does. There is no question about that. But we are not dealing with the salaries of those who do not work for the Government.

Mr. HELM. I grant you that is true, but the men who do not work for the Government, the men who have not got Government jobs, and have to eke out their own living—those men have to sustain the increased cost of living to their families and then have this added burden of aiding these people covered by this bill, and that results in increased taxes on them.

Mr. MOON. Well, they may pay a little of it, but not much. People in that fix do not pay much revenue to any government.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MOON. I will answer your question, but I do not want the gentleman to put a speech in my remarks. It is true we are not dealing with the people outside of the Government employ, and it may be true that the salaries on the outside are not increased in proportion with those that we propose to increase, but I think that wherever a man is worthy of his employment he should receive a just measure of pay, and we can not in this House take outside salaries as a rule or standard of adjustment of salaries of the men who give their time and brains to the United States service, but it is perhaps also true that salaries in general have increased much.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MOON. For a question; yes.

Mr. HELM. What will the aggregate increase of this bill amount to?

Mr. MOON. I will answer that after a while. I will reach that before I finish and put in the RECORD as Exhibit C a statement from the Post Office Department as to increased cost and expense under this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we come to the consideration, as we do in this bill, of the salaries of rural carriers, I want to observe that in my judgment, and that is the view of the department, if the rural-carrier system or service of the United States were placed on a contract basis, embracing the 43,800 routes in the United States, the mail could be carried over them successfully under that system at a decrease of more than $20,000,000 to this Government below the cost at which it is now carried.

It is also true that upon many of the routes the service is of short duration and on some long, but the diversity of routes in the United States, due to the diversity in the topography of the country, is such that it is absolutely impossible for a committee or for any Government to fix a rule that will be exactly just to all in all cases.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. In a moment.

Now, for this service there has been gradually an increase of compensation, until the salaries now, on a standard route of 24 miles, are $1,200 per annum, and they go down in proportion to the decrease in the length of the route.

This bill provides for an increase of 15 per cent upon the salary of each carrier under the existing conditions, and it provides for $24 per mile for every mile per annum traveled in excess of the standard route of 24 miles.

"Why," you ask this committee, "do you make that increase?" The answer has been made before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads by 151 Members of this House. It has also been made by a vast number of others, and the facts have been furnished by the department. The cost of maintaining vehicles and the horses that draw them, where they are horse-drawn vehicles, has gone up nearly 100 per cent in many sections of the country, and that has increased the cost of living in many sections of the country, and, of course, the cost of living has gone up to those carriers. So to-day, according to the proof as it is laid before the committee, the salaries are perhaps 25 per cent less than they were two years ago, although measured in dollars and cents they are the same. We have felt that it was but just to these men who were performing this service and have no other means of subsistence that they be cared for, in part at least, as to the increased cost of the service that they are required to maintain.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman spoke of the contract system for the rural mail. We hear a good deal about that from the Post Office Department. Why do they advocate the contract system for the rural carrier and never say a word about applying that system to the city carriers and the railway-mail clerks? Would you save money in the delivery of city mail on the contract system, and in the same way in the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman does not understand me as advocating that system. I am simply stating the naked facts, as taken from the reports of the department and the information that we have. I have not a bit of doubt that if every bit of it were placed under contract it could be done at a less figure than now, because you can not handle the vast number of men in that service as easily as contractors could handle them. Officials of the Government of the United States, while always regarded as exceedingly competent, are not always competent and are not always careful supervisory officials. They are not personally interested.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would not the same reason for placing the rural-delivery mail under the contract system apply to the city-delivery mail?

Mr. MOON. It might. I was speaking of the contract system. If the gentleman will allow me to digress for a moment——

Mr. RAMSEYER. If there is a difference, what is it?

Mr. MOON. I do not know that there is a material difference. But, talking about putting the Post Office under the contract system, I had once a written proposition from men who were backed by property worth $100,000,000 to take the Postal System of the United States—the transportation of the mails—and, still retaining it under the dominant control of the Postmaster General and in obedience to the law, it proposed to take over all these offices and, under a contract to reorganize the system and to pay every dollar of expense of the whole Post Office Department, including the whole Postal Service and the departmental service, and turn over a profit at the end of a year of $15,000,000 to this Government; and they claimed they could put in their own private pockets $20,000,000 for their own use. Whether it can be done or not I do not know. I refer to it merely as an idea of contract and the possibilities that may arise under a service where it is contracted for rather than an official service like this. Of course, I know it could not be done under the law and the Constitution, so far as the full control of the whole department is concerned, nor would it be advisable in all respects if it could be done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any other country that has its mail delivered under a contract system such as the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. MOON. I do not know. Some countries have pretty much the same system as ours. Ours is borrowed largely from other countries.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman has not in mind any country that delivers its mail by contract?

Mr. MOON. No; not to any greater extent than we do. We have a contract system for the star routes. The star-route service is costing less in proportion than the rural service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There are not very many star routes now.

Mr. MOON. That is an illustration, right in our own country, of the difference between the two systems. The one is just as efficient as the other. There is no question about that. We stand here protecting our carriers in this service in our districts, and we know—every one of us who has thought about it at all—that a better service could be rendered for less money; but this is a fixed service and we are not going to quit it, and I am not proposing to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In colonial days the mail was delivered in this country under a contract system, was it not?

Mr. MOON. I am not familiar with that old system. I do not know how it was done. I was not here then. [Laughter.] But I must pass from that. I feel justified in recommending to the House this rural-carrier proposition, and I do it only upon the ground that it is necessary in consequence of the method and system now adopted for the carrying of the mail to readjust these salaries.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman very properly and correctly said a while ago that the reason for these proposed increases is on account of the increased cost of living.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I notice that the first part of this bill, H. R. 9414, provides that it shall be in effect during the period of the war and for 90 days after the proclamation of peace, and so forth.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman contemplate that there will be such a great change within 90 days after peace is declared as will obviate the necessity for this increase?

Mr. MOON. I think it was regarded as hardly wise to make this a permanent increase. Yet we wanted to carry it perhaps beyond the terms of an annual appropriation bill, as the increase adopted the other day with reference to other employees was.

Conditions are entirely different in time of war than they will be afterwards, and I assume that within 90 days after peace there will be a great difference from the way things are during the war.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman may be right, but my idea is that it will take 6 months or 12 months, and perhaps longer, after the end of the war before we see any material difference.

Mr. MOON. It may be 12 years before we see peace. I do not know anything about that. Now I want to pass from that section.

Mr. HASTINGS. Before the gentleman passes from that section will he yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Just for a question. I do not want to take up much time here, and I want to get on with this bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the provision giving $24 per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles apply to motor-drawn as well as horse-drawn vehicles?

Mr. MOON. It applies to all alike.

Mr. HASTINGS. Just one other question. On page 2——

Mr. MOON. Wait until we get to page 2.
Mr. HASTINGS. It is not the same section.
Mr. MOON. All right, if it is in the same section.
Mr. HASTINGS. I want to ask about the increase to letter carriers in the city delivery service.
Mr. MOON. I have not gotten to that yet. Wait until I get there.
Mr. HASTINGS. I wanted to ask if that applied to village delivery as well as city delivery.
Mr. MOON. No. Villages and cities are not the same thing.
Mr. HASTINGS. I know; but I do not see where there is any provision for an increase in the compensation for village delivery.
Mr. MOON. There is none.
Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I wanted to know.
Mr. MOON. The gentleman is right about that. There is no such provision. Now, passing from this, I want to go to the section that provides for the compensation of clerks. That is an illustration of the fact that you can not properly compensate, either by a flat or graduated scale, all of the officials of the department. The clerks have certain fixed salaries. At this time they enter the first grade at $800 and go on through the grades continuously. Now, this bill does not give the clerks or carriers—and I may discuss the two together—the 15 per cent increase, but it gives promotion to the clerks and to the carriers. Instead of entering the service at $800 a year they will enter at $1,000, and they are promoted up to the highest grade. Now, this is the section that is known as the Madden section of the bill. It is a matter with which my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], is very familiar, and which I want him to discuss more at length than I do. The increase provided by this method of payment, this automatic promotion that is provided for in this bill, I am advised by gentlemen who have looked into it, will amount to about 15 per cent. Some think it will be 18 per cent. I take it that it is hard to tell exactly what the increase will be, because we do not know exactly what the number of clerks will be of the different grades.
Mr. GORDON. An increase from $800 to $1,000 a year is an increase of 25 per cent, is it not?
Mr. MOON. Yes; but that does not run all the way through.
Mr. GORDON. That was the only instance the gentleman mentioned, and that is an increase of 25 per cent.
Mr. MOON. I understand that.
Mr. MADDEN. If the chairman will permit me, when you go from $1,400 to $1,500 at the top, you would not call that an increase of 25 per cent?
Mr. MOON. Oh, no. I want to say that you have got to count the increase upon the whole—the aggregate increase.
Mr. BLACK. In order that the House may clearly understand this reclassification, is it not a fact that each class is raised $200 per annum?
Mr. MOON. Oh, no.
Mr. GORDON. The gentleman just said from $1,400 to $1,500. That is $100.
Mr. MOON. Some of them are raised $200 a year, but not all. This is an increase that is going to cost the Treasury a good deal of money. I will ask permission to place in the RECORD a statement from the Post Office Department in reference to the cost to the Government of the increase in the salaries, including this very provision which the gentleman here is discussing. It is a more intelligent statement of the approximate cost than I could make, because I am not as familiar with it as they are. It is well for the House to know what the position of the department is in reference to this measure. I do not understand that the department is opposed to the increase of salary. They may be opposed perhaps to the amount, but not to the principle of increase. Under the statement of the department, which I am going to place in the RECORD, it will show that the whole increase under the bill would be about $25,685,000 for the first year. If gentlemen desire to examine the details of it they will find in that statement the approximate cost of this measure.
Now, in this brief and disconnected presentation of the bill to the House, I want to refer later to the increase provided for assistant postmasters. Additional compensation to postmasters at the first and second class post offices is not provided for in the bill. I intend to move to strike out the words "departmental clerks" in this bill so that there will be no conflict between this bill and one passed a few days ago in the House. We provide also for watchmen, messengers, and laborers, as provided for in section 2, of 15 per cent increase. That is on the same theory that we have already discussed.
Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOON. Yes.
Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman state what the substitute carriers now get?
Mr. MOON. They get 35 cents. I am taking up the sections and briefly considering them, because I can not discuss them in full.
The provision for fourth-class postmasters in section 3 is badly worded, and is not printed exactly as it came from the committee. I am going to offer an amendment. It was not intended to appropriate any of the increased postage on first-class matter for war revenue—that is, the excess over 2 cents. The purpose was to amend the existing law under which for the first quarter they receive 50 per cent of $100 salary, and so on. We propose to amend it so as to double the compensation, by allowing 100 per cent instead of 50 per cent on first $100, and I will offer an amendment to that effect.
Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOON. Yes.
Mr. EMERSON. I want to inquire about the grades, on top of page 2.
Mr. MOON. I have gone over that and prefer not to go back to it. I am on another section of the bill.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOON. Yes.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want to ask the gentleman about the fourth-class postmasters. I did not catch how he proposed to make the increase.
Mr. MOON. Of the first $100 that is collected by cancellation in the fourth-class office the postmaster gets now 50 per cent. We are providing that he shall have 100 per cent. I will offer an amendment to change the language, as it does not seem exactly what the committee intended.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Under the present language he would get the war revenue on first-class matter, the additional cent?
Mr. MOON. Yes; and that is why I may offer an amendment.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This bill carries nothing for the increase of clerk hire.
Mr. MOON. The law provides for that now.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I meant to speak of clerks at the second and third class post offices.
Mr. MOON. I am obliged to my friend from Oklahoma for referring to the third-class post offices. The committee has not seen fit to make any recommendation in reference to that office. In fact, it has made no recommendation for additional compensation except for the fourth-class offices, and that for obvious reasons. A third-class postmaster gets between one and two thousand dollars per annum. If he gets in the office receipts between $1,900 and $2,100 he gets a thousand dollars per annum, and so on up until you reach $2,000. He is allowed under the law not in excess of $500 for rent, $100 for fuel, and he is allowed compensation, in the judgment of the Postmaster General, for hire of assistants in the office. That must of necessity be left within the discretion of the Postmaster General.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is there any limitation on the amount of clerk hire that the department can allow him to expend?
Mr. MOON. Yes; there is a limitation on that. I have forgotten the exact amount, but the gentleman can find it by reference to the postal laws. I think it is $800 in larger third-class offices. The Postmaster General fixes that in conformity to the service performed in the office, and the necessities of the service. There are various provisions affecting various conditions. As a whole, we did not feel it necessary to increase the salaries of these gentlemen that may reach $2,000 per annum.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not think it would be necessary to increase the salaries, but if what some of these officials state is true they certainly are not getting sufficient for clerk hire.
Mr. MOON. I can not give the gentleman the amount, because the amount is within the discretion of the Postmaster General. Such an allowance is made as seems to be necessary to meet the conditions, and must be left that way. Sometimes there are very unusual conditions in the office, and extra men would be allowed at one place that would not be allowed at another. You can not have a general rule covering the whole country as to the pay of the third-class postmaster when there is such a difference in the service, such a difference in the character and value of the service.
Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOON. Yes.
Mr. RUSSELL. Is not the limit allowed for clerk hire in third-class post offices largely based on appropriations made by Congress for that purpose?
Mr. MOON. Of course. While the statute gives the Postmaster General discretion in dealing with this question of clerk hire, and so forth, if the appropriation does not carry enough money, of course the Postmaster General can not comply with the requests, but I think the appropriation act this year will carry it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have frequently been advised by the gentleman in charge of salaries, and so on, that he believes that this was a legitimate demand in favor of an increase, because of an increase in business, but that I will have to wait until next July, because the appropriation was not sufficient.

Mr. MOON. Unquestionably where it is not sufficient the Postmaster General can not carry out the mandates of the statute.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will not the gentleman change his statement from saying that he has frequently been told that by the Post Office Department to saying that he has been invariably told that?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think "frequently" covers the gentleman's statement as well.

Mr. MOON. That is a row between the Post Office people and you gentlemen.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have never had any other reply from the Post Office Department than that the appropriation was exhausted, and that we would have to wait until after June 30.

Mr. MOON. If they have not the money they can not supply it. That means simply this, as a rule, that you are asking more than you ought to in some places.

Mr. HASTINGS. I know of one case where there is a third-class post office——

Mr. MOON. I can not yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Just a minute.

Mr. MOON. No; not a minute.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me just make this statement—where they were allowed the great sum of $5 a month for clerk hire, and they were generous enough to increase it to $6.

Mr. MOON. It is possible that that is a case where they ought not to have even allowed $5. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to page 2, the latter part of section 1.

Mr. MOON. I have passed that. I do not want to go back to a discussion of that. The gentleman will excuse me. What does he want to know?

Mr. KEARNS. I see you have taken care of all the clerks with the exception of 120 chief clerks.

Mr. MOON. Chief clerks?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes; that this bill does not increase their salaries.

Mr. MOON. It is not our intention to increase the salaries of the chief clerks, the supervising officials, in this bill. They start in at about $2,000.

Mr. KEARNS. You have increased the salaries of grade 10 clerks to $2,000, getting the same as these chief clerks.

Mr. MOON. Who has?

Mr. KEARNS. Grade 9 at $1,900, grade 10 at $2,000.

Mr. MOON. Oh, those are the automatic promotions of the postal clerks.

Mr. KEARNS. Oh, that is what they are.

Mr. MOON. Of course, to the supervisory gentlemen we are not giving any attention at all. They are getting enough now.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I do not want to take all of this time in general debate. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 35 minutes.

Mr. MOON. I must not yield for many more questions, though I will yield now to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. The first section of the bill provides that clerks in the sixth grade, as I understand it, with salaries running from $1,000 to $1,500, shall have a certain increase. Will the gentleman state how many clerks there are now and what the salaries are?

Mr. MOON. There are the same number of classes. I will leave that question for the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois. I have discussed it already. I have passed from that several times and I can not go back to it.

I come now to section 4, which provides:

That the Postmaster General shall have authority to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route and screen wagon service with a view to adjusting compensation and adjust the same in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment.

Owing to the conditions existing in every branch of the service which are at such variance with the conditions that existed at the time the contracts were made, it is thought best to let the department readjust these matters so that the department would pay really the value for the service that it is having done.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that there are a number of other contracts, printing contracts, in which contractors are losing all of their fortunes in attempting to carry out contracts with the Government. It is well for us to make men stand by their contracts and make the securities stand by them, but where conditions have so radically changed as to overwhelm a contractor in attempting to carry out a contract, and where the Government if it were to make a contract to-day could not make it for twice the amount that it had made the contract for previously, we have thought it well in the interest of equity and good conscience to allow the Postmaster General to readjust these contracts as to the screen-wagon service and the star route service, and I have no doubt that this bill ought to be amended in that respect to cover other contracts.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman feel in view of the fact that the department has not shown much liberality in matters of this kind in the past that this provision protects the interest of star carriers sufficiently?

Mr. MOON. I think so. The star carrier nor the screen-wagon man has any legal right to demand any action at all.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I appreciate that as a matter of law that is true, but in view of the further statement of the gentleman that many of these have made improvident contracts growing out of the large increase in necessary expenses, would it not be prudent to insert a provision to the effect that if the star carrier is dissatisfied with the adjustment offered he may, on giving 60 days' notice in writing, have the right to surrender his contract?

Mr. MOON. No; never. You take away from the Government its right to confer all the power upon the other contractors. We do not intend to deprive the Government of the right to hold a man to a contract who ought to be held. We are simply giving the right to the Government, in a case where it would be bad conscience not to do it, to correct it. The other way you simply say to the Government of the United States: "You can make a contract, and the contract you have made shall be binding upon you but not upon the other side."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Since you have left such a broad discretion in the department and provided no real increase, it occurred to me it ought to be safeguarded.

Mr. MOON. You have got to make the statute directory or you have got to make it mandatory, and you never ought to make a mandatory statute on the department for the release of contractors who are under bond and securities to perform a duty for the Government.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. FIELDS. Does not the gentleman think it might be well to guarantee to the star-route carrier a certain increase, the same as you have guaranteed to the rural carriers?

Mr. MOON. Why, no. The star-route contractor is dealing at arm's length with the Government. He is a contractor; he has entered into a contract for the purpose of making money out of the Government, and if he fails it is his misfortune. The other man is the servant of the Government, performing that duty which he is directed to do. There is no analogy between the two, in my judgment.

Mr. FIELDS. Both are performing services for the Government.

Mr. MOON. And, as suggested, there are different star-route services. The service is by no means the same always. No; we can not afford to make the Government powerless in these matters by mandatory statute, but we can afford to vest discretion in the executive officers of the Government to relieve where the conditions are unjust, inequitable, and it is a mercy to the contractor.

Mr. FIELDS. I realize the force of the chairman's argument with regard to what might grow out of permitting contractors to surrender their contracts, but it is a fact that the star-route carriers are poorly paid.

Mr. MOON. That is their fault and nobody else; they made the contract.

Mr. FIELDS. In cases where there have been abnormal increases——

Mr. MOON. That is just what we intend to relieve. There are instances, some of them before this House now, where the conditions have been so radically changed since the contract was made that it would be entirely unjust for the Government to hold the contractor to the contract, but it will not do to give relief in cases of that kind to pass a general statute and throw down the bars and let every man go over who wants to do so. There must be discretionary power lodged in the department and not a mandatory statute forcing the department to abrogate Government contracts at the will of the man making the contract.

Mr. FIELDS. Most all of the arguments in favor of the increased compensation for the various Government employees have been based upon the ground of the increased cost of living within the last few months. Is not that the fact in the case of the star-route carrier?

Mr. MOON. Possibly so, but the gentleman fails to catch the very clear, just, and legal distinction between the two classes of services.

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, well, I am not taking advantage of a legal technicality——

Mr. MOON. I make a contract with you. I may release you from it, but you have no right to demand it. The Government makes a contract with an individual for the carrying of mail. It may be a hard contract, but the Government, controlled by the Congress—it can not act without its authority—ought to have the right to ameliorate the condition; but we ought not to give the contractor himself the right to say what shall be done or shall not be done, because it would be but an idle performance for the Government to make the contract. Now, when you come to a servant of the Government, a man who is paid by salary, he has got no voice in it at all, but you give or take from him as you see fit in the way of salary.

Mr. FIELDS. But he enters into a contract with the Government when he accepts the position, and you enter into a contract with the star-route carrier, and if you increase the one because of the increased cost of living why not increase the other?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman and I are so far apart as to our understanding of the character of the services and the obligations existing in the one case under contract and the other as a discretionary pay by the Government to its employees that there is no room whatever to discuss that question. The fact that we say as a Congress that our employees in the Postal Service ought to have more money because of that condition is no sort of an argument to relieve a man who has gone into a contract with his eyes open to perform a certain duty.

Mr. FIELDS. Here is a man who went in with his eyes wide open, too.

Mr. MOON. He can not act alone at his will.

Mr. FIELDS. He can, but the star-route carrier can not. You are giving an increase to a man who can get out and go if he wishes, but you refuse to give it to a man who can not get out.

Mr. MOON. No; we are not refusing, but we are refusing to let a star-route man make a contract and then come in and say he will not perform it.

Mr. FIELDS. I am not suggesting you do that, but I am simply suggesting that you guarantee an increase in compensation to the man who can not get out if you are going to guarantee an increase in compensation to a man who can get out.

Mr. MOON. That is exactly what this section does. It guarantees it in the discretion of the department. Every case rests upon its own merits. And it would be unwise to make a general law to cover all cases. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say only a word about this motor-truck proposition. It is a bill that has met the approval of the Senate and the Post Office Committee and is on the calendar here for consideration. We thought it wise to have it placed under the rule in this bill. This bill is not a mere salary bill; it is a general legislative bill.

The department insists that if it is permitted under the provisions of this bill to run these motor trucks from the cities into the country that they will gather up the products of the country and bring them into the market at much less price than the farmer himself could do. The farmer has a small amount of fruit or vegetables or grain, and he does not feel like quitting his work to carry it into the city in a wagon and lose a day, inasmuch as the cost would be too great and the value of his time and his team would be too great, while the motor truck can take it into the city and deliver it to his commission merchant and he will obtain something out of it, whereas it would perish upon the farm. And then the accumulation of farm products of this sort and of other kinds in a large city, where there is a great demand for food, would reduce the price of food to the masses of the people. And if this Government ought to do anything it ought to encourage every movement possible to secure to the citizens of this country the means of a good living as cheaply as possible.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. I will yield.

Mr. GALLAGHER. You stated a few moments ago that the possible amount of increase in the salaries estimated by the department is something like $25,000,000.

Mr. MOON. Twenty-five millions for the first year, I believe, and $35,000,000 for the next year and $48,000,000 for the next.

Mr. GALLAGHER. What I wanted to get at is this: Can you give the House any idea of the possible increase in the amount of revenues derived from first-class postage?

Mr. MOON. That will be derived from first-class postage?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOON. I think from the best estimates that the amount of first-class postage under the new law——

Mr. GALLAGHER. Annually.

Mr. MOON. Yes. It is purely a guess. Nobody can tell you; but it is estimated that it would be $20,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Mr. GALLAGHER. It will not make much difference, then, with the revenues of the department?

Mr. MOON. It will make some difference, I imagine. And I think under this truck proposition there will be a considerable source of revenue to the Government as well as benefit to the people. I will place in the RECORD as Exhibit A to my remarks statement from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Now, there are one or two other sections that I wish to refer to. You will remember that we passed in the last Congress a provision that gave 10 or 15 per cent—10, I believe—to increase to persons drawing salaries from $480 to $1,000. By some sort of construction—I know not what, but perhaps upon the technical theory that the section would apply to those who went into the service after the passage of the law rather than those who were in it—the comptroller has held that these people were not entitled under that act to that increase. We have put a provision in this bill that is retroactive in its character and requires the payment of money to those people for the last year. It is not right that those employees, getting a little, low salary, up to $1,000, should be deprived of the compensation that we intended by an unjust ruling of a Comptroller of the Treasury when men getting other and larger and better salaries all over this country got the benefit of that act.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Did you discuss section 3 at all? What difference does that make at the present time?

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman mean that one for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act?

Mr. EMERSON. It relates to cancellation up to $100 for fourth-class postmasters. How does that change the present law?

Mr. MOON. I have discussed that.

Mr. EMERSON. I did not hear the gentleman, although I was sitting here all the time.

Mr. MOON. Well, I explained to the gentlemen, I think, that under the present law the fourth-class postmaster gets 50 per cent of the first quarter $100 cancellations in the office. Now we are changing it so as to give him 100 per cent. Then I remarked, too, in that connection that the language did not, perhaps, carry out the view of the committee fully, and that there would be an amendment offered there. And I further suggested that it was not the intention of the committee, clearly, to give in this estimate the benefit of the revenue that arises between the 2 and 3 cent postage, the extra 1 cent being intended for war purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another section which is made in order under the rule, and that is to increase or permit the increase of deposits in the postal savings banks from $2,000 up to $3,000. I have a very interesting report from the department on that question, which I will place in the RECORD as Exhibit B to my remarks. A very large amount of revenue was placed on deposit in these banks after the change was made a year or two ago as to the limit which they could make of deposits. We were advised that people desired to deposit very large sums, as expressed at almost every office in the country daily, and that many millions of dollars more can be collected and paid into the postal savings by this very change in the act.

When we come to these sections of the bill which I have been briefly discussing and presenting to you in an impromptu way, the members of the committee will take pleasure in giving a more extended explanation.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LOBECK. At the present time we have about 5,700 postal-savings institutions; that is, where you can receive money out of 56,000 money-order offices in the United States. Have you given it study; and, if so, do you not think it well to increase the number of these postal money-order places?

Mr. MOON. Well, we have not given any consideration to that, and the department, so far as I know, has not. And what the effect of that would be I do not know and what the cost would be I do not know.

Mr. Chairman, I have said all I desire to say about this bill at this time, and I now ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] to use some of his time.

EXHIBIT A.

MOTOR-TRUCK DELIVERY IN POSTAL SERVICE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS,
Washington, D. C., September 4, 1917.

The committee met, pursuant to call, in the committee room, Hon. John A. Moon (chairman) presiding.

STATEMENT OF HON. J. I. BLAKSLEE, FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

The CHAIRMAN. Gen. Blakslee, please explain these bills in full.

Gen. BLAKSLEE. This experimental legislation is intended to ascertain whether or not a system of collection and delivery of mail that does not exist to-day is practicable. If the experiment is a success—

It will provide a direct means of communication and conveyance between mailing patrons in cities and rural territory that it is not possible to provide at minimum cost to the Postal Service or to the patron at this time.

It will assist in the effort to reduce the cost of living by eliminating useless and expensive operations in the postal means of communication between producer and consumer.

It will permit the producer to continue production and the labor incident thereto instead of suspending production or labor while conveying produce to consumers.

It will extend the postal zone of collection-and-delivery service in the vicinity of large cities to the point where the actual farmer-producer is domiciled rather than to where only suburban residents and nonproducers live.

Routes 50 miles in radius from the central post office rather than routes 6 miles in radius from the nearest substation of the central post office. Thus the local parcel-post zone rate of approximately one-half cent per pound will apply whereas a charge of first-zone rate, of 1 cent per pound, is now made within such radius.

Only 288 of the present 43,562 existing rural routes emanate from the 50 largest cities in the United States, and of this number of routes none originates at New York City, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, San Francisco, Newark, Jersey City, or Worcester, Mass., or any of the substations or branch offices thereof.

The postal patron in any of the 50 cities will directly benefit from the increased service and improved methods of communication with the genuine rural population and vice versa when the proposed legislation shall have been enacted and the maximum facilities provided. All other communities, wherever found, likewise and in proportion to their population.

This legislation will increase the revenues of the Postal Service. It will also increase the cost of operation of the Postal Service. It will, if efficiently administered, show a net income to the Postal Service under present weight limits and postage charges or conveyance of parcel-post mail only. Any revenues from conveyance of first, second, or third class that may be carried would be net.

It will permit of a practical use of the highways upon which millions of dollars for improvements have been expended and for which nearly $85,000,000 of Federal funds have been appropriated.

It will reduce the cost of postage on farm products and thereby increase the amount forwarded through the mails. Thus equalize the balance of trade between farmers and consumers which at this time is not equalized in a ratio of about 8 to 1 against the farmer.

It will provide a legitimate means of extension of parcel-post mail facilities into territory where no mail service is possible at this time and where there is no means of conveyance except that which is the property of and is operated by the producer, always at serious loss to himself and to the public that depends upon maximum efficient production.

Or 9.46 per day, or $0.095 per mile, or 0.0047 cent per pound.

What will be the salary of the driver?

Maximum, $1,200 per annum, he to provide his own substitute and pay for same within his salary.

What plan is contemplated to assemble the material at the producing point?

Regular schedules, giving time of arrival at points where produce may appear for transmission, producer to supply containers for protection pending arrival of the carrier. In fact, similar treatment as now prevails in the collection and delivery of mail on rural routes.

What will be the plan of disposing of the supplies?

The same treatment as now prevails in the disposition of produce handled on rural routes, with the additional direct supervision of a rural agent—employee of the post office or the postmaster—who will be expected to encourage direct commercial relations between producer and consumer; to increase the quantity of mailable matter carried; to recommend amendments of route or schedule to accommodate patrons; to insure efficiency of operation, eliminating indirect service, superfluous handling, treatment of undelivered or spoiled produce; to keep record and issue bulletins of produce and supplies, with prices thereof, to producers and consumer patrons; to provide for regularity of service when daily supply can be secured from any given number of producers for direct delivery to any given number of consumers.

It is not contemplated in this measure to do anything more than provide the cheapest, most direct, and most efficient possible mail service; to collect supplies from producers and to deliver the same to consumers.

NOTE.—This would apparently increase the costs of operation as an overhead charge, but the service rendered should pay for itself through increased returns above the estimated income.

Is the Government to solicit trade?

No. It will advertise the mail facilities that will promote trade; publish the names of producers and consumers; the amount of produce that can be supplied by producers and the prices therefor as listed by producers. Also, the names of the consumers and the quantities of produce required by each, and, if stated, to set forth the price the consumer is willing to pay. This is at present effective in the "Farm to table" movement already attempted.

Is it contemplated that the Government shall guarantee payment of those supplying the goods?

Only as provided in the Postal Laws and Regulations relative to C. O. D. parcels.

What charges are to be made for the service?

Parcel-post mail rates.

How many places are there in the country at which this system can be operated during the entire year?

It is impossible to state in detail, although it is certainly feasible at any point where fairly good roads appear. The regularity of service is subject to weather conditions. I am inclined to believe that if I could accurately answer this question, and some of the others that follow, there would be no need for an experiment.

Should the department not make some extra charge to the producer for the special transportation of his products?

Absolutely not. Producers and other mail patrons are already overcharged for mail service for the benefit of other mail users who do not pay the cost of their mail service.

What saving to the consumer will be made by the adoption of this plan?

The consumer in any city where no rural delivery exists will save nearly 50 per cent of the postage now paid on any article presented for mailing on the highway or in the villages located on the highway traversed by this service. Indirectly the consumer will save the difference in a reduced price that may be set between the consumer and a producer with whom the producer now has no business relations, and the higher prices he may be compelled to pay to the limited number of producers with whom the consumer is now in direct contact through the mails.

Possible revenues based upon the establishment of one route 100 miles long, carrying 1 ton, or 2,000 pounds, of produce per day.

2,000 pounds at parcel-post rate (about one-half cent per pound), $10 for 313 days a year		$3,130.00
Operating cost of one-half ton:
Vehicle to convey one-half ton each way, 50 miles	$1,740.15
Salary of employee	1,200.00
Profit		189.85

What will be the overhead charges in connection with each route?

The proportionate cost of supervision, inspection, and indirect expense incident to postal facilities at the point where the service is established, and the services of any agent or employee assigned to duty in connection with the operation of the route. As this can not be definitely fixed until a route is established, it is impossible to state the exact amount.

If it be true that eight parcels move from city to farm to one from the farm to the city, how will this be remedied by putting on more vehicles?

If the number of vehicles be increased, the number of parcels carried will increase, and, whether the ratio be 8 to 1 or some other, the patron will benefit and the revenues of the Postal Service increase in proportion.

Who is responsible to the purchaser for decayed goods?

Perishable articles are transported in the Postal Service at owner's risk.

Will the Government be in the same position as the railroads—responsible for the loss?

No.

How many new employees will be required under the plan?

One per vehicle per route.

Would they be under civil service?

Probably not during the period of the experiment.

What percentage of the road mileage of the country as a whole will be available for this service?

Of the 2,230,000 miles of highway in the United States, about 160,000 miles have been improved, of which 150,000 miles, or 7 per cent of the total mileage of the country, is available, although it is not impracticable to use some fairly good dirt or sand-clay roads not considered as improved in this statement.

EXHIBIT B.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

JANUARY 7, 1918.

The Postal Savings System can be made of much greater service by a few statutory changes, which I am confident Congress would promptly authorize as war legislation.

A larger limit on deposits: This would mean more hidden money put to work. Deposits doubled after May 18, 1916, when the limit was raised from $500 to $1,000. From July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917, the net increase was $46,000,000, as against $20,000,000 the year before. Old depositors who had been choked by the former limitation were first to increase their savings. Deposits in 1917 went ahead 53 per cent while the gain in individual depositors was only 12 per cent. Thousands of depositors are now up to their interest-bearing limit and want a chance to deposit more.

Congress should be asked to authorize the acceptance of interest-bearing deposits up to $3,000. It would be unwise, in my judgment, to remove the limit altogether, but sufficient latitude should be given to cover reasonable demands. Noninterest-bearing accounts should not be accepted even if they could be had. Fair dealing with the public requires at least the payment of our present rate of interest on all deposits when 4 per cent money, with equal security, is being eagerly sought by the Government. While preparing this memorandum a letter has been placed on my desk from the postmaster at Albany, Oreg., stating that a depositor at his office who has $1,000 on deposit wants "to place about two or three thousand more in his name and that of his wife who also has $1,000 in interest-bearing certificates."

In 1917 the Postal Savings System was run at a profit to the Government of $955,000. It should be more this year if the service is broadened to meet the reasonable demands of the public. While the service was not intended as a money-making adjunct of the department, still the case gets stronger when a more efficient service to the public would incidentally bring a larger revenue to the Government.

Postal savings cards: A postal saving card has one stamp embossed on it and spaces are left for adding nine adhesive 10-cent postal savings stamps, so the card when filled has a redemption value of $1. Postmasters are required, therefore, to keep an account of cards as well as stamps. A card should be gotten up inexpensively and serve merely as a form to which 10 10-cent adhesive postal savings stamps may be added. No record of it would then be necessary and it could be utilized for advertising purposes. But, strange to say, it will require an amendment to the original postal savings act to eliminate the embossed stamp. While this is a small matter in one way, still by making the cards nonaccountable stock much printing and accounting expense would be done away with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has used 55 minutes. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is recognized for one hour and a half.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill is not very systematic. It is not drawn to scale. It is like a great many other legislative propositions—the result of compromises in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and, of course, it seems to me that in the eyes of some it is rather subject to criticism.

The first part of the bill, which relates to the compensation of rural carriers, I think originated very largely in a bill that I introduced, although I am aware of the fact that about 150 other gentlemen, Members of the House, introduced similar bills. Anyway, the subcommittee that prepared the bill considered, out of courtesy to me as a member of it, the bill which I introduced, which provided for equipment allowances for rural carriers. But the majority of the whole committee concluded that there should be an increase in compensation. They did not agree to the idea of having equipment allowances, and so we find here that the compensation of rural carriers who receive not to exceed $1,200—that is to say, those carriers who have a route not exceeding the standard route—shall have an increased compensation of 15 per cent, or $180.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Can the gentleman tell me whether anything is allowed the rural carrier for the upkeep of his equipment or the feed of his horses?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will tell you. He is not allowed anything.

Mr. REAVIS. What is the city carrier allowed?

Mr. STEENERSON. My recollection is that he is allowed something, I think either $300 or $400 or maybe $500. I do not remember the exact figures.

Mr. REAVIS. Can the gentleman give any good reason why the carrier in the city should be allowed $300 or $400 or $500 for upkeep of equipment while the rural carrier is allowed nothing?

Mr. STEENERSON. Reasons were given. They were not my reasons. But reasons were given by the department officials.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Are you talking about mounted or unmounted carriers?

Mr. REAVIS. Mounted carriers.

Mr. STEENERSON. There are carriers who are mounted, not on horseback, but there are carriers who have vehicles. It was stated that the expense of maintaining an automobile in a city, or even horses, was higher than in the country.

Mr. REAVIS. In other words, the department believed that an automobile run over a country road would not consume as much gas and oil as an automobile run over the paved streets of a city?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not going to argue that question with the gentleman. I was simply giving information.

Mr. REAVIS. I am not asking the gentleman's judgment. I am asking whether the department left the impression with the committee that the upkeep of an automobile, run with gas and oil, would be cheaper in the country than in the city, going over country roads rather than city streets?

Mr. STEENERSON. I suppose it would cost less in the country.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Usually the mounted service furnished in the cities is for the outlying districts, where the streets are not paved.

Mr. STEENERSON. I believe that is right. The gentleman comes from Nebraska, whence the other gentleman comes.

Mr. LOBECK. I have no objection to what the gentleman from Nebraska says, although he was intending to show by his remarks that the streets of the cities were all paved.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now, with regard to this compensation, in addition to the $180 to be allowed to the ones receiving the maximum, we have provided an additional compensation for every mile over 24 miles. Under the present law a rural carrier may be required—and a great many are required—to carry the mail for more than 24 miles, but they get the maximum, $1,200, up to 30 miles. A large number of routes in the Northwest are 28 and 30 miles, but the carrier can only get a maximum of $1,200. There is a law that authorizes the department to make compensation, and which requires it where the route is more than 30 miles, at the rate of $24 a mile.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not a fact that under the present law the carrier who makes less than 24 miles has his salary reduced to the extent of $24 per mile per annum?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is reduced; but more than the gentleman suggests.

Mr. SNYDER. Twenty-four dollars per mile per annum.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is reduced more than that.

Mr. SNYDER. That is my understanding.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. The compensation is fixed in the resolution——

Mr. SNYDER. I am speaking of the present rule.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am speaking of the present law. I might as well give it to you now.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to have it.

Mr. STEENERSON. It was in the joint resolution which continued the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1916. It was passed on March 4, 1915, because the Post Office appropriation bill had failed. It provides that on and after July 1, 1915, the compensation of each letter carrier for serving a rural route of 24 miles and over six days in the week shall be $1,200 per annum, payable monthly; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,152; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,080; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $960; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $840; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $720; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $672; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $624; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $576; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $528; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $480.

Now, you will observe, if you take those figures, that the difference between these different distances is more than $24 a mile; it is closer to $50 a mile on a shorter distance. For instance, the difference between 6 and 8—I had a table prepared, but I have not got it with me now—I think it amounts to about $58 or $60, the increase per mile.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to finish my answer first. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

There is another law which I should have quoted in this connection. My recollection is that it is discretionary to allow $24 a mile between 24 and 30 miles, but I know it is mandatory to allow $24 a mile where the route exceeds 30 miles. Now, this proposed bill provides that they shall receive $24 a mile for the additional miles over 24.

Mr. SNYDER. That is quite correct. What I had in mind was that where a man had been assigned to a route of 24 miles, and thereafter at some time the route was decreased a mile, and did not come into the range of one of the grades that the gentleman has mentioned, then the reduction would be based on $24 per annum for the mile taken off the route.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman claim that to reduce a 26-mile route to 24 miles would carry such a decrease?

Mr. SNYDER. What I contend is that if a 24-mile route as originally laid out was reduced to 23 miles then the $24 per mile per annum would apply.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think it is more than that. I think the reduction is more.

Mr. SNYDER. It is that much, anyhow.

Mr. STEENERSON. Because you know that $1,200 for 24 miles, which is the standard route, is $50 a mile. Now, if you reduce that 2 miles, or reduce the 24 miles to 22 miles, the rate for the 22 miles is $1,152. That is a reduction of $48.

Mr. SNYDER. That is what I contend—$24 a mile. If it is reduced 2 miles, and the reduction in salary is $48, that is $24 a mile, just exactly what the gentleman says.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; it would be $48 less for the 2 miles. That is correct. Now I want to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. DOWELL. Getting back to the question submitted by the gentleman from Nebraska, is it not true that since the routes have been extended by the department, in the last year or so, it is necessary for the rural carrier not only to equip and keep an automobile but also to keep horses and wagons to deliver the mail at times when the automobile can not be used, which is usually several months of the year in many of the districts?

Mr. STEENERSON. In the latitude where I live he not only has got to keep a horse and wagon but a span of horses and a sleigh, because in the winter months the road is not suitable for one horse.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not that necessarily double his expense by way of equipment and upkeep, since the expansion of these routes?

Mr. STEENERSON. That would seem to be obvious.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Along the line of the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska, when the gentleman explained the pay of the rural carrier, will the gentleman now please tell us how much the city carrier gets and how his compensation is fixed? The rural carrier seems to have his compensation fixed by mileage, and the upkeep of the city carrier and his pay must necessarily be fixed in some other way. How much does he get? Is it as much as the rural carrier gets, or more?

Mr. STEENERSON. He gets more.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why is that?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think they pay him more now because the law requires it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question which I think will bring out a defect in the bill as it is now reported.

Mr. STEENERSON. Very well.

Mr. DENISON. The bill now provides for an increase of 15 per cent on salaries up to and including $1,200?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. And $24 a mile for all miles over 24 miles?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Say that a carrier is now delivering mail over a route 31 miles long. His salary is $1,224 a year.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. And he will not get the benefit of the 15 per cent increase. His salary under this bill would amount to $1,368; that is, $1,200, and $24 per mile for 7 miles.

Mr. STEENERSON. If that interpretation is correct, why, yes.

Mr. DENISON. It is bound to be correct.

Mr. STEENERSON. Up to $1,200 they get the 15 per cent increase.

Mr. DENISON. But he is now making $1,224 for traveling 31 miles; so his salary under this bill will amount to $1,368, whereas the man who has a route only 30 miles long now will get the 15 per cent increase and $24 per mile for 6 miles, or $1,524 under this bill; so a man traveling only 30 miles will get under this bill $1,524 while the man traveling 31 miles will get $1,368.

Mr. STEENERSON. The language is 15 per cent increase up to and including those who receive $1,200.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The case the gentleman has in mind is that of a man who receives more than $1,200. He is not within that description.

Mr. DENISON. The case I have in mind is the case of a man whose route is 31 miles who gets a salary now of $1,224, so he would not get the 15 per cent increase.

Mr. PLATT. Why would he not get the additional $24 per mile for the miles between 24 and 30?

Mr. DENISON. He would undoubtedly get that.

Mr. ROBBINS. He would get that under this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman's contention is that he would not get the 15 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. No; he would perhaps not get the 15 per cent, because his salary is $1,224. I am not quite sure how that would be interpreted, but he would get six times $24 for the extra mileage up to 30 miles.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. That will give him $1,368, if my figures are right.

Mr. DENISON. The man who now travels 30 miles gets $1,200, while the man who travels 31 miles gets $24 for that additional mile, or $1,224. Now, the man who travels 24 miles and gets $1,200 will get the benefit of the 15 per cent increase, and the man who travels 31 miles will not get the benefit of it.

Mr. PLATT. But he will get the $144.

Mr. DENISON. Whereas the man who travels 31 miles will get $1,368.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Illinois has pointed out a possible interpretation of the language which, if it bears that construction, will deserve consideration and ought to be corrected before we get through with the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. They have been revising rural routes all over the country and increasing the length of them from 24 to 30 miles, or nearly that. By doing that they have saved the immense sum of $1,500 in one of my counties. If you are going to give $24 increased pay for every mile a man travels between 24 miles and 29 miles, where is the profit going to be in the lengthening of the routes?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is one reason why we thought we would make it so that would not be done. As is provided now, a man will travel 30 miles without extra pay, and the object was to stop that.

I might say that this matter of decrease is, of course, a matter of administration. Of course we can not compel the administration to do things that we would like to. We can make general rules. The administration of the rural service has been the cause of a great deal of complaint. I have received marked copies of newspapers containing complaints from the gentleman's own State, the western part of New York, where they have abandoned the rural free-delivery routes because nobody could carry the mail, and they have had to perform the service by star route. But, of course, it is impossible to prevent poor administration where they persist in it.

Mr. PLATT. Under the present arrangement if they lengthen 10 routes that are now 24 miles in length to 29 miles in length they save the salary of one man, which is $1,200. Every time they lengthen a route they save 5 miles. In 10 routes they can drop a route out, but with this provision in that inducement is taken away, as it should be, because it makes many of the routes too long for good service.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I should like to ask the gentleman about the application of section 3 of the act approved March 3, 1917, making appropriations for the Post Office Department, increasing the salaries of $480 and less, 15 per cent; over $480 up to $800, 10 per cent, to this bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman had better discuss that in his own time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I want the gentleman's opinion on it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not prepared to give any opinion.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If a carrier now gets 15 per cent on his $480 salary, does he under this bill get 15 per cent on the $480 plus the $72?

Mr. STEENERSON. I guess he would not; I do not think he would be given that unless we stretch the law a good ways.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We are proposing to legislate, and I think we ought to know about it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say that it is a negligible question, because there are so few of those that it does not amount to anything. There would not be more than two or three hundred in the United States of these $480 men.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The act I referred to includes all those who get between $480 and $720. I do not object to the increase, but I want to know just what increase they are to receive under this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. There are very few, and the question has never occurred to me, and so I am not prepared to discuss it. If there is anything in it, I hope the gentleman will offer an amendment to correct it.

Now, in regard to the administration of the Postal Service, as I have said to the gentleman from New York, we can only give a general rule. I know that there are more complaints to-day about the Postal Service, about the service we are getting, than ever before. I have never known so much dissatisfaction expressed by the public as with the service that they are now getting. I want to take this occasion to say, too, that although I have been very closely studying the postal service for the last 15 years I have been in Congress, I believe that the complaints that have come in can in no way be founded upon any lack of efficiency or fidelity on the part of employees. I want to repeat what I have said often, that the postal employees, from the highest to the lowest, are a very faithful, honest, and effective corps of men. They are trying to do everything possible in the very best way, but it is a fact that few people realize that their burdens have been greatly increased in recent years. We have in the last few years practically gone into a new line of business, that of freight transportation. Why, the last time that I got any statistics, which is about a year ago, the amount of parcels exceeded a billion, and the average was 1 pound and 11 ounces, or practically 2 pounds, making more than 2,000,000,000 pounds of that class of mail, which is really package freight. It is all thrown on the carriers.

The rural carriers especially are loaded down with these things. We have added to their duties in various other ways. The postal savings law and the money orders have been extended so that the work of the postal employees has been increased. The Railway Mail Service has perhaps been the greatest sufferer from the overloading, so to speak. I read in the Star night before last a reference to the delay in the first-class mail between Washington and New York. I heard a distinguished Senator from Illinois say that it took 12 days now to get a letter from Chicago to his office. The explanation given last night in the Star by Second Assistant Postmaster General Praeger was that it sometimes took a day and a half, according to the stamp on the envelope, for a letter to get to the railway mail clerk.

The clippings are as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Mar. 20, 1918.]

TO AVOID THE DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERIES LOCAL BUSINESS MEN USE SPECIAL STAMPS ON LETTERS ADDRESSED TO NEW YORK.

Washington banks, department stores, and other mercantile houses are resorting to the use of special-delivery stamps in order to insure quick delivery of letters in New York.

While Washington business men are not disposed to be too hard on the mail service, there is a general feeling that somewhere between here and New York, both coming and going, something is slowing up tremendously the delivery of letters.

"All of our important mail is now being sent by special delivery," the president of one of the city's largest banks declared to-day. "We started the use of the special delivery stamps on our ordinary mail recently in order to be sure that it was delivered in New York on the first delivery.

"This is the only way we can be sure of such early delivery now," he continued. Other institutions have adopted the same practice here.

SUSPECT CAUSE OF DELAY.

It is generally believed by business men that the Railway Mail Service is responsible for the slowing up in mail facilities between here and New York.

Letters mailed in New York after business hours formerly were delivered in Washington on the first mail to the business sections of the city next morning.

To-day such letters are scattered over the various deliveries of the day.

[From the Washington Star, Mar. 20, 1918.]

PRAEGER DEFENDS RAIL MAIL SERVICE—DECLARES WAR AND PARCEL POST FLOOD POST OFFICES, CAUSING DELAY—TEST FOR BUSINESS MEN.

Denial that the Railway Mail Service is to blame for any delay in the delivery of letters between here and New York was made to-day by Otto Praeger, Second Assistant Postmaster General, and officials of the Railway Mail Service.

While specifically pointing out that no blame must be attached either to the Washington or the New York City post office, owing to the tremendous difficulties they are laboring under as the result of war conditions, Mr. Praeger declared that the records of the Railway Mail Service show that the Washington city post office has recently turned over to the Railway Mail Service letters 26 hours after they were postmarked.

These particular letters were addressed to points south.

The records will show, it was declared, that certain letters bound north, postmarked here 10 a. m., were not delivered to the Railway Mail Service until 3 p. m. that afternoon, in the meantime two or three other trains to New York having left the Union Station. In one instance 200 letters addressed to New York business houses were involved.

MAIL SWAMPS OFFICES.

No blame, however, is attached to the Washington city post office by the Post Office Department. The great volume of war mail and the tremendous growth of the parcel post has literally swamped more than one city post office in the country.

The Washington city post office is hit worst of all owing to the fact that this city is the origin of tons and tons of war literature issued by the Government.

The local post office, also, is short handed on account of many men having gone with the colors. For these reasons Post Office Department officials believe that the people of Washington should be lenient over any delay that may arise, either now or in the future, in the transportation and delivery of letters going to and fro between here and New York.

Three truck loads of Easter hats, mailed from a St. Louis firm to various small towns in Virginia and Maryland, are instanced by officials as a sample of what the Washington city post office, the Railway Mail Service, and the entire Post Office Department are up against at this time.

RAIL CLERKS INCREASED.

The Railway Mail Service, it was stated, has increased the number of men who "work" the Washington mail on the trains from New York. No men have been taken off, it is asserted. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad recently removed a train which left here at 2.30 o'clock each morning. This added to the difficulties confronting the service.

Another thing which is causing delay of letters sent to New York is the fact that local carriers, in collecting mail late at night, miss getting letters on the Pennsylvania train leaving Washington daily at 12.10 a. m. Letters that miss this train must wait until 7.25 a. m.

New York is having her troubles with the mails, too. Records of the Railway Mail Service will show that letters have been sent from New York to Washington on the Pennsylvania train No. 109, leaving New York at 8 a. m. which were postmarked 2 o'clock, 6 o'clock, and 9 o'clock p. m. the evening before. This train is due to arrive in Washington at 1.45 o'clock p. m. If it arrives late there is little wonder that letters do not get delivered here the same day, it is declared.

WALL STREET MAIL SUFFERS.

Many of the letters involved were letters mailed from the Wall Street district.

Further, in the instance in question the train was late and the letters could not be delivered in Washington that day, and the next day was Washington's Birthday, so it was still another day before the letters were delivered.

The use of special-delivery stamps can in no way accelerate the transportation of letters in so far as the Railway Mail Service is concerned, Mr. Praeger pointed out. Washington banks, department stores, and other business establishments have recently resorted to the use of the special-delivery stamps to make sure of immediate delivery in New York of important letters.

"The special-delivery stamp has no effect on the Railway Mail Service," Mr. Praeger said.

"The only function and purpose of the special-delivery stamp is to expedite the delivery of a letter by the city post office."

TEST FOR BUSINESS MEN.

Railway Mail Service officials suggested that business men test the truth of this statement by a novel test, as follows:

Take the original letter and mail it at the city post office.

Then take a carbon copy of the letter, carry it to the mail box on the "fence" guarding the train gates and drop the letter in that box.

Collections are made from this box up until 10 or 15 minutes before the mail trains leave the station.

Officials expressed the hope, however, that business men would not take to mailing their New York letters by means of the Union Station letter box on the fence, as this would practically transfer the city post office to the concourse of the Union Station.

Trains containing railway post offices leave Washington for New York, as follows: 12.10 a. m., 7.25 a. m., 9 a. m., 11 a. m., 3 p. m., 7 p. m., and 10.40 p. m.

In addition to these regular mail trains there are express trains which may be caught by the mails. If a letter is so lucky as to hit one of these trains, it may get to New York in surprisingly quick time, even these days.

The headlines of the article, and the substance of it bears them out, were to the effect that the Assistant Postmaster General blames the parcel post for the delay in the first-class mail, and I believe he has the right idea. I think the cause is there. We have undertaken to do a large package-freight business, constantly increasing the size of the package and decreasing the rate at which it shall be carried within certain zones, so that the work of carrying freight has interfered with the work of carrying the first-class mail. I am as good a friend of parcel post as anyone in the House, yet I do not believe that it is the prime object for which the Postal Service was created. The law gives to the United States a monopoly on carrying first-class mail. No one can carry a letter for pay without incurring the penalty of fine or imprisonment, for we forbid anyone except the United States doing it. So far as parcels or packages are concerned, however, the carrying of them is free. Anybody can undertake that business. That argues to my mind that we owe a higher duty to the first-class mail than we do to this other business, because the field is open to everyone to engage in it. Besides that the rate of compensation, as indicated by the postage required, is so much higher as to make that the most profitable branch of the service; and if it be true, as indicated in the interview with the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Praeger, that the parcel post has interfered with and delayed the first-class mail, I say it is deplorable and it is a mistake. It seems to me there ought to be a separate department, the same as they have in England, if we are going to carry on that large business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Could not they give sufficient help to put out this first-class mail before the parcel post is taken care of as freight?

Mr. STEENERSON. They are doing their best; but the fact is, as Mr. Praeger says, that the delay that occurs in the first-class mail is attributable to the parcel post.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does he not say anything with regard to the lack of help?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; although I believe that is one cause. It was charged before the committee that the Railway Mail Service is crippled because they have discharged 1,200 mail clerks, but he defended that and explained that that did not occasion any delay; that these separations formerly made on the railway post-office cars were now made in the terminals. I think that does not wholly justify us in saying that the reduction in the number of railway mail clerks has not caused some delay; but the opinion of the official who has direct charge of the transportation of the mails by the railroads is entitled to some consideration, and he says in an interview that the first-class mail delay is caused, to some extent, by the overloading of the mails by the parcel post. The load exceeds the capacity of the equipment and facilities.

Mr. EMERSON. Is it not a fact that the service is crippled a great deal because many of the Government employees are quitting the service to get higher pay?

Mr. STEENERSON. Perhaps they are, but I have not discovered that to be the case. The gentleman may have discovered it; but the First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Koons, was examined before the committee on that very subject, and he introduced statistics showing that the resignations were about the same—very slightly greater—than in prior years, so that I do not think that that is a material cause.

Mr. E. J. Ryan, of the Railway Association, who is keeping close watch on the service, comes out with this statement, also published in the Star:

SAYS MAIL DELAY IS GENERAL CONDITION—E. J. RYAN, OF RAILWAY ASSOCIATION, GIVES THREE REASONS FOR CONGESTION.

That the delay in mails is not only between Washington and New York, but general throughout the country, is stated to-day by E. J. Ryan, president of the Railway Mail Association, who gives the following reasons:

First. The mails are worked in terminals rather than on the trains while en route.

Second. In practicing false economy, he says, the Post Office Department has instituted a method of cutting down railway mail space on the trains and employing a smaller force to work on the trains.

Third. Trained men are being put on the surplus list, while inexperienced men, at lower salaries, are being taken into the service without regard for civil service.

Mr. Ryan said that he can support these statements with specific instances, which have already been brought to the attention of the post-office authorities. In explaining the situation from the viewpoint of the railway mail association, he said:

"The statement that the delay of mails is only between New York and Washington is an error, as reports show that mails are being delayed practically throughout the entire service. Delayed mails exist on lines not so congested as the railroads operating on the Atlantic seaboard. The fact is that the policy of curtailing space for distributing mails en route in the railroad mail cars, and also reductions in the number of railway postal clerks, who performed this very important work of the Postal Service, is the real cause for the present situation. The war is not to blame.

"POLICY HAS BEEN ADOPTED.

"This policy has been adopted and was actually in effect for months before this country entered the struggle and before the abnormal demands arose which now burden the transportation system. Even now there should be but very little, if any, delay in mails upon their arrival in Washington. Mail cars are attached to passenger trains, not to freight trains. Frequent regular train service exists between New York and Washington.

"Six trains with mail cars arrive in Washington each day from New York. Twelve trains carrying mails in closed pouches, but without mail cars or clerks, arrive each day from New York. Eight trains carrying mail, mail cars, and clerks leave Washington each day for New York, and also eight trains carrying closed pouches without mail cars or clerks."

I shall not now speak of the clerks' and carriers' salaries in city-delivery offices, because that is a subject which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will discuss, and he can give us the information. He has made a study of it. I shall not trespass upon that part of the subject.

There is one remarkable thing about the bill as it now comes to us under this rule, and the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has discussed it, and that is this matter of motor-truck service. The bill was before the Post Office Committee and was favorably reported, although

I was opposed to it and made a minority report, which I want all of the Members to see. It is a part of the same pamphlet that contains the majority report. The thing I want to impress upon your mind especially is this: You hear every once in a while some eloquent Member of Congress of long service and experience say that the House of Representatives ought to be careful of its own dignity and its rights, that we must not yield to encroachments upon our prerogatives. Here is a bill that is remarkable in this respect. It is an appropriation bill—not a regular annual appropriation bill, but a special appropriation bill—originating in the Senate. It comes over to the House and against my protest was reported and put on the calendar, and now comes in by special rule with the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules. Ever since Congress was organized under the Constitution it has been contended in our behalf that appropriation bills come within the scope of the constitutional provision that provides that revenue bills shall originate in the House. Of course, an appropriation bill is not a revenue bill; it is a thing that follows a revenue bill, for if you appropriate you must impose revenue laws. So the practice grew up that all regular appropriation bills originated in the House. Of course, if you construe the Constitution strictly, it may be said that these could originate just as well in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman say that he made a report in this case?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. FARR. It is Report No. 159?

Mr. STEENERSON. On Senate bill 2718. There is a Senate report and a House report and a minority report by myself. This is not very important in itself, but if the Senate is going to establish a precedent to make special appropriation bills and send them over here without objection, then you have laid the path open to have regular appropriation bills come over from that end of the Capitol.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOON. I observe the gentleman discussing the action of the Senate in making an appropriation. This is not a Senate bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes, it is; it is a Senate bill.

Mr. MOON. Just a part of this bill is a Senate bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, that is simply camouflage. It is the first time that I have used the word, but I will get used to it after a while.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman shows that he does not know what it means.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Senate bill is word for word what is in this rule, and there is no concealment of that fact, and we are thereby laying a foundation for the Senate to make special appropriation bills and send them over here for us to pass upon afterwards, thus violating the spirit of the Constitution, as I contend and as I have stated in my minority report. If you allow that, the next thing will be for them to originate all appropriation bills, and the House of Representatives, elected by the people, will be playing a very insignificant rôle. Now, what is the use of coming in here every once in a while talking about the dignity of the House and that we must vindicate our rights, that we must not act as registers of the will of the other end of the Capitol, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. BOWERS. Be rubber stamps.

Mr. STEENERSON. And then come right down on your elbows and your knees and abandon to the Senate——

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. And abandon a practice that was condemned by so great a man as William H. Seward, of New York. I cited him here. He made a very able report in the Thirty-fourth Congress on this very subject.

Mr. MOON. I just want to remind my colleague on the committee that the House bill on this subject of motor trucks is No. 5640 and that the Senate bill is 2718, and we amended the Senate bill and added the aviation feature to it, so, as a matter of fact, the bill 2718 is the product of the House exclusively.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is the same thing the gentleman stated once before, that he contends it is not the Senate bill because they have embodied it in this rule, but the bill is on the calendar, reported to the House, and, as I say, I have a minority report right here. But aside from that here we have then a bill to provide for a motor-truck service for certain cities. The object, they say, is to cheapen the cost of living. I point out in my minority report that it appears from the testimony of Mr. Praeger and Mr. Blakslee, and from the Senate report on a similar bill, that eight parcels travel from the city to the farm to one parcel traveling from the farm to the city. Now, the object, they say, is to increase the number of parcels coming from the farm to the city and therefore they want to increase the number of vehicles. Now, there are seven empty vehicles to one loaded one traveling from the farm to the city. Now, if they can make 12 empty vehicles and 1 loaded one they think it will have a tendency to increase the amount of transportation or the amount of freight from the farm to the city by these means. In these times when we are taxing ourselves very heavily it seems to me gross extravagance to appropriate $300,000, nearly $1,000 a day for every working day in the year, in order to enable the Postmaster General to make this experiment when the Second Assistant Postmaster General comes out in the public press and says that first-class mail is now delayed by reason of the large quantity of parcels that have been thrown upon the mail service since the war began. We are overloaded with freight parcels now and, therefore, they say they want to encourage new transportation from the farm by having them ship cabbages, chickens, and so forth.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman has referred to the appropriation for motor vehicles.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is embodied in this rule.

Mr. PLATT. As I understand, and I have had some talk with the Post Office Department on this very matter, the routes already established have been great successes, far more so in that they have developed the business that does not go on rural routes.

Mr. STEENERSON. If they have experimented and know it is a success, what is the use of asking $300,000 for an experiment?

Mr. PLATT. They have not enough money to establish any great number of them up to this time; but their claim is—I talked the matter over with the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General—that up to the present these routes very much more than pay for themselves and they can be established as a commercial proposition.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Second Assistant Postmaster General, like many other departmental officers, is gifted with a vivid imagination.

Mr. PLATT. The Fourth Assistant.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Fourth Assistant, Mr. Blakslee, has an imagination that is second to none in the Government service. Now, that illustrates how they figure it out. Do you suppose you will ever get through with increase in the cost of these experiments? I do not. What is the experience in regard to the parcel post generally? There is a pamphlet on my table of evidence taken before the Senate committee which shows the manner in which they figure out the profit on the parcel post. Is the gentleman familiar with that?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman know they figure out two-thirds, if not three-fourths, of the parcels were delivered without extra cost to the Government? They never allowed a cent for the parcels which were delivered to the cities where they had the carriers. They only put on a little extra where they had special carriers or special conveyances for the parcels. Because most of the packages were delivered by regular carriers and vehicles they figured that these were delivered "without extra cost" to the Government.

They are just like a railroad manager who would say, "I carry 10 passengers in a car, and I can just as well carry 40 more for nothing, because it does not cost anything." Now, that is the way they figure out that the Parcel Post Service is profitable. They loaded it on the carriers and said it cost nothing. They will figure out, no doubt, that this experiment in carrying farm products to the city will be profitable. If so, it is not necessary to appropriate this money, because they have already made the experiment.

Mr. PLATT. If the gentleman will permit, while I agree with him as to the figures they have already submitted as to the parcel-post profits, in general you can take a mail route extending 50 miles or 100 miles, running back and forth, and keep books on that route and tell whether it pays or not. It seems to me that ought to be a simple thing as compared with the whole.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman may explain that in his own time. I do not believe they will keep correct figures. This is a pet scheme of their own, and they want to expend $300,000 on it; and they will come in to prove that it did not cost hardly anything to do it and that it will cheapen the cost of living. They have been engaged in cheapening the cost of living for the last four or five or six years, and if they keep on cheapening it as they have in the last five or six years I do not know where we are going to get the money to pay for it. A few more such victories over high prices and we are undone.

It can be proven that the cost of living to the farmer to-day has been doubled. A few years ago, before this great reform was inaugurated, a farmer could go to the mill and get his wheat ground for a toll of 1 peck on a 2-bushel sack. I am old enough to remember when in southern Minnesota I used to take from the farm a load of wheat to the mill, and the miller would come with his toll dish of a peck and take a peck out of each bag. That is 12½ per cent to transform it into flour. How much does he get under this administration? A farmer gets back about 60 per cent. He pays 40 per cent to the middleman.

That is the way they have cheapened the cost of living to the farmer, and if you keep on with these experiments, piling up taxes at the rate of $300,000 a year, $1,000 a day for this experiment, and keep on transferring all activities to some Government agency that wants higher salaries like these rural carriers and all the clerks—and they need it—the result will be that you will increase the cost of living and increase the profit of the middleman, whether he be a Government agent or a private citizen.

Now, in conclusion, I do not care whether you pass that bill or not, but I feel it my duty to point out to you what it is. It is absolutely necessary, if we are going to maintain the Postal Service, both in the cities and in the country, that these salaries or compensations should be increased, and for that reason I am in favor of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE].

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, on the 12th day of this month a great patriotic mass meeting was held in Covington, Ky., where certain resolutions were adopted, that were addressed to the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives, and in my time, and in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to print the resolutions referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

I, Stephens L. Blakely, do hereby certify that I am Commonwealth attorney for the sixteenth judicial district of Kentucky and that I presided as chairman at a mass meeting of the citizens of Kenton County held in Covington on the 12th day of March, 1918; that the opening prayer was made by the Rev. T. J. McCaffrey, a Catholic clergyman; and that benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Joseph W. Hagin, a Christian minister; that Rev. I. Cochrane Hunt, a Presbyterian minister; the Hon. Edward O'Hara; Rabbi David Philipson, of the Rockdale Avenue Temple, of Cincinnati, Ohio; the Rev. John F. Hickey, a clergyman; and the Hon. John B. O'Neal addressed the mass meeting on the subject presented in the accompanying resolution. That the accompanying resolution was prepared and read by the Hon. John B. O'Neal and then unanimously adopted.

I further certify that there were present at said meeting about 2,000 reputable citizens of Kenton County, and that there were, according to my information and belief, about 1,000 persons who were unable to enter the hall and who held a mass meeting on the streets outside the hall; that the meeting was called for the expressed purpose of presenting this resolution, and that it is my information and belief that those persons outside the hall favored the adoption of this resolution.

STEPHENS L. BLAKELY,
Commonwealth Attorney, Sixteenth Judicial District.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Stephens L. Blakely, this the 16th day of March, 1918.

[SEAL.]

A. B. WALKER,
Notary Public, Kenton County, Ky.

To the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

We, the people of Kenton County, Ky., brought together by an awakened sense of the dangers which threaten this Nation, and by the earnest desire of doing what we may to avert those dangers, solemnly declare our unfaltering loyalty and devotion to our country and our unshaken confidence in the ultimate triumph of freedom and righteousness in this war.

We are deeply sensible of the magnitude of the task imposed upon this Government by the state of unpreparedness in which we were found by an enemy which was prepared at every point, and for the manner in which that great task has been undertaken we feel and express a profound appreciation.

That in the face of imminent dangers we were totally unprepared for defense was a national folly, but a calamity not without its uses, if we learn from it that the American people may not with safety to their institutions, their lives, and their honor sleep in the face of peril, be indifferent to every warning, rely upon a fancied isolation, and fatuously take to their bosoms reptiles whose purpose it is to sting, and whose stings are deadly.

We know at last that this Nation has enlisted in a life and death struggle for freedom against oppression, for civilization against a barbarism which science has made only more brutal; that we are not fighting for the abstract principle of democracy alone, but are fighting in our own defense.

We owe to our heroic allies, who have protected us while we slept, aid and cooperation without measure; we know that the awakened might of the American people thrown into this fight will be of incalculable benefit to the cause of humanity, but we can no longer blind ourselves to the truth that we are fighting in defense of our freedom, our homes, our wives, and our children; and we believe it to be the duty of this Government to impress this vital truth upon all Americans who do not already know it.

In the light of the world's dearly bought knowledge of German treachery in peace and German brutality in war, we hold that the safety and happiness of this and future generations demand that this war shall be relentlessly prosecuted to the end; that "peace without victory" would mean a mere truce, to be employed by a ruthless foe, secretly active, in the practice of every device of treachery and corruption.

And in the light of our knowledge of the scope of the German scheme of world supremacy, we believe that it would be folly to doubt that at the end of such a truce we should be fighting for our lives against a Germany as cunning, as brutal, as mad with the lust of power, as is the Germany to-day, but a Germany refreshed and strengthened through German commercial policy and diplomatic villainy.

And we regard it as a self-evident truth that "peace without indemnities" means simply the leaving of the loot in the hands of the thief; that such a truce would mean that in a little while the defenders of the rights of mankind would be fighting again, but under the handicap of exhausted resources and unproductive territories, while brutal Germany attacked with the added power derived from stolen resources and even stolen men.

The purpose of Germany to dominate the world will be merely halted for a short while unless German power is destroyed in this war.

We believe that a free, intelligent, and brave people may well be trusted with the knowledge of all conditions of vital concern to their lives and liberties, and that an unwillingness to alarm loyal citizens, or to give offense to such as are not loyal, be their proportion great or small, has at this time no place in a sound policy.

We believe that every condition which is a menace to us at home or abroad should be frankly recognized and sternly dealt with, and we are completely persuaded that when this is done the certain result will be an aroused and determined people, inspired by just indignation and undaunted in the face of known dangers, a people ready to make any sacrifice to win this war, a people which, knowing what it must do, will do it without fear or question.

Of the vital truths to which we have too long turned an indifferent ear, and to which our safety demands that we be keenly alive, the conditions existing among our so-called German-Americans is perhaps the most important.

We believe and declare as the truth that of our millions of citizens of German extraction many are true and loyal Americans, justly entitled to all honor and to full fellowship with American patriots.

We know that it is equally true that others have not understood or sought to understand American institutions; that they are content to live and thrive among us, caring nothing for our trials and dangers, reading German, thinking German, revering all things German, out of sympathy with us, and in this time of need helping us grudgingly or not at all, forming at all times a fruitful soil for the sowing of the infamous lies of the German propaganda; sullenly quiet now, but potentially dangerous in the event of disaster to our arms, an alien crew richly deserving at all times social and commercial ostracism at the hands of all true Americans.

A third element is actively doing the work of Germany in America.

The fact that we have shared with them without stint all the privileges of American citizenship has not prevented them from spreading the German propaganda, organizing treasonable associations, preaching sedition, and acting as spies, incendiaries, and dynamiters. Prating of freedom of speech, while they speak of treason, they move among us freely, and do us deadly harm while as American citizens they invoke the protection of our laws.

It has at last been forced upon our knowledge that in common with the rest of the world we have for many years been subjected to the sinister workings of an institution infinitely evil, made up of the German spy system and the German propaganda.

We know that the agents and instruments of this foul scheme, unexampled in all the history of national or individual villainy, whether those agents are German ambassadors or German-Americans, are the miners and sappers, the vanguard of a brutal German soldiery.

We know that while we have been blind to the perils within our very homes—while we have welcomed all who came among us, and shared with them all the blessings of our free institutions—this unspeakable iniquity, the vilest enterprise ever conceived by a perverted and criminal intelligence, has labored ceaselessly among us to compass our destruction.

And we know that it labors among us now, with an ever-increasing boldness.

We feel that at this late day there is no need to describe this monstrous tissue of corruption, further than to say that it is a fit instrument for the furtherance of Germany's cruel and crafty scheme of world domination—that so widespread and various are its destructive activities that its service attracts and embraces criminals and criminal organizations of every grade, while much of its hellish work is done by mere dupes and fools.

We believe that the wise regulations, established for the conservation of food and fuel, are potent and even vital instruments in the development of our defense; we pledge ourselves to the observance of those rules, and urge the enactment of laws which will adequately punish those who willfully violate them.

We hold that the agent of Germany, who plots the destruction of a factory or warehouse with the purpose of destroying munitions or provisions necessary to the support of our troops or of our allies, or who plots the destruction of a ship with its cargo of innocent lives, is a thing unfit to live, and that to extend clemency to such a one simply because the plot has failed is no more wise than it would be to spare a cobra because its first stroke had missed its victim.

We believe that our safety demands the stern suppression of those, traitors and fools alike, who preach the doctrines of pacifism and nonresistance at this time, when we can preserve our liberties and the honor and lives of our women and children only by fighting for them with a united determination to win, and with our full and unhampered power.

We believe that we should not longer postpone a full reckoning with the dangers which assail us at home, and that to bear ourselves leniently toward sedition or treason is to invite disaster.

We have learned enough of German designs and German agents to know that generosity, kindness, and mercy find no echo in the black hearts of German spies, traitors, and murderers—we know that this rule holds good through all that evil crew, from ambassadors to soapbox preachers of sedition, and that when we find them at work among us our safety demands their destruction.

We bespeak for labor now and at all times a just and generous consideration, and a consideration commensurate with the indispensable and tremendous part which honest labor must play in the development and support of our national defense.

We recognize and claim for labor the right to organize for the furtherance of its every legitimate interest, but we denounce as a traitor deserving of death one who at the behest of our enemy or in the furtherance of personal and selfish designs obstructs in any way the great and patriotic work which labor must do for our salvation.

Wherefore, in the name of the millions of loyal American citizens who believe as we believe and in the name of the brave men whom we must sustain while they fight for our homes and our women, we call upon our Government for the enactment of laws which will recognize the truth that they who preach pacifism and nonresistance in this hour are public enemies; that each is more dangerous to our armies than a regiment of brutish Huns.

For the enactment and merciless enforcement of laws which will recognize the patent truth that they who plan or accomplish the destruction of supplies necessary for the sustaining of American citizens, American soldiers, or America's allies are murderers striking at the heart of a great Nation, for whom the punishment of speedy death is not only just but necessary.

For the enactment and merciless enforcement of laws, which by penalties of life imprisonment at hard labor, or death by hanging, will crush and destroy every form of sedition or treason and wipe out in America the last vestige of that evil thing through which arrogant and brutal Germany strives to pave the way for her armed hordes of robbers, rapists, and murderers.

For the enactment of laws which will make impossible the dissemination of German lies through the medium of German-language newspapers, magazines, and pamphlets.

For the enactment of laws which will wipe out of existence associations which openly or covertly prevent or delay the assimilation of citizens of German extraction.

For the enactment of laws which will recognize and punish adequately, as a dangerous public enemy, one who by spreading German-hatched lies, or by other means, attempts to interfere with the operation of the conscription laws.

For laws which by drastic penalties and rigid enforcement will destroy every phase of the system by which a cunning and cruel enemy strives to hamper our defense.

We do not present this petition without reflection. We believe that at this day the great mass of the loyal citizens of these United States are awake to the dangers herein indicated; that they are ready to face and overcome them and aid whole-heartedly in the enforcement of a system of laws enacted to that end.

We confidently assert that there is a nation-wide realization of the truth that peace-time laws, made at a time when we were ignorant of Germany's designs, and of the extent and character of the German propaganda, are pitifully inadequate for our present needs.

We submit that aside from all questions of danger to our very existence as a Nation, the continued activity among us of the bold and insolent agents of arrogant and brutal Germany is an intolerable insult, to which a free people may not longer be expected to submit.

We shall win this war. The spirit which animates this greatest of free nations will not brook defeat.

We have a precious heritage to guard, and we shall guard it.

Our women and our children shall not know the horrors of a German triumph, but let it not be said of us that we prolonged this war a single day or sacrificed the life of a single brave man because we permitted our power to support our soldiers and our allies to be impaired, because we hesitated at hanging those who would have stabbed our defenders in the back and made of us the victims of German domination.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back nine minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a member of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I shall be very much pleased if the Members present will refrain from asking questions until I can explain the provisions of the bill, and then at the end of 20 minutes I shall be glad to devote myself to answering any questions, but up to that time I would like to go on with an explanation of the bill H. R. 9414.

There seems to have been some controversy as to whose bill this is, and in order to clear up any misgivings as to whose name ought to be carried in the bill, I want to say that it is a committee bill. It is prepared by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and bears the name of the chairman, who had the right to have his name attached to it as the result of the work of the committee over which he presides. I am but a very humble member of the committee and have no desire for any distinction in connection with any work I do on the committee. I make no claim to superiority of thought or work or deed, and I want everybody to distinctly understand that if there is anybody jealous of proprietary ownership in this or any other bill, I am not the one. All I want to do is to have an opportunity to work, and I am glad to have that opportunity.

Now for the bill. First, this bill provides that for and during the period of the war and for 90 days after a certain percentage of increase shall be granted to certain employees of the Post Office Department. There are about 270,000 men and women in the Post Office Department, and, of course, whatever increase in compensation may be granted them is going to involve the expenditure of a lot of money. But the expenditure of a lot of money does not mean anything if we intend to do justice. If there was but a single individual involved in the principles that are laid down in this bill, I venture to say that no man in the United States would object to the increased compensation recommended by the bill, but merely because there are two hundred and seventy thousand and odd men and women involved in it it may be said it costs too much money. Now, the money does not concern me. It is justice that is at stake. [Applause.] And if it is just to deal on this proposition with one employee, it is equally just to deal with 270,000 employees. The question of justice is the question with which we are to deal, not with the volume of money that is involved. We are fighting a world war for justice regardless of cost in either men or money. Who will deny our right to do justice to the men in the Postal Service?

Now, this bill provides at the outset that it shall only continue in force until 90 days after the proclamation of peace. I want to be frank with the House. I am in favor of eliminating that temporary provision of the bill. I want to see the law made permanent. [Applause.] I believe the justice of the case demands it. It says that for this period, brief or long, as the case may be, the rural carriers, the maximum salary of whom is $1,200, shall receive 15 per cent in addition to what they now receive. Now, the reason why it says up to $1,200 is that $1,200 is the highest pay. If $1,500 was the highest pay, this 15 per cent would go to the $1,500, because that is what it does in other cases where the compensation of the men employed in the service is $1,500.

Then it provides that, in addition to the 15 per cent, we are to pay $24 per mile per annum for each mile that a rural carrier travels over 24 miles. He gets nothing now. That is the difference between what the bill proposes and what the existing law provides, so that if a man to-day traveled 30 miles and delivers the mail on that route for $1,200 a year, he will receive under the provisions of this bill $1,524 a year, or $324 a year more. I think that is sufficient explanation of that.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I would rather not until I get to the end of these matters. I think it will be better to make a consecutive statement. Then I will yield.

Now, with respect to the city clerks and carriers I want to say that in 1907 the Congress enacted what is known as the classification law. Under that classification law the clerks and carriers were placed in six classes. The first class was paid $800 a year, and these men were automatically promoted from $800 a year, which was the entrance salary, up to $1,200; and in that classification law there was a provision for special clerks, ranging up to $1,300 and $1,400, so that to-day we have classes in the carrier and clerk service running from $800 to $1,400 a year.

This bill proposes to continue the classification of these men. But it starts them in at $1,000 a year instead of $800 a year, and lands them finally at $1,500 a year instead of $1,400 a year. That is the story. They get no percentage increase. They simply retain their classification. They received no percentage increase last year when the employees of every other branch of the Government had their salaries increased. They were not considered as worthy.

Now, why should we treat the clerks and carriers on a different basis from other branches of the service?

I will tell you why. It is said that we ought not to pay men in the Postal Service more than is being paid in other branches of the Government service. I do not agree with that, and I have a reason for my disagreement, and I am going to tell you what it is.

To begin with, the men who enter the other branches of the service enter to perform routine work, and their hours of labor are eight per day, and they continue to go up from class to class and receive additional compensation as they move from one class to another. But they never have to work more than 8 hours a day, whereas the clerks and carriers are compelled to be on call for duty 10 hours every day. Not that they have to work 10 hours, but they must be on call. A man might just as well be at work as on call, and some men would a good deal rather work than be sitting around waiting for the hour to come when he should begin work.

Now, why are these men required to be on call? Because the trains come in at such hours that it is impossible for them to work a straight eight-hour day. In addition to that, every clerk in a first or second class office is required to learn the schemes of distributing the mail. What is the scheme of distributing the mail? It is throwing the letters which come in the post office into a given box, so that they may be dispatched for early delivery to their points of destination.

These men are required to take examinations in the study of these schemes, and it takes them two hours every day during all the period of their employment in the Postal Service to study these schemes, and they study them in their own time and at their own expense after working hours. So that these men are working not 8 hours a day but 12 hours a day, and the character of their service is totally different from that of men and women employed in every other branch of the Government service. They are required to be examined every 30 days on the question of efficiency. They are required to stand an average of 99 per cent perfect in the distribution schemes. They are required to learn and commit to memory anywhere from 3,000 to 10,000 names of post offices; and when they have learned 10,000 names of post offices, so that they can dispatch the mails with the greatest rapidity to these towns, they are given a new scheme, and the most important thing they have then to do is to forget the old scheme while they are learning the new one; and when they have learned a second scheme they are given a third, until most of these men learn every post office in the United States.

Does anyone deny the right of better compensation to men who devote their time to such a service? It is characteristic of these men to do the thing that is best to be done for the service. They are devoted to it. They have made it what it is. Their devotion, their integrity, their untiring labor, their determination to make the department popular with the people have made this department the great department that it is. [Applause.]

Now, I am not going further into that. Then we have the railway mail clerk, who goes out from place to place, assuming the danger of travel on railroads. He works all night, while we are asleep, in order that we may be able to have our mail delivered early in the morning. He has to buy his food when he reaches his destination. He sometimes is on his trip for 18 hours on a stretch, and while the average hours of employment of a railway postal clerk are said to be only six hours and a half daily, yet, on the whole, there is no employment anywhere that shatters the nerves of men to the extent that this service does. Theirs is a hazardous employment, extra hazardous, and it is hard work, and they are required to study these schemes.

It is true that in their case they have the time allowed them for the study of the schemes, but it is no easy matter for men to commit to memory thousands of names of post offices in order that they may be able to perform the duties devolved upon them by their work in such a way as to give the quickest and best possible service to the people by whom they are employed.

Then when they get into the service and have reached the highest standard of efficiency a reorganization of the service frequently finds these men turned out of the places they have reached by reason of their efficiency, and they are required to take a transfer to some unknown place, in some other section of the country; to give up the home that they have saved the money to buy; to leave their family and their friends; or, if they are unable to take the transfer which is suggested to them by the department on account of these reorganizations, they are compelled to take a place in a terminal station at $200 a year less than they were formerly receiving. This after long years of worthy service. No other business in the world demands such sacrifices from the men employed in it as does this great service. These men are willing and glad to make the sacrifices. But, you say, why do they not enter some other service? Well, they have entered this service with the hope of making it their life work. They have learned to be experts and they are experts, but what they have learned in order to make them most efficient in the Postal Service is of no value whatever in any other service in the world. They have learned nothing that is of use in commercial life, and they can not find employment in commercial life as the result of the knowledge which they have acquired in the postal service. And so while they are experts, they have but one employer to whom they can sell their labor, their brains, and their expert knowldege, and that employer is the Government of the United States.

We men on this floor speak for the Government of the United States. Then the question is, Shall we speak justly, shall we give the consideration that the case of these men justifies, shall our consideration of their case be on the basis of how it affects the Treasury or on the measure of justice involved? Are they entitled to increased compensation for the work they do? Have they rendered service that justifies their employer in saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"? If they have, then why should we not do what every other employer in the Union does to-day, recognize their right to increased compensation? Shoes that a year or two ago you could buy for $3 a pair now cost $7 or $8 a pair. It costs almost twice as much for a suit of clothes as it did two or three years ago. House rents have gone up beyond recall. Everything that goes into the expense of maintaining a family has gone beyond the reach of the ordinary man. The man who could live in comfort four or five years ago on a salary of $1,200 to-day finds himself living not on the ordinary necessaries of life but having to give them up and live in the most meager way. Seventy per cent of the men in the Postal Service in the great cities work nights. They are at work when we are asleep. They work nights for over 20 years before they earn the right to a day job. The day jobs come to the men employed in the Postal Service in the great cities by reason of seniority of service. Does anybody deny that it is much more agreeable to work in the daytime than it is to work at night? Does anyone deny that in working nights and giving up the social fabric of life these men are making sacrifices? Does anyone deny that the families of these men would be glad to have them at home in the evening? Does anyone deny that the children of these men rarely see them? Because while the children are at school or at play these men are asleep at home, and while their children are asleep at home these men are at work at night. You can not give too much consideration to these men if you want to-do them justice. [Applause.]

And the period of the war for these increased compensations would not be just. They should be permanent. They are not excessive, and the recommendation of the Post Office Committee is not only reasonable but less than just.

We provide also for assistant postmasters. To-day assistant postmasters receive 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster, but for the first time we have made it 65 per cent of the salary of the postmaster. Who will deny that these worthy men, who act as assistant postmasters throughout the country, doing the executive work of these important offices, are entitled to some consideration?

We provide also for the watchmen, the printers, the chauffeurs, the messengers, the janitors, the women in the post offices, the per diem employees, and the charwomen; and in case we have missed anybody by enumeration we provide that all employees of the Post Office Service not specifically enumerated are to be covered by the terms of this increase in compensation.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. I notice that the bill names all the employees except the carriers in the villages.

Mr. MADDEN. The village delivery service is in an experimental stage. There are only a certain number of villages to which delivery service has been given. The appropriation for that service is made in bulk, a lump sum, and the compensation paid to the men who act as carriers there is fixed by the Postmaster General. But the terms of this section of the bill increase the compensation which the Postmaster General has already fixed, by making it 15 per cent higher than it is to-day.

Mr. BOOHER. Does that cover these employees?

Mr. MADDEN. Absolutely. Every employee in the Postal Service, whether he is mentioned by name or not, is absolutely covered.

Mr. BOOHER. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Is it not a fact that there is an efficiency record kept on these people and that before they will be promoted they will have to pass this efficiency examination?

Mr. MADDEN. The men have to stand 99 per cent at every 30-day examination or they are demoted.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What salaries do janitors get?

Mr. MADDEN. Nine hundred dollars a year for the Postal Service; but if they are employed under the Treasury Department they get $55 a month; but we have covered the Treasury Department janitors in this bill, in the hope that the House will agree with us that we have done the right thing in providing for them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not many years ago, in fact quite recently, the janitors in the city post office in my home did not get $900 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. They do not get it now, because the janitors in the post office of the gentleman's city are Treasury Department employees.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does this bill make any provision for them at all?

Mr. MADDEN. It does. It puts them on the same basis as the janitors in the Postal Service.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It gives them only 15 per cent increase.

Mr. MADDEN. It gives them 15 per cent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am in favor of the increases which are given in this bill, but I do not think an increase of only 15 per cent to a janitor in my city or in any other city who gets only $55 a month is a sufficient increase. A man who gets $600 a year, with an increase of 15 per cent, will then get only $690, and that is not a living wage in these days.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree with the gentleman exactly. He ought to get more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He ought to get more. Now, why should not a man who is as poor as that, and is obliged to support himself and his wife and children on $600 a year, get more than a $90 increase? Why make any man work all day for the United States Government for $690 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say in reply to my friend from Wisconsin that we did not have jurisdiction over the men that he refers to, but we assumed the jurisdiction in order that we might do something for them. Now, I can not yield further. We assumed jurisdiction, but I believe the Appropriation Committee allowed $120 a year to these men in addition to what they were receiving. So it has no place in this bill.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; briefly.

Mr. LOBECK. In the Treasury Department they pay on an average $600 for laborers that work on the outside of the halls in the Federal buildings of the post office. Laborers on the inside are getting on the average——

Mr. MADDEN. Nine hundred dollars a year, but that is under the Post Office Department.

Mr. FARR. Has the Post Office Committee got jurisdiction of the firemen?

Mr. MADDEN. No; they are under the Treasury Department.

Mr. FARR. They will not get the 15 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. They will not get that in this bill, but the general bill passed a few days ago will give them each $120 more than they now get.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. In my town the assistant postmaster receives $620, and one clerk—the chief clerk—under the terms of this bill would receive $1,500. The assistant postmaster at the present time gets a half of the salary of the postmaster.

Mr. MADDEN. The assistant postmaster——

Mr. LARSEN. I have not finished my question.

Mr. MADDEN. I know what the gentleman is going to say, that he will get less than the chief clerk. But he can transfer himself from the position of assistant postmaster to that of clerk and take his job. He would not get anything under any circumstances unless the committee decided to give assistant postmasters consideration. There is no reason why assistant postmasters should get a higher percentage than anybody else. If he is unfortunate enough to occupy a position which is not up to the grade of the clerk, he can take the place of the clerk.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Very briefly.

Mr. KEARNS. I understood the gentleman to say a while ago that all the clerks in the mail service in the Post Office Department had increased compensation under this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Everybody is increased under the bill that works for the Post Office Department—everybody; you do not have to stop to enumerate them.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not include third-class postmasters.

Mr. MADDEN. We do not take postmasters into consideration at all; they are not employees.

Mr. KEARNS. There are 120 chief clerks.

Mr. MADDEN. Every man receiving compensation below $1,800 is increased.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What is the increased compensation for clerks at third-class post offices?

Mr. MADDEN. Third-class offices have no clerks. The clerk hire is allowed by the Postmaster General out of a lump-sum appropriation that is placed at the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They are not increased?

Mr. MADDEN. Not unless the Postmaster General increases the compensation of the postmasters. They are not clerks, but are paid out of the amount that is allowed to the postmaster. I want to call attention to the fact that we have fixed an eight-hour day for laborers who work in the Post Office Department, and that is something that they never had before. [Applause.] In the last bill passed by Congress last year there was an increased compensation of 5 to 10 per cent. It was provided that men receiving up to $1,000 in the Post Office Service should be the beneficiaries of that compensation, but the Comptroller of the Treasury ruled that the increased compensation could not apply to any person in the Post Office Service, no matter whether he came within the range of salary or not, if he had been in the service before the 3d of March last year. So while men who have been in the service for years and were experts were denied the right of increased compensation, the men who came in after the 3d of March received it. We have a provision in this bill that is retroactive and which provides that the men who were denied the right of increased compensation, which Congress intended they should have, shall be paid from the 1st of July last up to the time this law becomes effective. So they are provided for.

One more thing. We provide for an increased compensation to fourth-class postmasters. To-day the law provides that fourth-class postmasters shall have all of the cancellations up to $50, 60 per cent up to another amount, 50 per cent over a certain amount, and 40 per cent over a certain other amount.

This bill provides that the fourth-class postmasters are to receive all cancellations up to $100, and that the present law shall be effective in every other respect, so that now under the provisions of this bill in fourth-class offices where the cancellation amounts to $100 a quarter, every dollar of that will go to the fourth-class postmaster, and he will thereby receive $80 a year more than he is receiving to-day. If he has more cancellations than $100 per quarter he will receive the same percentages on these cancellations that he receives to-day under existing law.

Now, I want to pay my compliments to the members of the Post Office Committee for the uniform courtesy they have shown to me in connection with the work on which we have been engaged. A draft of this bill and an agreement to the terms of the bill has been no easy matter. We have reached our conclusions as the result of compromise. Sometimes we have not agreed happily. But before we got through we were all happy and all a single family, and, although there may be members of the Post Office Committee who are opposed to this bill, and have the right to express their views as I claim the right to express mine, I shall not find fault with any man on the committee or elsewhere if he does not agree with me. I believe that this bill is a good bill, except that its provisions for increased compensation are temporary instead of permanent. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon this bill in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, in the 20 minutes allotted to me I regret to say that I will not have time to discuss all of the provisions of the bill that I would like to, and there are therefore some that I shall not attempt to discuss. Your committee had this legislation under advisement for more than two months. We had extended hearings and representatives were there from all branches of the Postal Service, from the rural free-delivery associations, from the railway mail clerks' association, and the post office, and the city letter carriers, as well as the fourth-class postmasters. About 150 Members of Congress appeared in person before our committee indorsing this legislation.

The first provision of the bill refers to the Rural Free Delivery Service and provides that carriers in that service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles. At the present time a rural carrier's compensation for a standard route of 24 miles is $1,200. There are quite a number of routes in the United States more than 24 miles in length. Some of them are as much as 28 and 30 miles in length, and for these extra miles more than 24 miles the carrier gets absolutely nothing. We must all agree that that is not fair to the carrier. We provide a flat increase of 15 per cent up to and including the $1,200 salary, and $24 per mile for the excess miles above 24. The average compensation of rural carriers is $1,174 per annum. Out of this compensation he must pay for his equipment, for a horse and buggy, and the maintenance of both, and in some instances—and I know that this is true in my own district—some carriers must use two horses because of road conditions. I have had some statements furnished me which would show that the expense of some of the rural carriers throughout the country is almost as much as the compensation they are receiving from the Government. This, as a matter of course, has caused quite a number of resignations, and from July 1, 1917, to December 30 of the same year there were 3,705 resignations in the Rural Free Delivery Service.

Mr. HELM. How many of those resignations were due to enlistment in the Army or as a result of conscription?

Mr. BELL. That I do not know; but I think the percentage is small. I do not know just what it is. I am sorry that I can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a suggestion?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say to the rural carriers of the country that they have no better friend anywhere in America than the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], who has devoted himself, in season and out of season, to the promotion of justice to these men. [Applause.]

Mr. BELL. I thank the gentleman for that statement.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I just want to supplement the statement of the gentleman from Illinois in what he said in respect to the gentleman from Georgia as a friend of the rural carriers by saying that the gentleman from Georgia is one of the best friends of the Postal Service employees in the big cities and the country over that we have ever had on the Post Office Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. As I understand, those rural carriers drafted into the military service do not resign, but they are given a leave of absence and a substitute is put in their place until their return.

Mr. BELL. They can resume their work at the end of the war. Mr. Chairman, there are 43,444 rural routes in the United States. There are 43,318 carriers. There are more routes than there are carriers for the reason that a carrier can carry two routes; that is, three times a week. Hence the difference in the number of carriers and the number of routes. The average mileage on the 43,444 routes in the United States is 25.29. So you can see the large number of routes that are more than 24 miles, which the carriers now only receive $1,200 for carrying. Here is an item that I believe is of interest to us all and that we will appreciate. The cost of delivering mail over the rural routes in the United States, with the large number that we have, is only 15 cents per mile. It costs the Government of the United States only 15 cents per mile to deliver the vast quantity of mail that it does now to the rural sections of the country, and this service, in my judgment, is the greatest blessing the people in the rural sections have received from their Government in a hundred years.

The daily average covered, in miles, is 1,103,662. The annual mileage covered is 338,824,387. The rural mail is delivered every year in the United States to 5,882,797 families, representing 27,000,000 people. So you may see that with an annual appropriation of not more than $53,000,000 you are delivering at the doors of the people in the rural sections to one-fourth of the population of the United States.

I regret to take issue with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads when he made the statement that the star service was as good service as that of the rural free delivery. The distinguished chairman must have been dreaming and thinking about the service that we had just after the Civil War. There is no comparison between the service of the rural free delivery and that of the star-route service, and I would dislike very much, and I hope I will never live to see the day that the Government of the United States will go back to the old star-route contract service. [Applause.] The cost of the Rural Free Delivery Service to each patron annually in the United States is only $1.95. Something was said about the salaries of the assistant postmasters of the first and second class. They were paid——

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOWELL. Did the committee consider the question of making an allowance for the upkeep or for the expense of the carrier rather than the additional expense of the carrier at the present time?

Mr. BELL. We did consider that; yes, sir. We thought it would be very much better to provide a flat increase up to salaries of $1,200, and then give them increase for the mileage over 24 miles, than to have the equipment allowance, because it would be less work for the department and more satisfactory to the carriers.

Mr. DOWELL. Could not there have been a limited amount for upkeep and expenses that would have covered all of the carriers in the country?

Mr. BELL. Well, I think so; yes. But, as I have said, I think the increase we have given the carriers is very much more satisfactory to them and to the department.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it sufficient? Under the increase the gentleman has just given I think the expenses are something in the neighborhood of $600 per annum for each carrier?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The added increase will not take care of that expenditure?

Mr. BELL. Well, it will in most instances, I think, and possibly in all of them.

The salaries of assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices could not, under current law, exceed 50 per cent of the postmaster's salary. We provide an increase of 15 per cent for these assistant postmasters, and they are entitled to it. My observation teaches me that the assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices, in many instances, do really more work and have more responsibility than the postmaster himself.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is that 15 per cent on the assistant postmaster's salary or 15 per cent of the principal's salary that is granted to the assistant?

Mr. BELL. No; they are entitled to 15 per cent where they receive salaries up to and including $1,200 per annum.

Mr. SLOAN. Assistant postmasters?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir. But they can not get more than 50 per cent of the postmaster's salary now.

Mr. SLOAN. And they get under your bill 65 per cent of the postmaster's salary?

Mr. BELL. They get 15 per cent added to the amount which they get.

Mr. SLOAN. Of their own salary or 15 per cent of the principal's salary?

Mr. BELL. Of their own salary.

Here is the section that I want to call special attention to—section 4, which says:

That the Postmaster General shall have authority to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route and screen and wagon service with a view to adjusting compensation and adjust the same in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment.

That is the only way by which we felt the star contractors, who are now suffering in the flesh on account of the low bids submitted and the contracts accepted, on account of the high cost of living, could be helped, and the only way by which we could do anything for them, and we were obliged to leave it in the discretion of the Postmaster General. Under the present law, if a contractor refuses to carry his contract further it becomes the duty of the sureties on that contract to carry that mail. If they refuse to do it, then the Government proceeds to collect the amount on the bond.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman know how many of these contracts could be modified under the provisions of the bill just referred to?

Mr. BELL. No. That would take a personal investigation by a representative of the department in order to find that out.

Mr. DOWELL. Did the committee make an investigation as to the condition of these contracts and as to what it would cost the Government to revise the contracts in accordance with the provision of the bill?

Mr. BELL. They did not undertake that, but they allow the Postmaster General and give him discretion to change these contracts where the circumstances justify it, and the investigations will be made by representatives of the department.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, if the contract was made before the war on terms that the contractor could not comply with because of the high cost of living, the Postmaster General is permitted to make a change in that contract to fit the present conditions? Is that the purpose of this?

Mr. BELL. That is correct. That is the intention of this provision.

Mr. SLOAN. For what period are these contracts of which you speak usually drawn?

Mr. BELL. For a four-year period.

Mr. PLATT. Is the gentleman going to touch upon the $300,000 appropriation for motor mail routes before he concludes?

Mr. BELL. I will hardly have the time to do that, I guess. I only wish I had the time to do so.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Are the increases provided for in this bill annual increases or do they increase year after year?

Mr. BELL. Which particular branch of the service do you refer to?

Mr. HELM. In other words, I understood the chairman to say that this would make an increase of $26,000,000 next year. What are the probable increases year after next?

Mr. BELL. He was referring then to city carriers, I think.

Mr. HELM. What is the estimated annual increase as the result of the passage of this bill?

Mr. BELL. Well, about $30,000,000.

Mr. HELM. That is for the first year?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. HELM. What will it be for the second year?

Mr. BELL. It would be more, but I would not undertake to give the exact figures.

Mr. BLACK. I can give the figures, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. BELL. I will be glad to do that.

Mr. BLACK. The increase, if the bill is passed as it stands, will be for the first year $25,000,000 plus, and for the next year $36,000,000, and for the third year $48,000,000, and for the fourth year $53,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. HELM. What about the fifth year?

Mr. BLACK. Well, it reaches the peak of cost about the fourth year.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, let me inquire how much time I have to my credit?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas). The gentleman has four minutes left.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Some time ago there was a bill in the House for the relief of a screen-wagon contractor in Kansas City. I presume that this bill will cover his case?

Mr. BELL. It does. I would like to say to the gentleman, too, that that was one of the cases that attracted my attention and caused me to ask the committee to put that provision in the bill. It was particularly that case at Kansas City, Mo., and I have some cases in my district which should have readjustment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Did the committee have its attention called to other specific instances?

Mr. BELL. I do not think the committee did, as a whole, but I think individual members did.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is no doubt of the equity in that case?

Mr. BELL. No; I have no doubt of it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about the compensation of employees in third-class post offices.

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is it the gentleman's contention that the bill does not carry any increase to employees of third-class post offices?

Mr. BELL. It is my understanding that it does not carry any increase to employees of third-class post offices.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What is the explanation of this language, beginning in line 17, "and all other postal employees not enumerated in section 1 whose rate of compensation is $1,200 or less per annum shall receive 15 per cent increase in their compensation"?

Mr. BELL. My understanding is that clerks in post offices of the third class are not strictly postal employees under the Government service, but are selected by and through the postmaster himself and paid through the postmaster.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have a statement made by the Postmaster General, which has been handed to me by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], in reference to the bill H. R. 9414, which is the bill under consideration, and in his statement of the amount of appropriation necessary to carry out the increase he says, "15 per cent increase to the clerical employees at third-class offices, $300,000."

Mr. BELL. These clerks are paid through the postmasters, as I understand it, and they are not strictly postal employees of the Government. They are paid out of an allowance, a lump-sum amount, a lump-sum appropriation, and it is in the discretion of the Post Office Department as to how much will be allowed to any particular post office for that purpose.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That lump-sum appropriation is $2,000,000, as I understand it?

Mr. BELL. Yes; I think so.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Fifteen per cent of that would be $300,000. That is the amount the Postmaster General estimates as necessary to increase the salaries of the postal employees 15 per cent.

Mr. BELL. The increase here is to the postal employees. These are not, in a sense, postal employees, but they are employed by the postmaster, and paid by him, and partly out of his own pocket sometimes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Evidently the Postmaster General construes that differently, in view of his statement in connection with the bill. Does not the gentleman think those employees are entitled to have their compensation increased along with the others? I believe they are about the poorest paid of all.

Mr. BELL. I would be willing to support something for these people because I think they are entitled to it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman thinks they should be taken care of in the bill?

Mr. BELL. Yes; I think so.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. In line 2 assistants in first and second class post offices are mentioned, and then they are not mentioned afterwards, where they belong, whether in first or second class offices. They might be in the third class.

Mr. BELL. Assistant postmasters in offices of the first and second classes are paid direct by the Government.

Mr. LOBECK. But the language here would indicate that any post-office clerk employed in the post-office service would be entitled to this increase. Unless it is amended, it seems to me it might be construed in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, in reply to what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] said, this latter language does not seem to connect up with the language in the first part of the section.

Mr. LOBECK. That is what I was referring to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Evidently these officials' salaries would be increased under this bill.

Mr. BELL. Does the gentleman mean clerks in third-class offices?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. At least if the Postmaster General so construed it. Now, my friend knows that these people are really about the poorest paid in the public service.

Mr. BELL. Yes; they are poorly paid, but they are employed by the postmasters themselves, and that portion of their compensation paid by the Government is paid to the postmaster and paid out by him to the clerks in his office.

Mr. RANDALL. The clerks in third-class post offices are not employees of the Post Office Department at all. They are employees of the postmaster. He fixes the salary of his clerk and pays it himself, and most of it is paid out of his own pocket. The Post Office Department has nothing to do with the amount of it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. But the Post Office Department has something to do with the amount of it, because it makes the allowance for clerk hire at that particular point.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly; but that is no indication of the salary the clerk receives. The postmaster pays a portion of the salary out of his own pocket.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The postmaster would not be permitted to pay it unless he had an employee there.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly; but he pays a part of it out of his own pocket.

Mr. LOBECK. He has to write to the Postmaster General to get this clerk.

Mr. ALMON. Is not that clerk a post-office clerk?

Mr. RANDALL. He is not paid a salary as a post-office clerk.

Mr. BELL. The gentleman from California is correct in his statement. I am glad to see such universal approval, on both sides of the aisle, of this bill. I feel that it is a meritorious measure, and I trust it will pass without a dissenting vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HAMLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on March 21, 1918, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 175. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes"; and

S. 3752. An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

INCREASED COMPENSATION TO EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWIFT].

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I note with much gratification the legislation proposed in the pending bill for the improvement of the conditions of the employees in the Postal Service. I have attended hearings on the bill and registered my approval of its purposes and objects, particularly those relating to the increase of compensation.

The Postal Service is the one great department of the Government with which the public is thoroughly familiar, and therefore is the most popular branch of the Government service. The expansion of postal facilities by the incorporation of the parcel-post act and the Postal Savings System has been universally approved by the people.

The letter carriers and clerks in the City Delivery Service must be high-minded men of exceptional physical ability and, moreover, possess unusual intelligence to pass the prescribed civil-service examination before they can enter the service. Their duties are arduous and exacting and require the exercise of uniform patience and courtesy. The discipline of the service is extremely strict and the penalties imposed for infraction of the rules is rigorous and severe.

They are intrusted with the collection and delivery of the mail, which contains securities of great value and carry messages of sorrow and joy to the people in every walk of life. The trusted messengers of the people, they are and must be men of high character and integrity, possessed of personal traits whereby they can render satisfactory service to an exacting public.

Postal employees should receive compensation commensurate with the responsibility of the duties they perform and should likewise be granted every reasonable consideration to encourage the rendition of high-grade service. I am confident the people will welcome the passage of this legislation, as is evidenced by the adoption of affirmative resolutions by numerous civic and other nonpartisan organizations throughout the country. It is my earnest hope that the Congress will adopt in the near future more comprehensive remedial legislation than that outlined in the pending bill.

I shall continue to give this bill my unqualified support and trust that some small measure of justice will be granted to the splendid body of men in the Postal Service by the prompt enactment of the pending bill into public law.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] five minutes.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes allotted to me I will not attempt to go into the bill in general. I do want to say, however, that it is a very pleasing thing that so many Members of the House are alive to the real situation that confronts the men who are employed in the Post Office Department. That is one of the reasons why your committee have worked so hard to bring in a bill that will pass in this Congress. I would go even further than this bill goes, if I had my way, and make a further increase in many of these salaries. I would also wipe out that provision in the bill which makes it apply only during the war. If the speeches that have been made here to-day in behalf of the employees of the Post Office Department are any criterion to go by, then I think it will be in keeping with the minds of the Members of this House to adopt an amendment which will be offered wiping out the limitation and making these increases permanent law.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Do I understand that amendment will be offered by the committee?

Mr. TAGUE. No; I did not say that. But I understand the amendment is to be offered.

Mr. DYER. I hope it will be offered and I hope it will pass.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, this bill aims to bring about partial justice to the men who serve in the post offices of the country. This branch of the service is to my mind nearer and closer to the people than any other and at the same time altogether different from any other branch of the public service. The men who enter the employment of the Post Office Department have to wait years before they have an opportunity to earn even a fair day's pay. They enter the department first as substitutes and are obliged to report at the post office every morning after they have been called to do substitute work. Some days some of them earn barely enough to pay their car fare back and forth from and to their homes. Then when they enter the permanent service they receive $800 a year, and it is five years before they reach the point where they are getting anywhere near a compensation sufficient to take care of their families.

Not alone that, but 75 per cent of all the service of the clerks in the post offices is performed during the night. My colleague on the committee [Mr. MADDEN] has told you that these clerks are compelled to work 8 and 10 hours. They are also obliged to work the time that it takes them to make the efficiency tests. Add to this the time it takes in going back and forth to and from their work, and in many instances the total amount is more than 12 hours in each day.

They enter this service young, active, virile men, able to meet the efficiency tests, able to meet any demand that is made upon them. They enter the service with a vigor and determination to do something for the Government and to perform good service. What do they receive in return? By the character of the work which they do they grow old in service before they are old in years, prematurely old by the labor they have to perform under artificial light, many times in insanitary workshops, working day and night, laboring earnestly for the mere pittance that they receive.

The carriers work in all kinds of weather; in rain or sunshine, in cold and heat, and many times under very trying conditions.

When they have grown old they are either demoted temporarily or discharged immediately from the service of the Government and are unfit to perform service in any other department. That is because the service is different from any other service. There is no other employer in the country that employs men to do that same service. They have no competitor; they can not sell their services to any other employer; the moment they cease to be of value to the Government of the United States that moment they cease to be of any earning value to themselves or their families. [Applause.]

There are a number of reasons, valid and substantial reasons, why the Congress should as speedily as possible enact legislation granting wage increases for post-office clerks, city letter carriers, railway mail clerks, and other deserving postal employees.

It is not exactly accurate to say that postal clerks and city letter carriers are seeking a wage increase. A wage restoration is the more exact term. The present maximum wage standard for these groups of workers was fixed in 1907. Every upward jump of the cost of living since that time—and there have been many—has operated as a wage reduction for these men. Hence any increase in their compensation at this time would merely place them in the same status they were in a decade ago when Congress fixed the existing maximum wage standard.

One of the best arguments in favor of a higher wage for postal employees is found in the report from the House Post Office Committee submitted to the House in January, 1917, in support of the committee action in recommending a relatively small number of increases for special clerks and supervisory employees. It reads:

1. The high cost of living, which bears heavily on the employees whose salaries are stationary and fixed by law.
2. The fact that these employees serve an apprenticeship as substitutes for an average period of four years at an approximate wage of $35 per month, or $420 per annum, during their period of substitution. When they receive a regular appointment they start in at an annual salary of $800, and if they render satisfactory service they must serve five years in regular employment before they reach the $1,200 grade, or a total of nine years from the time that they enter the service. During the nine years these employees average $742.22 per annum. Their work is not only hard and laborious but it requires men of exceptional ability and character to perform the duties in the efficient manner required of employees by the rules of the Post Office Department.
3. The committee is of the opinion that these promotions will tend to improve the service by giving encouragement to the employees who will profit thereby.

The above argument, while in this instance is only applied to a few of the employees, can with equal justification be applied to all.

Contrary to the general belief, post-office clerks and city letter carriers and other postal employees do not enjoy Saturday half holidays at any time throughout the year. Neither have they the benefit of a 30-day vacation or sick leave. Their vacation is limited to 15 days, and they must suffer a loss of pay for the time they lose from work on account of sickness.

NIGHT WORK.

The question of night work is a large one in the life of every post-office clerk. Approximately 70 per cent of the post-office clerks are compelled to work at night, because of the fact that most business houses and other large patrons of the post office do not deposit their mail until after the close of the business day.

The night work, performed as it is by the clerks standing at a letter case or pouch rack, working under artificial light, with the eyes constantly employed, deciphering all kinds of addresses, is unnatural, detrimental to health, and seriously impairs the eyesight.

Night work constitutes the most discouraging feature that confronts men entering the Postal Service. It cuts them off from all of the natural social life of the community; it destroys the possibility of happy home life, depriving the head of the family of the opportunity to enjoy his leisure hours with his family.

Contrary to the practice prevailing in the Government Printing Office and in the British postal service, the Government does not grant any time or wage differentials to men in the post offices who must toil at night.

RESIGNATIONS.

Although the First Assistant Postmaster General told the House Post Office Committee there were but few resignations above the normal number from the Postal Service, there is positive evidence to the contrary. Postmaster Chance, of Washington, made this public statement:

Since the war started this office has lost more than 140 experienced men, and these places can not be filled by men without previous knowledge of the Postal Service.

This is a typical situation. The superintendent of mails at Chicago makes exactly the same complaint—the efficiency of the mail service is affected because experienced men are quitting for more attractive work and more attractive wages elsewhere. Any practical post-office man knows that it takes from three to five years to train a distributor. It is a shortsighted policy indeed for the Government to permit these trained, experienced men, whose work is essential in the daily task of keeping the Nation's mail in motion, to slip out of the service because of the lack of substantial recognition from the Government of their worth as workers.

Nor is this exodus from the service confined to the older and more experienced employees. In practically all of the larger offices there is great difficulty in securing auxiliary and substitute employees. I quote from an ad in the "want-ad" column of the Chicago News:

One thousand post-office clerks; examination January 28, 1918; apply thirteenth floor, Federal building.

Mr. Boyd, head of the State employment department of Illinois, made this public statement with reference to the difficulty of securing employees in the Chicago post office:

We are sending them—

men every day, but they can not keep their men. Those men are put in as substitutes at 35 cents an hour. As soon as they have been there long enough they are put on regularly at 27½ cents an hour. They are given a big scheme to study after their working hours. If it is a day shift, they work 11 hours, and the night shift works 13 hours.

The following news clipping from the Seattle paper describes a condition that is general:

RESIGN POST-OFFICE JOBS TO WORK IN SHIPYARDS.

Twelve special-delivery carriers, the entire force of the Seattle, Wash., post office, to-day served this notice on the postmaster:

"We quit December 31 to go to work in the shipyards on New Year's Day for more money."

Here is a typical letter of resignation from a clerk who is quitting the service because of the few opportunities it presents for advancement:

MACON, GA., February 22, 1918.

Mr. T. F. FLAHERTY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am leaving the Postal Service because it is absolutely no satisfaction to me to remain in it longer, and because the future looks better on the outside. I think that the United States Postal Service offers the least inducement of anything I know of that a young man can drift or can get into, and especially at this time. Those who remain in it and those who may get into it surely have my sympathy. I am the fifth man to resign at this office this month. What do you think of that for an office of this size. Three of them regulars and two subs.

With very best wishes,
Yours, fraternally, (Signed) C. A. HARDY.

Here is another letter of the same character, written by D. B. Finley, who, after five years' service in the city division of the Louisville (Ky.) post office, resigned February 1, 1918:

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 1, 1918.

DEAR FRIENDS: I am leaving the Postal Service because I feel that there is no future here for me, as I have neither personal nor political influence that might be brought to bear whereby I might be elevated from the ranks of the workers and placed in one of the more lucrative positions in the Postal Service.

I say this advisedly, because I wish you to understand that I believe firmly that under present conditions no clerk, however proficient he may be in his profession, and no matter how long and assiduously he might have worked at his duties, will either receive day work or elevation from that large body of clerks who are working when others sleep for salaries that do not compensate them for the hardships of night work and the long hours that must be devoted to scheme study.

(Signed) DANIEL BOOTH FINLEY.

UNITED STATES POSTAL EMPLOYEES MOST EFFICIENT.

This is a fact that is not generally known. Statistics show that the postal employees of the United States are more efficient with respect to handling a greater quantity of mail than the employees of the English, French, or German postal systems. In the United States the average number of pieces of mail matter handled per employee was 51,000; in Germany, 25,000; in France, 38,000; in England, 31,000. This tabulation was made in 1908, but I am quite sure the ratio in favor of the United States still holds good, despite the statements of the Postmaster General that the insistence on the part of the employees to maintain their organizations is crippling service efficiency.

INCREASE GRANTED TO OTHER EMPLOYEES.

The postal employees were the only large group of Government employees excluded from the wage increases voted to other Government employees by the Sixty-fourth Congress. In a number of declarations various governmental agencies, particularly the Council of National Defense, has urged private employers to take into consideration increased living costs in fixing wages. It is incongruous, to say the least, for the Government to advise private employers to adopt such a policy and then fail to follow an equally enlightened policy in conducting its own establishments.

I invite your attention to the ruling made by the shipyard labor adjustment board in settling labor disputes between the employers and the shipbuilders. This covers all wooden shipyards south of Baltimore and all steel shipyards south of Newport News on both the Atlantic and Gulf coasts:

(1) Eight hours shall constitute a day's work from Monday to Saturday, inclusive: Provided, That during the months of June, July, and August the working day on Saturdays shall be four hours.
(2) Work in excess of these periods on any week day shall be counted as overtime and paid for at the rate of time and one-half.
(3) Work in excess of 60 hours a week for any employee shall not be permitted, except on repair work or when ordered by the Navy Department or the Emergency Fleet Corporation or to protect life or property from imminent danger.
(4) Work on Sundays and the following holidays shall be paid for at the rate of double time: New Year's Day, Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day or Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day.
(5) Men employed on the night shift shall receive compensation 5 per cent higher than is paid to those employed on the day shift.
(6) Employees engaged on repair work in or upon vessels undergoing repair shall receive double time for all overtime on week days as defined above, as well as on Sundays and the specified holidays.

Assuming that the above award is a fair standard, it is significant to note that the Government in its conduct of its post offices does not even approach this standard. For instance, post-office clerks do not receive Saturday half holidays at any time during the year. Neither do they receive time and a half for overtime. It is true they are paid for overtime, but only at the prevailing rate of pay, and because of this it is difficult to make the department properly administer the eight-hour law, and excessive overtime service is imposed on distributors. Neither is there any weekly maximum number of hours set for a post-office clerk. Many of them are forced to work in excess of 60 hours weekly. As before stated, there is no wage differential for the men employed at night.

The following resolution, adopted at the convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Buffalo last November, is an expression from the organized workers of the country favorable to an increase in pay for post-office clerks and city letter carriers of not less than 25 per cent:

Resolution No. 110.—By Edward J. Gainor, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, and Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Association of Postal Employees.

Whereas the salary standard of letter carriers and post-office clerks fixed by Congress more than 10 years ago still remains the same; and
Whereas the cost of living during this period has advanced an average of approximately 100 per cent; and
Whereas this increase in the cost of living has operated to all intents and purposes exactly the same as a 50 per cent reduction in wages; and
Whereas the postal employees were the only class excluded from the horizontal wage increase granted to Government employees by the last Congress, notwithstanding the fact that the Post Office is the only governmental department operated upon a self-sustaining basis, its most recent audit showing an annual surplus in excess of $9,000,000; and
Whereas postal employees are highly specialized workers functioning in a Government monopoly, performing a service which gradually unfits them for employment elsewhere, with no hope of selling their skill to a competing private industrial establishment; and
Whereas despite this fact there have been resignations from the service in such numbers as to seriously cripple its efficiency, delaying the dispatch and delivery of all classes of mail, imperiling the business efficiency of the country at a time when such business efficiency is most needed; and
Whereas because of its oppressive labor policy the Post Office Department has been unable to keep its working force recruited to a proper standard: And therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, deeply deplores this self-evident injustice to a deserving class of public employees, and it urges upon Congress the immediate enactment of a law increasing the pay of these employees not less than 25 per cent; and be it further

Resolved, That the executive council be instructed to cooperate with the officers of all affiliated postal organizations to have the justice of this case brought forcibly to the attention of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each Congressman and Senator by the secretary of the American Federation of Labor.

With regard to other wage increases that have been granted, page 122 of the December Monthly Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that the average increase of wages in 13 classes of industries during the year from October, 1916, to October, 1917, was 18.1 per cent, and the December, 1916, Monthly Review shows that between October, 1915, and October, 1916, there was an average increase of 20.2 per cent. Similar reports for every month in the last two years have shown constantly increasing wages. The report of the New York State department of labor for November, 1917, shows that wages have increased from a ratio of 100 in August, 1915, to a ratio of 170 in November, 1917, with a ratio of increase in the number of employees from 100 to 120, or nearly 50 per cent increase within the last two and a half years.

Latest statistics of the Department of Labor are borne out with regard to food and other items of cost of living by Bradstreets reports. These reports show the cost of living, based on 100 different items, has advanced from a ratio figure of 12.08 in December, 1916, to 16.91 in November, 1917, or 32 per cent in 11 months. This is probably the best estimate that can be made of the exact increase in the cost of living.

About one-half—or 50 per cent—of the pay check is spent for food, which has advanced 86½ per cent in three years.

Assuming that all other items in the family budget have remained stationary in price, it would require pay increase of 43 per cent to break even, as against the cost of living in 1914.

What has happened to the cost of coal, shoes, clothing, and about everything else is only too well known.

Conservatively figured, the cost of living has advanced in the past three years about 75 per cent.

Were it not for the wise and energetic work of the United States Food Administration many of these prices would now be very much higher than they are. This is particularly true of flour, bread, sugar, and all canned goods.

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, in its report of the cost of living in the District of Columbia, shows that $1,082.80 is the least possible amount on which a family could live decently in 1916. This necessarily means that with an increase of more than 30 per cent since 1916, the majority of the Government employees have lowered the standard of living greatly, they are not living decently, that they are piling up debts which they have not any hope of paying, and that literally thousands are working nights and Sundays to make ends meet.

Because this large and important group of workers is unable to bring its grievances sharply to the attention of the Congress and the public is no valid reason for ignoring its pleas for relief year after year. These men have been patient; they have been long-suffering. Their case is a just one. Will the Congress not recognize this fact by the immediate enactment of legislation granting the postal workers increased compensation?

By unanimous consent the following Members were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD: Mr. DYER, Mr. MADDEN, and Mr. STEENERSON.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken or may speak on the bill may have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas). The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all who have spoken or may speak may extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DOWELL. Does that include those who had time but have not got the opportunity to occupy it?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request, because I doubt whether it could be made in committee. It will have to be made in the open House. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am, in the main, in sympathy with this measure. There are glaring inequalities in it. They should be corrected. I shall offer amendments, if others do not, to reach some of the most flagrant. I want, however, to discuss more particularly the question of rural letter carriers. It is fundamental that honest effort coupled with sobriety and economy should produce a competency. Every man who toils, whether in office or shop, in the forest or the field, produces wealth enough to maintain himself and care for his family and educate his children. No one should be required to spend his strength in the service of his fellow man either as a producer or distributor of wealth and himself be denied a decent maintenance while he toils and a competency when age shall come. Any economical system or condition that denies to the toiler these rewards is unjust and indefensible. And yet that very condition prevails with reference to rural letter carriers. The wages paid will barely maintain the carrier and family and keep up his equipage. I sincerely doubt that it will do that under the present conditions. I know he can make no provision against misfortune, disease, or old age. It matters not how earnestly and conscientiously and intelligently the carrier may serve, the end promises no more than the beginning—a bare maintenance, if that. There are no grades or classes to which he may look forward to promotion. There is nothing in the future to which he may look for relief except a sense of justice in Congress, and heretofore that has been lacking. The cost and maintenance of his equipage now consumes about one-half of his pay. His family must then be fed and clothed, his children educated, and the future provided for on an income that does not exceed the cost of a buggy and two horses and their upkeep. Put it more bluntly, he must maintain his family, feed, clothe, and educate his children, on what it costs to feed his horses. I hardly think a condition that puts a family on a level, so far as the cost of maintenance goes, with the upkeep of a team is a just condition. And I, for one, protest against it with all the vehemence with which I am endowed. I know this condition is not right. I know that we can not justify it.

I have had the good fortune to spend one-half of my life in the country. I hope to spend there the most of the remaining part of it. I know well the conditions of the average country community. I know with what eagerness the family looks forward to the arrival of the rural letter carrier. I know how the days are made brighter when letters come, and I know something, also, of the sense of disappointment when they do not come. These conditions I speak of are of normal times. How much more, then, is the arrival of the rural letter carrier looked forward to by the family since war has come, since every family, or nearly every one, has a son with the colors, some yet in training, others already beyond the seas. I know, too, with what sympathy and cheer the letter carrier performs his duties. I have had the pleasure of accompanying many of them on their rounds. I have yet to know of one who was not faithful to his duties and courteous to every patron on his route.

It seems to me that if there is anyone who is a friend of the whole community, it is the letter carrier, who on his daily rounds distributes the mail that brings happiness or sorrow to nearly every patron on his line. I know conditions have wonderfully improved in most communities whenever a rural route has been established to serve their needs. I know, too, that most of these routes are too long, the work on them too irksome. What kind of men are these carriers that they should be discriminated against as employees of our country? Are they less patriotic than those in other lines of employment? Are they less intelligent and faithful than the city letter carriers, whose future is more or less cared for in the provisions of this bill? Are their duties less arduous? Are their responsibilities less grave? We can answer "no" to each of these queries. The rural letter carrier has to be the equal if not the superior of the city letter carrier in point of intelligence, in adaptability, in courtesy, in patience, in faithfulness, in the discharge of duties under adverse circumstances. He must not only take up and distribute the mail; he must perform most of the functions, if not all, of the fourth-class postmaster. Why, then, with all these responsibilities and multifarious duties, should he be compelled to spend for the instrumentalities by means of which he discharges his duties one-half of all that he receives in compensation for his labors? No one expects the mail clerk to have built and equipped and operated at his own expense the car in which is transported the mail. No one requires the postmaster to build and equip the office for the distribution of mail, and even the mounted city letter carriers are supplied with their full equipment. All of these perform duties no less arduous, no less responsible than the rural letter carrier, and all receive more compensation with better opportunities for advancement than he. All of them work under conditions more conducive to health, to pleasure, to comfort than he. Whoever imagines that the driving for six days in every week over a route from 25 to 30 miles in length, much of it over roads that are but barely passable, is a pleasant task when weather is fair, and how much more must it become a burden in bad weather, in the cold, amid the snows of winter.

Add to this from 200 to 500 patrons that must be served, each one entitled to all the considerations of a citizen of this great Republic, each one with his little wants, his little errands to be run, and each one a friend of the rural letter carrier and demanding that courtesy and consideration that a friend has a right to expect from a friend and that all invariably receive from the rural letter carrier. Consider all these and then say that $1,200 a year maximum pay, one-half of which must be expended for equipage, is ample compensation for these services. It is not right and we can not justify ourselves if we demand these services and shall refuse adequate pay to this highly patriotic and deserving class of governmental employees. I know that sometimes it is said that rural letter-mail service does not pay. By that is meant that it returns no profit in money to the Post Office Department.

But this Government is not a business institution. It owes service and should render it. If it ceases to do that it ceases to be a just Government. Every citizen is entitled to equal service, and you people who live in cities and who insist that there shall be a mail delivery every hour or two during the day, and then begrudge fair compensation to the carrier who delivers one mail a day to the farmer, have a rather peculiar viewpoint, it seems to me. I do not contend for hourly delivery of mail to the farmer, not that he is not entitled to receive it as much as the man in the city, but because of the conditions I do not urge it; but I do urge that every farmer that can be reached is entitled to daily mail delivered at his door, and that the agent of this Government that delivers his mail is entitled to as much consideration and compensation as the man who delivers the mail to the banker, to the lawyer, or to the doctor within the city; and I hope that this is the day when we may unite our efforts to effect this even-handed justice. I want to see the rural letter carrier as generously dealt with as the clerk or city carrier. I want justice done all employees, both city and country, and I shall introduce amendments to secure this. I want to see this Government recognize the truth that the laborer is worthy of his hire; the Government equip the rural letter carrier as it provides for those who serve it in other fields. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, because I believe that the salaries of the Postal Service are disgraceful and that some of the conditions under which the men and women engaged in the service savor of slavery, I am for this bill whole-heartedly. [Applause.] I wonder if it has occurred to some of the members of this committee that when a postal employee leaves the service under any suspicion he can never again work for Uncle Sam except as a soldier. There is no other branch of the service of which that can be said. In that respect I think it is regrettable that a wage comparison has recently been submitted by an official of considerable importance in our Government, one of eminent responsibility, namely, the distinguished Postmaster General, in which he refers to the present scale of wages granted postal employees, and takes a decided stand against any increase at this time.

Referring to present wages granted postal employees and taking a stand in opposition to any increase in these salaries, which he characterized as "selfish demands," the Postmaster General closes a sweeping indictment by insisting that "they are justly compensated, receiving more than three times as much as those fighting in the trenches, who must of necessity suffer the hardships of warfare and sacrifice their all if necessary."

To any person of refined instincts the impropriety of attempting to inject such evidence as a basis of wage comparison must be painfully apparent. Offensive enough in times of peace, it becomes doubly so when our country is in war. Americans are not Hessians, and it will be a sorry day for this Nation when we seek to estimate the service our soldiers are rendering on a wage basis. At an hour when every normal American feels the thrill of his country's call, when he feels himself lifted and exalted to deeds of sacrifice and self-denial, it comes with poor grace for an administrative official of this Government to offer money and money considerations as the chief motive that prompts such sacrifice. Were this true we may well be apprehensive for the future of this Republic.

It is only fair, however, to the great army of postal employees, and all other workers for that matter, to completely refute the argument advanced by Postmaster General Burleson. Postal employees do not receive three times as much wages as "the soldiers in the trenches," and the absurdity of this assertion may well discredit any further statements coming from the same source. Under present conditions it is doubtful if they receive as much. The compensation of the men assigned to service, in both the Army and Navy, has been materially increased, and quite properly so, by recent act of Congress, and inviting opportunities have been thus opened for capable men. A generous Government has sought to provide for every contingency affecting the material and moral welfare of our forces on land and sea.

The pay of enlisted men in the Army ranges from a minimum of $30 a month up to $81 a month, with some nine intervening grades that may be attained upon evidence of merit and ability. Additional ratings which carry from $2 to $9 per month may be achieved by evidence of especial proficiency in various lines of service. Continuous service is also rewarded by increased compensation, such increases ranging from $3 to $24 per month, according to grade and length of service.

The rate of pay granted in the Navy is slightly higher than in the Army. Beginning with a minimum rating of $32.60 per month, paid to apprentice seamen of the third class, the compensation allowed for the enlisted personnel of the Navy reaches a maximum of $83 per month as the base pay. Intervening grades with varied rates of compensation range between, and these grades may be won by satisfactory evidence of merit and application. Each reenlistment carries a material addition to the base rate of pay granted, and in like manner premiums are allowed for each good-conduct medal a man holds. Ample provisions are also made for special duties or unusual assignments.

It is to be particularly remembered, however, that these quoted rates of pay represent a sum over and above all expense of food, clothing, and shelter, such as a worker in civil life is called on to bear. Explaining this very point, the Official Bulletin of January 11, 1918, says: "An enlisted man in active service has no necessary personal expenses except for barber and laundry. Uniforms, underclothing, shoes, hats, quarters, medical attendance, and subsistence are supplied them at Government expense." In short, the pay of the postal employee is gross, while that of the enlisted man is net; a fact that seems to have completely escaped the attention of the Postmaster General, judging by the comparison he offers. It is well to also remember that the enlisted man may purchase such materials as tobacco, postage, confectionery, and incidentals of individual taste at the post exchange for cost.

Ample provision is also made for free hospital service, without loss of compensation, and in addition thereto the Government has recently instituted a system of war-risk insurance to cover cases of death or disability contracted in the service. Both in the Army and Navy there has long been in operation a comprehensive and equitable plan of retirement, something that is sadly wanting in the Postal Service. Quoting again from the Official Bulletin, this plan is as follows:

RETIREMENT IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

Enlisted men can apply for retirement after 30 years of service. They are retired on 75 per cent of the monthly pay drawn at the time of retirement and $15.75 a month additional in lieu of allowances.

RETIREMENT IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Enlisted men are retired after 30 years' service and are paid three-fourths of total pay and allowances they received at date of retirement and cash in lieu of quarters and subsistence.

Similar provisions are made for the retirement of Army and Navy officers.

In thus providing for the comfort and well being of the splendid men giving service in the Army and Navy, we have done as a Nation only that which we are under moral obligation to do. We should conceive the service as a summons, to which our fellow citizens, our family and ourselves stand ready to answer on call, and we should guard its welfare with an alert and lively concern. Our devotion should not cause us to neglect or deal unjustly with another class of deserving public employees, nor should we be mislead by a mean, invidious, and altogether unjustifiable comparison, even when it comes from a member of the President's Cabinet. Unworthy indeed was the motive that prompted a comparison in the wages of postal employees and the boys in the Army, but now since the issue has been dragged in, let me repeat that the statement of the Postmaster General is in nowise sustained by the facts in the case. Postal employees do not receive three times as much pay as the soldier. In fact they do not receive as much, and many plans for the protection of the soldier could be profitably borrowed by the Post Office Department. I will not pursue this uninviting comparison further and I would not have done so at all had I not felt that the unwarranted statement of the Postmaster General should not go unchallenged. Sufficient answer is this fact: If the average postal employee could count on a balance of $30 net after his indispensable overhead expenses were settled then there would not be the widespread discontent in Mr. Burleson's Postal Service that exists at the present time. [Applause.]

I submit herewith as part of my remarks two statements printed in the Official Bulletin of January 11 and January 14, 1918, containing the rates of pay of officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy of the United States:

COMPLETE FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT UNITED STATES NAVY PAY ROLL, SUMS PAID VARIOUS GRADES OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN, WITH DETAILS OF HOW, WHEN, AND WHERE THEY GET MONEY.

The actual pay roll of the fighting forces of the United States is now nearly $100,000,000 per month.

This sum is disbursed by the pay officers of the Army and Navy in the form of checks or currency or by the Treasury Department in the form of family allotments as compensation for services rendered according to the scale of pay prescribed by law for the uniformed defenders of the Nation.

This figure does not include "family allowances" which are paid by the Government toward the support of the families of enlisted men, under specified conditions, nor does it consider any of the special compensatory features of the military and naval insurance act, under which $176,150,000 was appropriated.

THE NAVY DECEMBER PAY ROLL.

For the purpose of informing the public accurately as to the system of pay in the Navy the following authorized statement has been issued by the Committee on Public Information:

In the month of December approximately $17,000,000 was disbursed as monthly compensation for the services of the some 300,000 officers and men who constitute the uniformed force of the United States Navy.

This was the regular Government pay and did not include any amounts that might have been paid under the war-risk act as family allowances or other compensation provided for under the terms of that act.

The system of pay in the Navy is complicated by a large number of ranks and ratings, as well as financial rewards for special merit and service. The duties of the Paymaster General of the Navy comprise not only the system of accounting and disbursement on account of monthly compensation, but all that relates to the purchase, custody, and issue of all supplies for the Naval Establishment and the keeping of the accounts. Except for the contracting and the purchase of supplies, these duties are delegated to the various officers of the Pay Corps.

PAYMENTS MADE TWICE A MONTH.

Payments to officers and enlisted men are made twice each month, to officers on the 15th and last days and to enlisted men on the 5th and 20th. It is optional with each man whether his payment is in cash or by check on the Treasurer of the United States. On foreign stations payments are made in the currency of the country the ship is visiting at the time of payment, the money being issued and charged at its official or customhouse equivalent in United States currency.

For the payment of public bills and to enable officers and men to make remittances each supply officer has a checking account with the Treasurer of the United States and necessary funds are deposited to his credit upon receipt of requisition. Requisitions are addressed to the Paymaster General and approved and forwarded by the commanding officer of the ship or station.

When a ship is in home waters cash funds are obtained by cashing a check at one of the Subtreasuries or Government depositories or by shipment of money upon direction of the Paymaster General.

GETTING CASH IN FOREIGN PORTS.

When in a foreign port cash funds are obtained through the negotiation of a Government bill of exchange. The supply officer of the fleet, division, or ship, after making inquiry of bankers, merchants, and the United States consul, negotiates a bill at the best obtainable rates, receiving the proceeds in gold or silver coins of the country. A bill of exchange is drawn on either the Secretary of the Navy or the fiscal agent of the United States at London, advantage being taken of the best rate.

Family allotments of men of the Navy are paid by the Navy disbursing officer, calling for the writing of some 100,000 checks per month, payable to relatives in all parts of the country. Because of the multiplicity of detail attached to this feature of pay a system of automatic accounting has been devised and a few Government clerks now transact this business with neither confusion nor delay.

ASSIGNMENTS OF PAY.

Assignments of pay are made out in duplicate on cards on board ship or at the station at which the grantor is serving, one copy being retained for record and the other forwarded to the Navy disbursing officer for payment. These cards are filed alphabetically in the following groups: $5, $10, $15, $20, $25, $30, $35, $40, 45, $50, and miscellaneous. Checks with the amounts, $5 to $50, printed in are used.

Stencils are cut for all allotments, having the name and address of the allottee, the name of the grantor, with ship or station on which he is serving, and, in the case of the miscellaneous group, the amount of the allotment in words and figures. Thus everything except the signature of the disbursing officer is either printed or stenciled on the checks. The machine which prints in from the stencils has a capacity of 4,000 checks per hour.

OPERATION OF POSTING MACHINE.

A posting machine, operated by two young women, is used for comparing printed checks with the cards, thus preventing error. This machine has a capacity of 35 checks per minute. The cards and checks pass through this machine on belts, each set pausing before the eyes of the clerk and giving her sufficient time to make the comparison. If correct, the number of the check is automatically stamped on the card, thus keeping the account, and the disbursing officer's signature is printed in facsimile. The law demands that there be on all Government checks the actual handwriting of an official, so all of these checks have to be signed by an employee in the disbursing officer's department. For this an electric duplicating pen is used, the officer putting a fountain-pen signature on 10 checks by one movement of his hand. A rapid writer may sign 4,000 checks per hour by these means.

ANNUAL BASE PAY OF OFFICERS.

All commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service. Officers of the Medical, Pay, and Construction Corps, chaplains, civil engineers, and professors of mathematics have the relative ranks of the various grades of the line, the annual base pay of each grade being as follows:

Admiral (in command of fleet)	$10,000
Vice admiral (second in command of fleet)	9,000
Rear admiral, upper half	8,000
Rear admiral, lower half	6,000
Commodore	6,000
Captain	4,000
Commander	3,500
Lieutenant commander	3,000
Lieutenant	2,400
Lieutenant (junior grade)	2,000
Ensign	1,700

To each commissioned officer below the rank of rear admiral is allowed 10 per cent of his yearly base pay for each five years of service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, but not exceeding in all 40 per cent. Additional provision is made by law that the pay of a captain shall not exceed $5,000, a commander $4,500, and a lieutenant commander $4,000 per annum.

SEA AND FOREIGN SHORE DUTY.

An officer on sea or on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States receives while so serving 10 per cent additional of his pay.

An officer on shore duty where no Government quarters are furnished is paid $12 per month for each of the number of rooms to which his rank entitles him, that is:

	Rooms.
Rear admiral, upper half	9
Rear admiral, lower half	8
Captain	7
Commander	6
Lieutenant commander	5
Lieutenant	4
Lieutenant (junior grade)	3
Ensign, warrant officer, and nurse	2

Varying allowances for heat and light, depending upon the month and place of duty, are allowed for the number of rooms actually occupied, but not exceeding the number to which an officer's rank entitles him.

Aids to rear admirals of the upper half are each paid $200 per annum, and aids to rear admirals of the lower half $150 each per annum.

STUDENT NAVAL AVIATORS.

Officers of the Navy appointed student naval aviators and while detailed for duty involving actual flying in aircraft receive the pay and allowances of the rank plus 35 per cent increase thereof, and those officers who have qualified as naval aviators shall, while so detailed, receive the pay and allowances of their rank plus 50 per cent thereof.

Boatswains, gunners, pay clerks, machinists, carpenters, sailmakers, and pharmacists are known as warrant officers, and are paid as follows:

	At sea.	On shore.	Waiting orders.
First 3 years' service	$1,500	$1,125	$875
Second 3 years' service	1,625	1,250	1,000
Third 3 years' service	1,750	1,625	1,125
Fourth 3 years' service	2,000	1,750	1,250
After 12 years' service	2,250	2,000	1,500

Warrant officers on shore duty receive the same allowances for quarters and heat and light as an ensign.

After six years from date of warrant these officers are, if duly qualified, commissioned chief warrant officers and receive the pay and allowances of ensign. After 6 years from date of commission each commissioned warrant officer with a creditable record receives the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade), and after 12 years from date of commission the pay and allowances of a lieutenant.

Warrant officers while attached to a seagoing ship are paid a ration allowance of 40 cents per day.

All officers in the Regular Navy are required to provide their own uniforms and to pay for subsistence both ashore and afloat.

THE ENLISTED PERSONNEL.

The enlisted personnel of the Navy is of various classifications, depending upon their duties. Entry into the service is usually made in the lower ratings and the men are advanced upon the establishment of qualifications for the higher ratings. Five dollars and fifty cents for first reenlistment and $3.30 for each subsequent reenlistment, if citizen of the United States and completed previous enlistment.

Two dollars and twenty cents if a seaman gunner.

Two dollars and twenty cents if a graduate of a petty officers' school.

Five dollars and fifty cents to a steward or cook who holds a certificate of qualification and is a citizen of the United States.

Eighty-three cents for each good-conduct medal a man holds.

EXTRA MONTHLY COMPENSATION.

The following extra monthly compensations are paid to men who perform the transient duties specified:

Five dollars to a seaman in charge of hold.

Five dollars to a coxswain of a steam or motor launch.

Five dollars to a captain of a gun's crew.

Five dollars to a "jack-of-the-dust."

Five dollars to a lamplighter.

Five dollars to a messman.

From $2 to $10 to a man who qualifies at target practice as a gun pointer, the amount depending upon the caliber of the gun.

From $1 to $3 to a signalman.

From $10 to $20 to a tailor or tailor's helper, the amount depending upon the complement of ship.

PAY OF SPECIAL DUTIES.

For special duties or details the following compensations are paid:

One dollar and twenty cents per hour to divers for the actual time spent under water.

Thirty-three cents per day to seamen detailed for duty as firemen.

Five dollars per month for submarine service.

One dollar per day (but not exceeding $15 per month) spent submerged in submarine, if qualified for torpedo work.

A man receives a gratuity of four months' pay if he reenlists within four months and presents an honorable discharge from his last enlistment.

Each enlisted man receives on first enlistment an outfit of clothing and small stores free of charge. Any articles subsequently drawn are issued at cost price.

Enlisted men are subsisted by the Government. Men on detached duty are furnished cash in lieu of subsistence.

Men discharged are either furnished transportation to their homes and all expenses while en route or are paid 4 cents per mile for the total number of miles from place of discharge to their homes.

On board each ship of the Navy and at each station on shore is maintained a commissary store at which may be purchased at cost price such articles as are usually sold in civilian stores and shops.

Officers on the retired list receive three-fourths of their active-duty pay.

Enlisted men are retired after 30 years' service and are paid three-fourths of total pay and allowances they received at date of retirement and cash in lieu of quarters and subsistence.

Officers and men of the Naval Reserve Force and the National Naval Volunteers while on active duty receive the same pay and allowances as those of same rank and length of service in the Regular Navy.

When first called into active service in time of war or national emergency a uniform gratuity of $150 is allowed each officer of the Naval Reserve and $60 each enlisted man.

COMPLETE FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT UNITED STATES ARMY PAY ROLL, SUMS PAID VARIOUS GRADES OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN, WITH DETAILS OF HOW, WHEN, AND WHERE THEY GET MONEY.

The actual pay roll of the fighting forces of the United States is now nearly $100,000,000 per month.

This sum is disbursed by the pay officers of the Army and Navy in the form of checks or currency or by the Treasury Department in the form of family allotments as compensation for services rendered according to the scale of pay prescribed by law for the uniformed defenders of the Nation.

This figure does not include "family allowances," which are paid by the Government toward the support of the families of enlisted men under specified conditions, nor does it consider any of the special compensatory features of the military and naval insurance act, under which $176,150,000 was appropriated.

For the purpose of informing the public accurately as to the system of pay in the Army the following authorized statement has been issued by the Committee on Public Information.

ARMY PAY NEARLY BILLION A YEAR.

The total pay of the United States Army for the month of December was approximately $78,580,800.

Disbursements on account of the pay of officers and men of the Army are now at the rate of about $950,000,000 per year. These figures consider solely the pay disbursed by the Quartermaster Department and do not include family allowances or compensation for disability of soldiers, provided for by the military and naval insurance act and paid by the Government through the War-Risk Insurance Bureau of the Treasury Department.

Following is a comprehensive statement of the system of pay of the Army authorized by the Quartermaster General:

The Quartermaster General of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is charged with the duty of providing for the payment of the officers, enlisted men, female nurses, field clerks, and civilian clerks of the Quartermaster Corps on duty at places other than in the office of the Quartermaster General. Due to the lack of office buildings necessary to take care of the increased number of employees required to carry on the business of the Army at Washington, it has been necessary to lease many privately owned buildings for office purposes. The Finance and Accounting Division of the Office of the Quartermaser General is charged with the details of providing funds, and interior administration in connection with the payment of the Army, and is now located in a large apartment house at the corner of Fifteenth and M Streets NW.

INTRICATE AND DIFFICULT TASK.

The intricate task of paying the officers and men of the United States Army, made more difficult by the wide expansion of the past six months, is being satisfactorily accomplished. To prevent failure to meet the monthly compensation of every man in the service, no matter where he may be located, liberal sums are furnished the various disbursing quartermasters in order promptly to meet the Army pay rolls with their extraordinary demands for funds.

The officers and enlisted men of the Army are paid at the end of each month, or as soon thereafter as possible, by the disbursing officers of the Quartermaster Corps, in cash or by check, at their stations or in the field.

If on duty in France they are paid in French currency or by United States checks, as officers and men may elect.

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

The pay of enlisted men depends on their grades, ratings, and length of service. From June 1, 1917, and continuing during the term of the war the pay of enlisted men is as follows:

Men receiving $30: All privates, the Army entering grade.

Men receiving $33: First-class privates, men promoted to act in minor noncommissioned officer capacity.

Men receiving $36: Corporals, saddlers, mechanics, farriers, and wagoners, and musicians of the third class.

Men receiving $38: All sergeant grades in the line, which include Infantry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, and Cavalry; cooks, horseshoers, band corporals, and musicians of the second class.

Men receiving $44: Sergeants of the various corps of the Engineers, Ordnance, Signal Corps, Quartermaster Corps, and Medical Department; band sergeants and musicians of the first class.

Men receiving $48: Battalion sergeant majors, squadron sergeant majors, sergeant majors (junior grade), sergeant buglers, master gunners, and assistant band leaders of the line.

Men receiving $51: Regimental sergeant majors, regimental supply sergeants, sergeant majors (senior grade), quartermaster sergeants of the Quartermaster Corps, ordnance sergeants, first sergeants, electrician sergeants of the first class, assistant engineers and battalion sergeant majors, and battalion supply sergeants of the Engineers.

Men receiving $56: Sergeants, first class, of the Medical Department.

Men receiving $71: Hospital sergeants, master engineers of the junior grade, and engineers

Men receiving $81: Quartermaster sergeants of the senior grade of the Quartermaster Corps, band leaders, master signal electricians, master electricians, master engineers of the senior grade, and master hospital sergeants.

ASSIGNMENT TO SPECIAL DUTIES.

These are the established grades of the enlisted men, but they may variously be assigned to such special duties as chauffeurs, switchboard operators, cobblers, clerks, camoufleurs, sanitary inspectors, draftsmen, stevedores, accountants, plumbers, and such other occupations and trades as are necessary to meet the requirements of Army service.

In addition to the rates of pay for enlisted men heretofore mentioned, supplemental pay or allowances are made as follows:

(1) Increased pay is allowed for continuous service, computed under what is known as "enlistment period." An enlistment period ordinarily represents a period of three or four years, dependent upon the law in effect at date of enlistment. There are seven such periods, covering a period of service of from 1 year to more than 18 years provided for, and the increases range from $3 to $24 per month, according to the grade and length of service. Men in the grade of private calling for $30 per month are increased $3 per month during the second enlistment period, an additional $3 during the third enlistment period, and $1 per month for each additional enlistment period to include the seventh enlistment period. Men above the $30 grade and up to and including the $38 grade are entitled to $3 per month additional pay for each enlistment period from the second to the seventh for each successive enlistment period. Men above the $38 grade are entitled to $4 per month additional pay for each enlistment period from the second to the seventh.

SOME ADDITIONAL RATINGS.

(2) Enlisted men of the Coast Artillery, below the grade of mess sergeant, are entitled to the following additional ratings, according to established individual qualifications: Casement electricians, observers of the first class, plotters, and coxswains, $9 per month; chief planters, observers of the second class, chief loaders, gun commanders, and gun pointers, $7 per month; enlisted men of the Field Artillery—expert first-class gunners, $5 per month; first-class gunners, $3 per month; and second-class gunners, $2 per month; enlisted men of the Cavalry, Engineers, and Infantry—expert riflemen, $5 per month; sharpshooters, $3 per month; and marksmen, $2 per month; enlisted men of the Medical Department—surgical assistants, $5 per month; nurse (enlisted man), $3 per month; and dispensary assistant, $2 per month.

(3) Enlisted men of the Signal Corps, while on duties which require them to participate regularly in aero flights, assuming that they have rating of aviation mechanician, receive 50 per cent increase in their monthly pay.

HOUSING AND SUBSISTENCE.

(4) All enlisted men, while on detached duty not in the field where there are no Army quarters available, receive in addition to their pay $15 per month to cover the expense of housing and also a suitable allowance for subsistence and for heat and light.

(5) Enlisted men, if serving in a foreign country or beyond the continental limits of the United States (Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Panama Canal Zone excepted) receive 20 per cent increase in pay computed on the base pay and service pay prevailing prior to June 1, 1917, when an act of Congress increased, for the "term of the emergency," the pay of all enlisted men in amounts ranging from 50 per cent to 8 per cent.

(6) Enlisted men attached to the United States Military Academy are entitled to the same pay and allowances as other enlisted men of the Regular Army of the same grade and additional compensation provided for performing certain duties upon detail therefor in orders.

THE PAY OF OFFICERS.

Officers of the Army are paid according to rank held by them. A second lieutenant receives $141.67 initial pay per month; first lieutenant, $166.67; captain, $200; major, $250; lieutenant colonel, $291.67; and a colonel, $333.33, with an increase of 10 per cent, known as longevity pay, for each period of five years of service, provided that such increase shall not exceed 40 per cent.

The pay of a brigadier general is $6,000 per year; major general, $8,000; lieutenant general, $9,000; and a general, $10,000. These officers receive no increase for continuous service.

All officers are entitled to be furnished public quarters, with fuel and light, but if these can not be provided the officers receive a commuted money value of the same. The allowance for quarters for a second lieutenant is 2 rooms, or $24 per month; for a first lieutenant, 3 rooms or commutation of $36 per month; a captain, 4 rooms or commutation of $48; major, 5 rooms or commutation of $60; lieutenant colonel, 6 rooms or commutation of $72; colonel, 7 rooms or commutation of $84; brigadier general, 8 rooms or commutation of $96; major general, 9 rooms or commutation of $108; lieutenant general, 10 rooms or commutation of $120; and a general, 11 rooms or a commutation of $132. All receive a suitable allowance for heat and light, dependent upon the locality of their stations and the season. While on foreign service officers receive an increase of 10 per cent of their base pay and longevity pay.

AERIAL "FLIGHT" INCREASES.

Aviation officers of the Signal Corps, or officers attached to the Signal Corps, while on duty which requires them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights are entitled to an increase in the pay of their grade under their commissions as follows: Aviation officers, 25 per cent; junior military aviators, 50 per cent; military aviators, 75 per cent. Each junior military aviator and each military aviator duly qualified and serving has the rank, pay, and allowances of one grade higher than that held by them under their commissions, provided that the ranks under their commissions are not higher than that of captain.

For deeds of valor recognized by acts of Congress officers and enlisted men receive certificates of merit, which entitle them to an additional compensation of $2 per month.

ALLOWANCES AT RETIREMENT.

Enlisted men can apply for retirement after 30 years of service. They are retired on 75 per cent of the monthly pay drawn at the time of retirement and $15.75 a month additional in lieu of allowances.

Officers are retired for disability or after 64 years of age and receive 75 per cent of the pay of the grade held at date of retirement.

An enlisted man in active service has no necessary personal expenses except for barber and laundry. Uniforms, underclothing, shoes, hats, quarters, medical attendance, and subsistence are supplied them at Government expense. Such materials as tobacco, postage, confectionery, and incidentals of individual taste may be purchased at the post exchange at cost.

Officers while in hospital are charged $1 per day for subsistence. They are not entitled to clothing or equipment and are required to subsist themselves, purchasing their supplies either from the quartermaster or through the ordinary channels of trade.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to what I believe is a very glaring injustice done to rural carriers. As I understand the existing law from the answers made to me by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], city carriers are allowed from $200 to $500 a year for the upkeep of their equipment when required to use wagons or automobiles, but the rural carrier is allowed nothing by way of upkeep. It so happens that the reorganization of the rural routes in my district requires every carrier to have two sorts of equipment, an automobile and a team of horses. I am frank to say that the mental operations of the Post Office Department have always been more or less a mystery to me, and I have never been able to receive any satisfactory explanation of the proposition that it is advisable to grant a city carrier from $200 to $500 a year for the upkeep of his equipment that is used on paved streets and allow a rural carrier nothing. It must be patent to anyone who is at all familiar with the conditions that a rural carrier driving country roads in all sorts of weather is more justly entitled to an upkeep and equipment charge than a city carrier, though the city carrier gets little enough. I have in my hand the average upkeep charge of the carriers in my district who are required to operate both an automobile, or rather a Ford, and a team of horses and a wagon, and the average charge in that district is $241.83 per year for the automobile and $396 for the team of horses and wagon, or a total upkeep charge of $637.83, figuring nothing for depreciation. I find in this average charge 410 bushels of grain for the year 1917, amounting to $287, or a little more than 50 cents a bushel. It can not be purchased to-day for twice that amount. I find a charge of 8 tons of hay at $12 a ton. It can not be purchased to-day for $16 a ton. The maximum salary drawn by any of these men is $1,200 a year, so that more than half the salary is consumed by the upkeep charge the department requires. It seems to me that the United States can not afford to employ men in this character of service where they run anywhere from 18 to 24 miles a day every day in the week, excepting Sunday, over all sorts of country roads, subject to all character of inclement weather, for a net return of less than $600 a year. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment to remedy this condition, and I trust that it may receive favorable consideration.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that this bill does not provide for a larger increase to the employees, but I am pleased to see that it does one thing that the bill we considered a few days ago providing increases for some of the Government employees did not do. This increase will be added to the amount that the carriers and clerks are receiving now by virtue of the 5 and 10 per cent increase that we intended for the postal employees by the action taken by the Congress last year. I understand that there was a ruling of the Post Office Department that deprived postal clerks of the advantage it was intended that they should have by the action taken a year ago. That was certainly a forced and very harsh ruling and worked a great injustice to postal employees. And I heartily agree with the remarks made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] to the effect that common justice would dictate an allowance to rural carriers for upkeep of equipment. In my district many of them are compelled to keep double equipment—an automobile for a part of the year and horses for the remainder of the year. They can not dispose of one when they are using the other. It is necessary for them to keep both and the upkeep of all their equipment depletes their salaries to a point at which the Government ought not to ask any one to work. We heard a good deal sometime ago about the efforts of the Committee on Appropriations; that it was preparing a bill to provide increases for clerks, and we expected a bill that would provide reasonable increases. In my judgment the increases carried by that bill were not reasonable; the increases were all less than they should have been; and I regret that the increases provided by this bill are not larger.

Several gentlemen have spoken of the need of increases of salaries of rural carriers and of proper allowance for expenses—spoken better than I am able—so I shall not occupy time along that line. I am allowed only a minute or two more and I wish to urge additional increases—more than this bill provides—for clerks and janitors. There are too many low-salaried clerks; too many clerks, capable, faithful, long in the service, who are receiving and even if this bill becomes law will receive salaries much too small. In very few cases does the Postal Service provide liberal salaries, but perhaps liberality can not be expected of the Post Office Department.

There certainly should be reasonable compensation for all employees, but this can not be said as to many of the clerks, nor can it be said as to janitors. Compensation of these places ought to be materially increased and now is the time for such increases. Additional compensation carried by this bill would be low even in normal times; during these times of abnormal expense of living refusal of larger increases is a great injustice to capable and deserving employees. I trust the committee and the House will promptly act with some measure of justice toward these men. Lack of time does not permit me to speak of other sections of the bill relating to compensation of men in other branches of the Postal Service.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish in this general debate to express my approval of the purposes of this bill. I should like to see it enacted into law at the earliest date possible. It has been delayed too long. It should have been passed long ago. Congress has been derelict in its duty. But it is better late than never. So I am glad that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has at last brought before the House a bill to increase the salaries and pay of postal employees. I am glad that its benefits extend to railway mail clerks, clerks in all post offices, city carriers, postmasters, including those in fourth-class offices, and among all there are none more deserving of the increase than the rural-route carriers.

While approving the bill in general, I have some criticisms to offer:

The first is this: The increase in pay provided is not permanent. The increase of pay, as the terms of the bill provide, shall continue only "for and during the period of the war and for 90 days thereafter," as determined by the proclamation of the President. I can not understand why the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads concluded to place this limit in the bill. I can not understand upon what basis the committee reached this conclusion. The increase is not large. It is very moderate. It should, therefore, have been made permanent. The department is constantly in need of new men for this service. The fact that the increased pay is only temporary will not tend to attract good, reliable new men into the service. More than that, it is unjust to the men in the service. They are left in a state of doubt and uncertainty. They will not know how long the increased pay is to last, and, very naturally, this will be unsatisfactory. According to the showing which has been made to me, especially as to the pay received by rural-route carriers, they are entitled to an increase of pay entirely independent of the continuation of the war. Their pay is too small for times of peace. The same may be said of the compensation of postmasters in fourth-class offices. For many years they have not received pay corresponding to the important service they have been rendering or sufficient to adequately compensate them for the work required of them.

The same may be said of the great majority of the postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, their clerks, railway mail clerks, and city carriers. The increased pay granted in this bill seems to have been based by the committee solely upon the increased cost of living as the result of the war. But the percentage of increased pay is much less than the percentage of increase in the cost of living since the beginning of the war. In other words, the increase in pay provided in this bill is not at all commensurate with the advance in the cost of living since the beginning of the war. The committee has not, therefore, done full justice to the various classes of post-office employees.

The increased pay is to stop within 90 days after the close of the war. This is not right. If there is to be any limit at all, it should be much longer than 90 days. It should not be less than one year, and, in my judgment, should be much longer than that. The 90-day limit is wholly illogical. The committee certainly knows that there can be and will be no material reduction in the cost of living within 90 days after the close of the war. It may take years before prices will get down to the level of peace times. Indeed, I have seen it stated by numerous prominent people that food products and other things in common use will remain high a number of years after the war closes. This may be a matter of guesswork.

But we do know that prices will not drop down to a peace basis within 90 days after the close of the war. We are gradually adjusting ourselves to war prices. The tendency is to reach an equilibrium in prices of all the various articles in common use. That can not be accomplished in a day. The same process will go on in the adjustment of prices after the war. It is therefore illogical to base an increase of pay upon increased cost of living and discontinue the increased pay before there can possibly be any appreciable decrease in the cost of living. Still, this is what the committee bill does. It ought to be amended in this respect.

The war conditions have been exceptionally burdensome upon rural route carriers. They have a double burden to bear. Their ordinary living expenses have increased, the same as other employees of the Post Office Department; but in addition to this they have a team to feed or an auto to keep up. They have an equipment to purchase, maintain, and operate. The cost of horses, vehicles, autos, feed, and the cost of maintenance and operation have all increased heavily. All this means just that much reduction in their salaries. The burden upon them is heavy, indeed.

There are 43,318 rural-route carriers in the United States. They deliver daily mail to more than 27,000,000 of our people. They are, as a rule, high-grade, intelligent, faithful, and patriotic public servants. Upon them rests the responsibility of performing a very important part of the public service. The pay they receive should be such as will attract to and hold in this service men who are capable of rendering the most efficient and satisfactory service. Mr. Chairman, it would be poor policy to keep the compensation of rural carriers so low as to drive capable men from the service. This danger must be avoided. Finally, we must not overlook the fact that the great agricultural interests are involved in this proposition. The rural carriers serve the farmers. They constitute one-third of our population. As never before this war has brought home to us the importance of the expansion of our agricultural interests. To do this we must, among other things, make the farm attractive.

The American farmers are intelligent. They demand good mail service. To this they are entitled. Any deterioration in the mail service for the rural districts would be a hindrance to agricultural development, and in this way unfavorably affect our national strength.

I believe we have the best postal system in the world. Our policy should be to improve it all along the line. Let us give adequate pay to all our postmasters in the large and small offices, to our clerks in all grades and divisions of the service, to our railway mail clerks, whose duties are most important and hazardous, to both our city and rural carriers, and to all, however humble they may be, who contribute to the success of our great Postal Service.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I vote most earnestly, heartily, and willingly for this bill. The only objection or criticism I have of it is that it does not grant a sufficient increase of pay to the rural carriers. [Applause.] In western Pennsylvania and through that part of the United States located in that latitude, these carriers must not only have one horse but they must have two horses, and if they have an automobile they must maintain also two horses and wagon and an automobile. Now, to maintain that sort of equipment, and I have here the statistics from the various carriers throughout the twenty-second district of Pennsylvania, showing that it costs them over $50 a month to maintain two horses and vehicle, and over $60 a month to maintain an automobile, leaving less than $40 a month upon which to support themselves and their family, so that the Government is not paying these men a sufficient sum to enable them to maintain themselves, educate their children, and live respectably, according to the American standard of living, under this scale of wages.

This bill is entitled "A bill granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service." It deals first with rural carriers, and grants an increase of 15 per cent to all those receiving $1,200 per year or less, and $24 per mile for each mile traveled over 24 miles, which is established as a rural-mail route, so that the carrier who serves a route 30 miles in length will receive $1,320 per year hereafter. This is a substantial advance in pay. The suburban carriers are given, in addition to this advance, an allowance for the upkeep of their conveyances. There is no reason why such aid should not be given the rural carriers, who have rougher roads and greater distances to contend with, and I shall at the proper time move an amendment to this bill granting an allowance of $25 per month to each rural-mail carrier toward paying the cost of the conveyance he must use in his service in carrying the mails. This is right and just, and should be granted to these faithful employees of the Government.

The bill also grants an advance to the clerks and all other employees in first and second class post offices. These increases are proper, and when it is remembered that this is the first increase of pay granted since 1907, it will be readily understood for what inadequate pay these employees are now working. The cost of the necessaries of life are now from 100 to 400 per cent higher than they were when their present wage scale was established. The third-class offices are not referred to in this bill for the reason that the pay of the employees in post offices of this class is left entirely by existing law in the hands of the Postmaster General, and it is fair to assume that he will fix the compensation of all these employees on relatively the same basis that this bill fixes the employees of second-class offices.

The bill establishes an eight-hour day for all employees in the Postal Service. This is a great and substantial benefit to these now overworked public servants. Fourth-class postmasters are by this bill given all cancellations up to $100 per quarter, or at least $400 per year when the cancellations equal that sum. A very proper recompense for this class of postal employees, who not only do all the work but furnish the building, together with light and heat free to the Government.

Another very just provision of this bill is that contained in section 4, which allows the Postmaster General to relieve star route and screen wagon carriers from the hardship of contracts entered into before prices advanced, which now render further compliance with their contracts impossible without great financial loss. I know men in my district, Mr. Chairman, who will be bankrupt unless the relief here given can be invoked. As well might we expect a man to pay rent on a house that had burned down as to carry out a contract made in 1914 on the basis of the prices then prevailing. This great Government is not unjust. It does not ask for the "pound of flesh."

There is one great omission, however, in this legislation. The Postmaster General, in his annual report, page 25, in referring to the act of 1917, which establishes a new system of accounting, whereby the accounts of the small offices are all kept in the larger ones, instead of in the department at Washington, says:

Under this statute the smaller post offices, known as district offices, now obtain their postage stamps and supplies and render their accounts through a central accounting postmaster in each county.

This is a new feature. An entire change. A vast amount of additional work is, by this method, imposed on the postmasters of the county-seat post offices. No provision is made to pay for this new work. The already overworked postmasters of these accounting offices must do all this work and keep all these accounts without any pay therefor. This is unfair and unjust. I should like to know whether there is a reduction in the force here in Washington by reason of this shift of work? There are in Westmoreland County, Pa., 114 post offices and 53 rural routes and in Butler County, Pa., 46 post offices and 62 rural routes—in 1916—in my congressional district. Yet the postmasters at Greensburg, Pa., and Butler, Pa., must keep the accounts with these offices without any extra pay for the services rendered.

This is an unjust burden, and I shall try to amend this bill to correct this wrong. If the post office is now self-sustaining and indeed profitable, as the Postmaster General claims it is, why continue these pinching economies and unfair practices? Let us aim, gentlemen, by this law to do justice to all the employees of the great Post Office Service wherever found or in whatever capacity they serve.

The post office is the great educational branch of our Government. The daily visit of the citizen to the post office or the coming of the rural carrier to his door is about the only evidence he has in a tangible way of the benefits of the General Government.

May we not fondly hope that our postal department may hereafter be regarded by our citizens not only as a dispenser of knowledge but as a great public institution that treats equitably, justly, and liberally its faithful employees from the humblest to the highest alike.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] sufficient time to make a request.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with the propositions embodied in this legislation and am happy at the opportunity afforded me by voice and vote to favor the reclassification of the grades of the clerks and carriers in first and second class post offices and in the Railway Mail Service, so that the long-serving, experienced, faithful, and hard-working men shall receive the additional financial reward to which they are so justly entitled. I am also in full sympathy with the increase for the other employees of the post office and the rural mail carriers.

The cost of maintaining the equipment of the rural carrier, whether motor or horse power, has become so great that their salaries have been depleted to a point that leaves them a bare sum for subsistence. Contrary to the views of many, the cost of this upkeep of vehicles, horses, or motor cars and the purchase price of the same is entirely paid from the salaries of the rural carriers, for which no allowance is made by the Government. As a result of this burden of expense on the rural carrier five appointments have been made on one route in one year in the district which I have the honor to represent.

It is a pleasure also for me to support the appropriation for experiments in the motor-truck delivery of food products suggested by Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Blakslee. Indeed, Mr. Blasklee has already demonstrated by experimental parcel-post motor-truck routes now in operation that the experimental stage has been passed and that this service, where rendered, is not only an undoubted success, but that its possibilities for the benefit of the people are almost incalculable.

One of the great weaknesses to-day is the lack of transportation facilities. Great quantities of food may be grown and a large output made of manufactures, but they are of no avail unless they are gotten to the markets and the consumers. Vast quantities of corn remain in the bins of the farmer in the West that are needed in the East. Early vegetables by the thousands of tons are ready in the South and wanted in the North. Lack of transportation is the obstacle in the way, and an unnecessarily higher cost of living the result.

It was not the lack of coal during the recent hard winter that caused such hardship, but the inability to place the coal where it was needed. I cite these as instances of conditions in food products and other material things that have affected nearly every part of our country for some years and aggravated by war conditions. They must be remedied not only to lessen the burden upon the people, but to enable us to win the fearful war in which we are engaged. The development of the parcel post truck-line system and extension of these routes throughout the country will be a tremendous factor in the improvement of these serious conditions.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] sufficient time to make a request.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the mere fact that since 1907 there has not been any change in the pay of postal employees except in 1912, when the compensation of men in the first grade was made $800 per annum instead of $600, takes the question of now increasing their salaries out of the debatable zone, in my opinion.

This bill is the outgrowth of an exhaustive investigation by the committee reporting it, and it is here for approval or disapproval. Information concerning it has come to me in various ways—verbally, by written communications, and by investigations—and two facts are apparent.

First. There appears to be influential opposition to its passage.

Second. There is a widespread popular demand that salaries ought to be regraded and increased.

The opposition, in part, condemns the methods used to secure results; that is, through employees' organizations, unions.

In a departmental report commenting on these organizations, their journals, and conventions it is asserted that they "are devoted almost entirely to matters of selfish interest" and that "the organized postal employees are making many selfish demands"; that these organizations "are fast becoming a menace to public welfare and should no longer be tolerated or condoned"; and furthermore that "the interests of the employee will always be protected by public sentiment."

Criticisms made and suggestions offered, after a full, unprejudiced, and intelligent investigation, are entitled to consideration, may be reviewed, and this, too, without reflecting on motive.

These organizations will in their own way and in due time answer all these statements. Personally the one that interests me greatly is the one that public sentiment will protect the employee. How is public sentiment created? How is it made effective? The answer is obvious: Through organizations; there is not much accomplished these days without them.

Lawyers have their bar associations and, in some instances, fix their minimum fees.

Doctors have their county organizations, establish standards of professional ethics, and regulate charges. School-teachers unionize for the betterment of themselves.

In all the arts and crafts, industries, and commercial activities there are organizations.

There are scientific, literary, religious, labor, employers, aye, and political and partisan organizations. How do we hold our seats here? By party organization. What are we; what is our status? We surely are not officers within the exempting clause of the war-revenue bill. We may be "Federal employees." If so, must not our organized political work cease? If continued, it may become a menace to public welfare.

Recently Members on both side of this House earnestly contended that they and others were bound by party platforms. If true, it is important. Let me apply it. These carriers are wage earners, are they not?

In a national platform of 1912 we find this:

There should be no abridgment of the right of wage earners and producers to organize.

And in fulfillment thereof was there not in 1914 enacted legislation limiting the operation of restraining orders in injunctions? And in the platform of 1916 is there not reference to all this, and a reaffirmation of it in these words:

We have secured to the workingman the right of voluntary association for his protection and welfare.

All other organizations are permissible, it is said, but men and women who are Federal employees, and especially post-office employees, must not organize to reach desired results.

It seems to me that they come within the scope of their constitutional privileges vouchsafed in the first constitutional amendment, passed September 26, 1789, at the first session of the First Congress—the right "to assemble and to petition for a redress of grievances."

At all events they have been doing so for a long time. Growing out of their agitation and discussions, a meeting was held at Milwaukee in 1889, and the next year what might be called their first national convention was held at Boston, Mass. What did the delegates do? They discussed their grievances, and a petition was sent to Washington, bearing 50,000 names. Result: Relief prayed for.

At the present time there are many organizations of Federal employees: International Typographical Union, International Printing Pressmen's Union, Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, International Association of Machinists, Patternmakers' League, International Molders' Union, Steel Plate Framers' Association, Plate Engravers, and not even one strike. Postal employees—I do not know when or where or to what extent, if any, governmental efficiency has been impaired by them. As near as I can learn, they have conducted themselves in a law-abiding, peaceful, and orderly manner. If there has been bloodshed, force, or rioting, or serious injury to the service, we ought to know it, and then "public sentiment" might prevent a recurrence.

The method used to create public sentiment and grant relief is secondary and of little importance in passing on this bill. It is merit and not method that should guide us.

Has the pending measure any merit? The postal carriers must live decently, must pay their bills; they are temperate, frugal, and trustworthy; they perform their daily tasks punctually, braving the storms of winter and enduring the excessive heat of summer; they are not wealthy; their character is good; their service of great public benefit, invaluable; most of them have families to support, children to feed, clothe, and educate; they are human, like the rest of us, and enjoy, as we do, something over and beyond the absolute necessities of life, but their indulgence is greatly restricted or altogether eliminated.

Their qualifications, their service, their wants and necessities demand a decent compensation, and this is not to be determined by comparisons, by what some others may receive in another kind of governmental work.

It is a separate and distinct proposition, apart from all others. We have Biblical authority that the workman is worthy of his wage. What shall it be? How are wages to be fixed?

Honesty, experience, efficiency, the kind of work performed, skill, intelligence, the cost of living are factors to be considered in determining what is a just compensation, and this should not be limited to barely enough to eke out an existence.

Those postal carriers, clerks, janitors, all are faithful public employees. I think it was stated at one of the hearings before the committee having the bill in charge and by one of the Assistant Postmasters General in substance that they were as fine a body of men as could be found in Government service.

We personally know the character of these men; that it is good. We are familiar with their duties. A knowledge of what their wants and necessities are we acquire from varied sources.

I read with absorbing interest parts of the printed reports of the hearings, and gained useful information by so doing, both as to the attitude of the Post Office Department and the merits of the contemplated legislation. The testimony presented led me into the homes of these employees. I learned something of their lives and their families. If I did not have evidence from any other source, I found enough to convince me that their claims are just. I was somewhat confused by statements in the department's report of 1917 and in the reports of the hearings with reference to the increase of pay for the postal employees.

The First Assistant Postmaster General states the policy of the department on page 231 of the December, 1917–January, 1918, hearings to be the "effort of the department to fix the standard rates of pay for the different classes of work at from 15 per cent to 30 per cent above the average rates paid for similar service by the leading commercial institutions of the country," as set forth in the department's report for the fiscal year of 1916, and adds that "the same policy was outlined last year before the legislative committee during the hearings on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bills," and is the policy now. Very well, let it be so. Let it become effective and not merely an intent.

The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General says, "If the employees at this time are not compensated at 15 per cent above the salaries paid by private employers for work of as exacting character, we are willing to recommend any increase that will bring them up to that basis. We are not opposing any increase in the salaries of postal employees"—see page 270 of the hearing. I said in the beginning that there is a wide-spread popular demand for an increase. I am justified in this from the fact that nearly 150 Members of this House, representing approximately 40 States, appeared before the committee and expressed themselves in favor of an increase. These Members reflect the sentiment of thousands of their constituents.

Now, what do we find? The department, through its chosen spokesmen, favors an increase. The employees have asked for it. A fair proportion of this House are for it. All there is left is to put the bill through. The only question is, What shall that increase be? I fear that the bill does not provide enough. On that subject I have some evidence that may be useful.

Desirous of securing first-hand information, I formed some questions and sent them out for answers and received several replies, all of the same tenor. The following will be sufficient to show the inadequacy of present pay:

One other similar report carefully analyzed shows that the amount of pay devoted to food for the family allowed each member 7 cents per meal.

The rural carrier has a laborious task to perform. He is a post office on wheels or runners. He has to perform many duties—make change for postage, carry parcels, and do his work regardless of snow-bound or well-nigh impassable mud roads.

The services of the city carrier are indispensable. Both classes are patriotic, and desire to subscribe for liberty bonds, to the Red Cross funds, and other war activities. How can they do it? They can not do much now. Their salaries have been in effect cut in two; they have been subjected to meatless, wheatless, and sweetless days, and to some extent to in part eatless days.

It has been said that the proposed increase will require a large amount of money. Suppose it does; men have got to live, and these men are rendering full service for what they may receive.

I would cut out from the bill the time limitation and make the increase permanent.

The service is now being crippled because men are leaving it to receive better compensation elsewhere. The Postal Service should be kept up to the highest standard; its functions are most useful whether regarded as a commercial utility or an educational one.

Mr. Chairman, the men whose duty it is to deliver the mails must be well cared for. Their burdens are growing, both in the service and in the cost of supporting their families. The increased cost of living is phenomenal and unparalleled. I venture to prophesy that there will not be a dissenting voice in the passage of this bill, because it is so meritorious and appeals so strongly to our sense of justice.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the principle of this bill. There are, however, glaring inconsistencies in the measure that should be corrected. The first paragraph of the bill limits the increase of pay to the rural carriers to a period of time extending 90 days after the termination of the war, while, if my interpretation of the language of the bill is correct, the pay herein provided for city delivery carriers and other postal employees is made permanent. I am personally of the opinion that this whole measure should be made a permanent law, and we would thus avoid being called upon every year to make an increase for the employees of the Government. A few days ago we passed in this House a measure carrying an increase to certain of the employees of the Government, which increase ranged from 25 per cent to those drawing very low salaries down to 6 per cent to those drawing $2,000 per annum. I had the honor to be a member of the subcommittee that reported that bill. While that matter was under consideration before us there was much diversity of opinion as to the increase that should be made. Personally I voted for an increase of $15 a month, or $180 a year, to each of the 200,000 employees involved in that bill.

It was, however, the judgment of the committee, after much consideration, that $120 per annum, or $10 a month, should be granted. While I thought the amount too small, I gave the measure my hearty support, because I thought it was a step in the right direction; and I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the present bill is a step in the right direction, though I do not deem it adequate to meet the situation. It is true this bill will entail an outlay to the Government of about $30,000,000, which, with the $29,000,000 voted in the bill we passed a few days ago, seems a very large increase in the pay of Government employees. When you consider that these two bills affect at least 440,000 employees, the increase per man is not very great. I have always maintained that as a rule, speaking by and large, the Government employee is the poorest paid person in the land considering his experience and qualifications. On the other hand, it is my judgment that the Government should be a model employer and should not ask men to work for a wage on which a self-respecting man can not live and support his family. Any industry, any institution, any economical system, or any government that denies to its employees such a reward is unjust and indefensible. It is my judgment that the allowance provided in this bill for rural carriers is wholy inadequate, and while it is a material increase over the present pay I do not believe Congress can justify itself in asking these men to render the service they do, under the conditions imposed upon them, for the pay herein granted, much less their present compensation.

In answer to a question submitted to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], I understood him to say that city carriers are allowed from two to four hundred dollars a year for the upkeep of their equipment, when required to use wagons or automobiles, but that rural carriers are made no such an allowance for the upkeep of their equipment. To me that is a glaring defect either on the part of Congress or on the part of the Post Office Department. I can not understand why a carrier whose equipment is used only on city streets, which are generally paved or kept in good condition, should be allowed compensation, while the rural carrier, who must use his vehicles on country roads, should be denied such an allowance, and if the opportunity presents itself in further consideration of this bill tomorrow I hope to offer an amendment to remedy that defect.

It must be apparent to anyone at all familiar with the conditions that a rural carrier must meet that he is more justly entitled to an upkeep allowance than is a city carrier, and by that I do not mean to say that the city carrier is not entitled to this allowance; on the contrary, I believe he is, but I believe the rural carrier is entitled to a larger allowance for such upkeep, and, as I understand the matter, now he gets none. The present law allows the rural carrier $1,200 a year. He is compelled to provide his own equipment, which often consists of one or two horses and a wagon and an automobile. Figures have been submitted to this House showing that the average charge for the upkeep of a team of horses and a wagon is $250 a year, and for an automobile more than $350 a year, figuring nothing for depreciation. That allows the man for his services less than $600 a year. These men work six days in the week. They make their route of from 20 to 30 miles every day regardless of the inclemency of the weather, and we ask them to accept from us a pitiful sum of $50 a month net on which to live and support their families. This bill, if it passes, will increase that allowance to some extent but still does not give them adequate compensation. I hope this bill will be amended to increase the compensation particularly to rural carriers, and that it will be amended in such a manner as to make it a permanent law and when so amended will pass.

More than 200,000 employees are affected by this bill, and there are no more loyal or efficient employees in the world than this 200,000. Upon them rests the responsibility of performing a very important part of the public service, and they are entitled to receive such compensation as will attract and hold capable people in the service. The American people are probably the most discriminating people in the world. They demand good mail service as they demand good service in every other line, and they are entitled to it. We probably have the best Postal Service System in the world, and our policy should be to improve it. It is not a money-making scheme, and the pittance that we save by denying to these employees adequate compensation for this work reflects no credit upon the Government or the American people. For these and many other reasons that I might state I am earnestly in favor of the passage of this measure.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Minnesota left?

The CHAIRMAN. He has none.

Mr. MOON. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. MOON. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, on the 14th of December, 1917, I inserted in the RECORD in connection with the amendment which I offered to the Post Office appropriation bill, a statement showing the increased cost of living from 1914 to 1917, and for the purpose of getting these facts and figures in their proper place in the RECORD here in the consideration of this bill I ask unanimous consent that those remarks incorporated at that time be incorporated in the RECORD now in this connection. At the same time I wish to have incorporated in the RECORD the statement made by J. W. Whitfield, president of the Old Dutch Market, showing the increased cost of living within the last year, which statement will show the necessity for the increase of the compensation of the rural free-delivery carriers, the post-office clerks, letter carriers, and fourth-class postmasters.

HOW FOOD PRICES HAVE ADVANCED HERE DURING THE LAST FOUR YEARS.

Statistical testimony regarding the increased cost of living on the commodities which Government workers must buy in order to live was given by J. W. Whitfield, president of the Old Dutch Market (Inc.).

Mr. Whitfield recited the prices on a list of 61 commodities under the heading, "Grocery, beef, pork, and vegetables," giving the prices for December, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917. He pointed out that the average increase on all items in this list for the three-year period from 1914 to 1917 was 92.1 per cent. The average increase for the two-year period, 1915 to 1917, was 98.6 per cent. The average increase for the one year, December, 1916, to December, 1917, was 55.6 per cent.

Mr. Whitfield explained that while these figures are for December, 1917, they are in all reasonable probability averaging as high, if not higher, to-day.

GROCERIES GO UP 90.1 PER CENT.

He showed that the average increase on all items in the list of groceries for the three-year period was 90.1 per cent; for the two-year period, 76.6 per cent; and for last year alone, 44.4 per cent. He said that 58 per cent of the total increase from December, 1914, to December, 1917, was put on during 1917.

In regard to all items under the heading of beef, he said that the average increase for the three-year period was 55.6 per cent, for the last two years 62.6 per cent, and for last year alone 63.3 per cent. Mr. Whitfield pointed out that prices were lower in 1915 and 1916 than in 1914, and that the increase during the last year was very radical on these products.

In discussing pork products, Mr. Whitfield said the average increase on all items shown on his list for the three-year period was 104 per cent, for the two-year period 118 per cent, and that over 60 per cent of the total increase was put on in 1917.

Regarding butter, eggs, and cheese, Mr. Whitfield figured the average increase on all items for the three-year period, 44.2 per cent; for the two years 1915 to 1917, 51.4 per cent; and for last year alone, 21.4 per cent. He said the prices were lower in 1915 and 1914, and the general increase has been about the same for the last two years.

VEGETABLES UP 200 PER CENT.

The average increase on vegetables during the three years, he said, had been 200 per cent. From 1915 to 1917 it was 228 per cent and last year alone it was 79.3 per cent.

He said the advance on vegetables had been the most radical in the business. He invited special attention to the prices on potatoes and cabbages. His table showed that potatoes sold in 1914 for 15 cents a peck, in 1915 for 23 cents, in 1916 for 50 cents, and in 1917 for 38 cents. The price on cabbage in 1914 was one-half cent a pound; in 1915, 1 cent a pound; and for the last two years, 4 cents a pound.

Mr. Whitfield argued that these advances in prices for foodstuffs, coupled with similar advances for clothing, shoes, and other necessities, make it impossible for the low-salaried Government employees to meet necessary expenses. In reply to a number of questions he said that as his concern sells directly to thousands of Government employees he has first-hand information regarding how hard it is for them to make their salaries cover the needs of life.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 14, 1917.]

Mr. WATKINS. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. WATKINS: Page 23, line 9, after the word 'thereof,' strike out '$53,000,000' and insert '$66,250,000.'"

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the proposition of increasing the pay of rural free-delivery carriers when the bill was under general debate the statement was made on the floor that a special subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was investigating the question so as to determine as to what would be a reasonable amount to add to the compensation of the rural free-delivery carriers as well as post-office clerks. The gentleman from Indiana, in discussing that question, intimated very strongly that in all probability if any increase was allowed it would not be more than 15 per cent. This amendment calls for an increase of 25 per cent. I have carefully estimated the expenses of the rural free-delivery carriers, and I am satisfied that no increase of less than 25 per cent will be adequate. I have made a compilation of figurts, showing not only the living expenses of the rural free-delivery carriers but also their expenses incident to the maintenance and upkeep of their vehicles—whether motor propelled or horse drawn—and the expense of maintaining the animals when they have to use horse-drawn vehicles. These figures show that foodstuffs have increased from 50 to 200 per cent in three years; gasoline, 100 per cent; provisions, as follows:

Bacon	per pound	$0.20	$0.45
Ham	do	.18	.35
Lard	do	.08	.23
Macaroni	do	.07	.12
Cheese	do	.18	.35
Butter	do	.25	.50
Flour	do	.04	.07
Sugar	do	.05	.10
Onions	do	.03	.06
Rice	do	.07	.10
Grits	do	.03	.06
Black-eyed peas	do	.07	.12
Codfish	do	.15	.24
Bread	do	.05	.10
Beef (fresh)	do	.17	.35
Pork (fresh)	do	.20	.40
Irish potatoes	per peck	.22	.50
Sweet potatoes	do	.20	.45
Eggs	per dozen	.25	.45
Tomatoes	per can	.08	.12
Sirup	per gallon	.65	.90

Laborers' wages have increased 100 per cent. The price of cotton and other agricultural products having increased in like proportion, there is a great inducement for rural free-delivery carriers to engage in other vocations.

This same statement applies in reference to letter carriers, as well as to rural free-delivery carriers, except as to stock, feed, and gasoline.

I regard an increase of 25 per cent for rural free-delivery carriers as most reasonable and just, and insist that the amendment do pass.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I presume that my friend from Louisiana is not serious in offering this amendment. His amendment increases the appropriation $16,000,000. That is a question that ought to be and will be considered very carefully by the committee and a report made before passed on by the House. His proposition does not go to the extent of increasing the salaries or furnishing pay for equipment to rural carriers, but just adds $16,000,000 to the general appropriation, which could not possibly be used, if the amendment were passed, under the present law without an increase of the salaries and allowances for equipment. It seems to me that it is entirely useless to increase the gross sum of appropriations when there is no law to authorize its application anywhere. It would be an idle thing on the part of the House, and I presume the gentleman only offered it for the purpose of submitting some remarks and not with the idea that it would be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HELM. There were three hours allowed for general debate on this bill I would like to inquire how much of that time was consumed by those opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair does not know.

Mr. HELM. Let us make it a personal inquiry, then. Was there any time allotted to those who were opposed to the bill?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the time was to be equally divided between those who were for the bill and those who were against it. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] had the time for those who were against the bill.

Mr. HELM. I understand that application was made of him by the gentlemen opposed to the bill, and they were unable to secure time. I was advised the gentleman from Georgia requested time and was told that all the time was allotted.

Mr. MOON. Time on this side was allotted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for and during the period of the war and for 90 days after the proclamation of peace by the President the increased allowance for postal employees in addition to the compensation now received by them shall be as follows:

That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum and $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles.

That after the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade.

That hereafter the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1 at $1,100; grade 2 at $1,200; grade 3 at $1,300; grade 4 at $1,400; grade 5 at $1,500; grade 6 at $1,600; grade 7 at $1,700; grade 8 at $1,800; grade 9 at $1,900; grade 10 at $2,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the truth that Thou hast revealed unto men is the pledge of Thy favor, and in itself is the covenant that Thou dost make with those who are willing to follow the truth. As we seek to apply the great principles that Thou hast made known unto men to our civil government we pray Thy direction and Thy guidance and blessing, not only here in this place where we shape the policy of the Nation, but we pray Thee to bless those who represent us on the battle field, that they may be protected by Thy kind providence, that they may be inspired by the loftiest and highest ideals of Christian citizenship, that they may be preserved from danger, and that they may be given the supreme privilege of winning a great victory for humanity and freedom and truth. MESSAGE TO THE RUSSIAN SOVIET.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on March 14 the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers addressed a cable message, with the permission of the Secretary of State, to the Russian Soviet at Moscow. The message is so excellent in spirit and in expression that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the cablegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE RUSSIAN SOVIET,
Moscow, Russia:

Seven hundred and thirty-four American newspapers published in 33 different foreign languages stand as one behind the message the President of the United States of America has sent your body. These newspapers have a combined circulation of about 10,000,000 copies per issue and reach all races and peoples who have come to this glorious Republic to enjoy religious and political freedom and liberty, regardless of race or creed. They beseech you not to deal with autocratic governments, whose sole purpose it is to destroy civilization as we know it. The readers of our papers hold these principles of liberty to be their greatest blessing and, to secure them, have come to the United States from the different nations now devastated by these autocrats for selfish motives of royalty and to uphold the brutal god of militarism. Many of these readers come from the various parts of Russia. They love their mother country and pray to you, and through you to their kinsmen, not to put the shame of defeat on themselves and their people.

We ask you in the names of the millions of people who depend on the news of our papers to stand with us for the honor of our adopted country and our allies, of which your nation is one, in defeating the greatest enemies of civilization in the history of the world. We pray for your success and assure you of our aid in bringing about a glorious victory at arms. At your back the entire American Nation stands as a stone wall. With the termination of an honorable and lasting peace we pledge you our assistance in building up again your unhappy nation. Do not make the mistake of accepting a peace that will destroy your country, your homes, and your people.

LOUIS N. HAMMERLING,
President American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers (Inc.).
FRAND D. GARDNER,

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the William Orr Club, of Dover, N. H., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEEKS. I present a resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts relating to the drafting of aliens. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in the year 1918.]

Resolutions requesting the President and the Congress to devise and enact measures for the drafting of aliens.

Whereas there are in the United States thousands of aliens between the ages of 21 and 31 years who, though physically fitted for military or naval service, are exempt from all liability to be drafted during the present war, which condition is unjust and inexpedient: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby requests the President and the Congress of the United States to devise and enact suitable measures for drafting resident aliens other than enemy aliens of proper age for the military service of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Boston, March 9, 1918.

A true copy of resolutions adopted at the present session by the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in General Court assembled.

Attest:

ALBERT C. LANGLEY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. CALDER. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the New York Board of Trade and Transportation favoring a national budget system, and that it be referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Rooms of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, 203 Broadway, New York City.]

At the monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation held this day, Wednesday, January 9, 1918, Mr. Edward F. Cole, for the executive committee, submitted the following preamble and resolution, which was duly considered and unanimously adopted, viz:

A NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Whereas it is alleged that national legislative waste reaches hundreds of millions of dollars annually in the United States resulting from a multiplicity of Appropriation Committees in the House of Congress; that 50 or more of the countries of the world, including Great Britain, France, Germany, Argentina, Austria, Italy, Japan, Australia, and Canada, have budget systems; that the President of the United States, former President Taft, and many other strong public men urge the adoption of such system; and

Whereas House joint resolution 178, now pending, creates a commission to report a plan for the adoption of a national budget system: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade and Transportation very cordially approves the purpose of House joint resolution 178 and respectfully petitions Congress that it be adopted.

A true copy. LEE KOHNS, President.
Attest:
[SEAL.] FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the California Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Association, of Oakland, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation whereby American women marrying aliens will not be compelled to forfeit their citizenship, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a telegram from producers of wheat in some of the leading spring-wheat States, showing the cost of production of wheat. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 21, 1918.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the price of No. 1 northern wheat was fixed by the President of the United States at $2.17 per bushel for the 1917 crop and a correspondingly lower price fixed for other grades; and

Whereas the same prices have been likewise fixed for the 1918 crop; and

Whereas if it be assumed that the 1917 prices were reasonable and adequate under the conditions existing as to the 1917 wheat crop it is manifest that a consideration of various factors that will enter into the cost of producing the 1918 wheat crop will make it necessary for a higher price to be fixed for said 1918 crop in order that the producers may be equitably and justly dealt with, such factors, among others, being increase in cost of twine approximating 75 per cent, increase in cost of farm machinery, undoubted increase in cost of farm labor owing to scarcity because of the fact that thousands of the young men heretofore engaged in farm labor in wheat-producing States have been drafted into or have volunteered for military service of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the official representatives of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota, and Montana, in conference assembled pursuant to call at the city of Minneapolis, Minn., this 20th day of March, 1918, do hereby respectfully request that the President of the United States reconsider the prices fixed for the 1918 wheat crop and either raise the price by proclamation or urge the passage of the Gore amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill.

H. N. OWEN, Chairman.

THE CORN SITUATION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here a letter from Hon. Herbert C. Hoover in reference to a telegram from the Dazey-Moore Grain Co., Fort Worth, Tex., to myself, which was put in the RECORD yesterday afternoon at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and which related to the corn situation. I ask that the letter be set out in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, March 21, 1918.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: I am in receipt of a copy of telegram addressed to you by the Dazey-Moore Grain Co., of Fort Worth, Tex. Your correspondent is evidently much misinformed on the subject. If the Dazey-Moore Grain Co. made any commitments on behalf of the allied buyers I am sure these gentlemen will complete the bargain. If, on the other hand, they speculated against allied necessities, I am sure they deserve no sympathy.

You will recollect that, due to the blizzard weather from December to mid-February, there was an entire shortage in the corn movement of the country. The allied buyers had been unable to obtain more than 30 per cent of the allied requirements of corn during this whole period. You are also probably aware that corn can not be shipped overseas after the 1st of April until the germinating period has elapsed. Furthermore, a large tonnage of allied ships was waiting in our ports for foodstuffs, and the most urgent demands possible were being made upon us to secure their loading with some kind of human food and at once.

Through the energy of the railways a considerable number of cars were placed in the corn belt in the latter part of February, and it had been the hope of all of us that the corn movement would be sufficiently large to fill the cumulated domestic demand and the pressing necessities of the allies for shipment prior to April 1. A few days' experience, however, showed that the outstanding and long-delayed domestic contracts covered nearly all of the arrivals at the market, and the allies were unable to secure from day to day even a quarter of their necessities in time to load their empty ships and to enable their dispatch from seaboard before the 1st of April.

They appealed to me in this situation and to overcome a most distressing emergency I suggested to their buyers that they should form a committee of grain dealers in each of the various interior terminals and arrange with these committees to divert to the allies as large a proportion of the arrivals as possible by special trainloads at the voluntary sacrifice and delay of the outstanding contracts for domestic consumption and to continue this until the boats could be loaded.

These arrangements were carried out by the allied buyers, and immediately their pressing demands were filled they, in accordance with the understanding with us, stopped this committee buying and instructed all committees that they would complete any outstanding commitments that were still pending.

I think you will agree that the setting up of these committees and the diversion of the domestic traffic in interference with the ordinary demand and supply is not a measure that should be carried a moment longer than the actual pressure of complete necessity. It was terminated at the earliest possible moment. The arrangements did overcome a very grave situation, but did so with great inconvenience to our domestic consumers and was obviously rightly terminated as quickly as possible.

The whole transaction was carried out with the public knowledge of every grain exchange in the United States and therefore the general public. It was carried out as a war necessity, and your correspondent draws wholly wrong conclusions.

I take it that the allies must be fed, even if it causes some inconvenience to grain dealers; and I have found that few of them do not willingly fall into necessary war service.

In case any public notice is taken of this would you be good enough to introduce this letter?

Yours, faithfully,
HERBERT HOOVER.

ILLNESS OF SENATOR BROUSSARD.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, in view of the serious illness of my colleague I desire to have read the telegram which I send to the desk.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to say that when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] made a request for the consideration of this resolution the other day I objected, simply because I am opposed to the resolution. I did not care to have it considered by unanimous consent, for I was not in favor of it. If the request is for unanimous consent, I will object at this time, but if it is a motion I shall not oppose the motion, because I realize that the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order at the present time. Only unanimous consent is in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The morning business is not yet closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not yet closed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It can come up after the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was in error. It is not a resolution coming over from a preceding day. It was the report of a committee and is on the calendar, and at the close of the morning business is subject to a motion to be taken up, but is not now subject to a motion to take it up. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NEW. I withdraw it and will make the suggestion later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is still in order.

After the transaction of further routine business, which appears under appropriate headings,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? The morning business is closed.

Mr. NEW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 211.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana if the consideration of the resolution is likely to consume very much time?

Mr. NEW. I think not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On yesterday I gave notice that I would like to submit some remarks this morning at the conclusion of the morning business, if I could obtain permission of the Senate to do so.

Mr. NEW. I think the resolution will not require much time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 211.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, when the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution the other day I objected, because I was opposed to the resolution, and I did not care to have it come up by unanimous consent when I was present and opposed to it. I realize, however, that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], for whom I have very high regard and the kindliest personal feeling, is entitled to have this resolution considered at some time, and I shall not oppose the motion.

I have some objections to the resolution, and if the resolution is brought before the Senate I shall briefly state the objections. It will not take long, I will say for the benefit of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution at this time a debatable motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to remark that all motions made before 2 o'clock are to be determined without debate.

Mr. MYERS. Then I have nothing more to say at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 211.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 211, submitted by Mr. NEW on the 9th instant, as follows:

Whereas it has been stated in the public press of this date that the War Department in publishing the casualty lists of the American Expeditionary Forces now abroad will hereafter give names of soldiers only, withholding announcement of their residence and next of kin: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the War Department be requested to inform the Senate if such an order has been issued, together with the reasons for it, if not inconsistent with the interest of the service.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would feel it to be the Chair's duty to recognize in the first instance the Senator from Indiana, if he wants to discuss the resolution.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, it does not appear to me that the consideration of this resolution ought to require much time. It simply calls upon the War Department to furnish the Senate with certain information, "if not inconsistent with the interests of the public service." If the resolution is not couched in perfectly respectful terms, it is simply because my acquaintance with the English language is not broad enough to do it. There is no other purpose in the resolution than to determine in the minds of the Senate whether there are sufficient reasons for withholding the names and home addresses of American soldiers who are killed or injured abroad. I should like to add to that that this list is printed in full by the British newspapers, it is printed by Canadian newspapers, and I have here before me a list taken from a Washington paper of day before yesterday copied from a Canadian paper giving the names of American soldiers killed or injured with their post-office addresses—G. F. Fyfe, Los Angeles, Cal., killed; H. S. Ashbaugh, Moxahala, Ohio, gassed; and so on. I can not see why, if that list is published in newspapers printed on this continent in the English language and sent through by them to us, there can be any impropriety or any harm done by permitting American newspapers to do the same thing.

As I said, this resolution asks in the most respectful way possible that the Senate be informed of the reasons for withholding these lists "if not inconsistent with the public interest." If it is inconsistent with the public interest, the War Department can probably convince the Senate of that fact, but I think the Senate and the people through the Senate are entitled to that information.

There is a great confusion of names. For instance, here in one list that I have I find a certain name. I know three men of that name in different parts of the country—one in Virginia, one in Michigan, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] called my attention to a third, who lives in Omaha. Here is the result of an investigation started by one American newspaper: "John Collins" is reported as among the Americans killed. This paper has gone to the trouble of making inquiries in various cities—Detroit, Cleveland, New York, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Chicago—and finds that in Chicago there are 103 men of that name, in New York 142, in Detroit 32, in Cleveland 18, in Cincinnati 18, and in Philadelphia 83. That shows there are probably 3,450 John Collinses in the United States. I can see no objection to furnishing the information to the public that the John Collins who was killed was John Collins, of Detroit, or John Collins, of New York, as the case may have been, and thereby quieting the fears of the parents or next of kin or friends of the numerous John Collinses who are in the Army and unhurt.

In one of the New York papers there were given the names and addresses of four Frank Kellys, one Frank Kelly having been reported among the list of killed and injured. There were four in the city of New York, all of them in the Army.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator allow me to state that those four Frank Kellys were all members of the same company?

Mr. NEW. Yes; all in the Army and in one company from the city of New York.

There has been a great deal of comment on this order among the newspapers. I have personally received a large number of letters and telegrams from people objecting to it, hoping that it might be modified, and if it is not inconsistent with the interests of the public service, Mr. President, I think the order should be modified, and in a respectful way I suggest the War Department might inform the Senate and the public through the Senate if there is need for such an order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. At the time of the sinking of the Tuscania, I think every Senator was literally bombarded with telegrams to ascertain whether or not certain soldiers who were on that ship were saved or lost. I had a great deal of experience with that situation. It was reported that hundreds of Michigan people had been lost when that ship went down. It took me several days to ascertain for the relatives and friends of those men whether or not they were among the saved. There was only one way that I could give them the information which they desired, and that was the home address of each of those survivors. Not even the father's or the mother's name was given, but the home address was given. I took the pains to ascertain from the record who was saved, in order that I might in that way know with practical certainty who was lost. I sent hundreds of telegrams in reply to anxious inquiries about the fate of those soldier boys.

I agree with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] that more information than is now given should, if possible, be given. These soldiers have loved ones at home, and fathers and mothers are entitled to know promptly the fate of their boys. To withhold that information is to add untold agony to the sufferings of loyal and patriotic people who have already suffered much and who have made this great contribution to the American cause.

I desire to commend in the highest terms the efforts of the Senator from Indiana to find the basis of this extraordinary rule. If there is logic and reason and sense in it, of course we shall bow without complaining; but, so far as my information goes, it merely operates to wound the feelings of those affected and seriously affect the attitude of people at home toward the war and its consequences, if they can not find out as soon as possible the fate of their loved ones. They suffer the double penalty of doubt and anguish. I hope the resolution of the Senator from Indiana will prevail.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for a question.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not intend to ask a question. I was going to make a statement of fact, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. NEW. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. The statement I desire to make seems to me to justify the resolution.

On Sunday evening last I received a telegram from Ohio, which was sent me in the interest of and on behalf of a distressed father, who had seen in the casualty lists the name of a young man whom he believed to be his son.

I immediately took the matter up with the War Department and found there was no one there who could give me the desired information. On Monday morning I again inquired, and found that the name of this father's son, fortunately, was not in the casualty lists; that the name was that of another young man—the names being almost identical—who lived in a city in the far South.

Now, it does seem to me that there was no reason why this father in Ohio should be thus disturbed, and there was no reason why the father in the South should not have the information when it related to his own son. Personally I see no reason, looking at it with my limited knowledge of military affairs, why this information should not be given out as heretofore. If there is a military reason for not doing so, I have no doubt we shall learn it in response to the resolution which the Senator from Indiana has presented.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has stated the gist of this whole matter in the last sentence which he uttered. If there is a military reason, of course, no one wishes to force any other action than that which has been taken; but I did not have the opportunity to hear the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] make his preliminary statement, and I should like to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that it is still the practice in Great Britain and in Canada to publish with the name of the soldier either the organization with which he was connected or his residence or the nearest of kin, so that it can be easily determined who he is and from what section he comes. Under that practice such an instance as that stated by the Senator from Ohio could not occur.

I think there is every reason, so far as I know, from a military standpoint why this information should be furnished the public, and I therefore hope the resolution of the Senator from Indiana will be adopted.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I read such a list, though I did not read it in extenso. I have, however, such a list here, which has been published in the Canadian papers and reprinted in the papers in this country, of Canadian soldiers and American soldiers who were killed abroad. I can see no reason why it will furnish the Kaiser any particular information to know that Frank Kelly, who was reported killed, was Frank Kelly, of New York, or Frank Kelly, of Omaha, while such information would furnish relief to the minds of the parents of Frank Kelly in New York if it is Frank Kelly of some other place who happens to have been the victim of that casualty.

If there are good military reasons, Mr. President, why this information should not be furnished, no man in the Senate will more willingly defer to them than will I; but in the absence of a good reason, I think it is information which the public should receive.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I would suggest to the Senator from Indiana—and I offer it as an amendment—that for the sake of clarity the words "if not inconsistent with the interest of the service," should be stricken out of the third and fourth lines and inserted in the first line after the word "requested," so that it will read:

That the War Department be requested, if not inconsistent with the interest of the service, to inform the Senate if such an order has been issued, together with the reasons—

Then, I would suggest an additional amendment by inserting after the word "for" the words "such order."

Mr. NEW. I accept the amendment. I also suggest that the date mentioned in the resolution ought to be corrected. The preamble of the resolution reads:

Whereas it has been stated in the public press of this date—

The preamble should be amended to read, "from the newspapers of recent date," or the newspapers of the date of the calendar day on which the resolution was introduced, and I shall ask that the modification be accepted without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that he move to insert the words which we always use in resolutions of this character—"if not incompatible with the public interest"—rather than the language he has suggested—"if not inconsistent with the interest of the service."

Mr. KNOX. I think it is immaterial which language is used.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator feels that there is no difference, very well.

Mr. NEW. I have no desire to bring out anything which is inconsistent with the interests of the military service.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the Senator from Indiana if it would not meet with his approval to strike out in the first line of the preamble the words "this date," and insert "March 9," as that was the day the newspapers published the information?

Mr. NEW. That is what I was endeavoring to suggest.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will also suggest to the Senator that instead of having the resolution read, "Resolved, That the War Department be requested," would it not be better that he frame it so that it will read, "Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested," rather than the War Department?

Mr. NEW. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, on lines 2 and 3 the Senator has used the language "together with." It seems to me that it would be better if the resolution read:

That the War Department is requested to inform the Senate if such an order has been issued, and, if so, the reason for it—

Rather than "together with."

Mr. NEW. I accept that amendment. It is the spirit of the resolution in which I am interested and not its language.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we have the resolution read now as it is proposed to modify it, in order that we may know how it stands in its perfected state?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be modified, the resolution reads:

Whereas it has been stated in the public press of March 9, 1918, that the War Department in publishing the casualty lists of the American expeditionary forces now abroad will hereafter give names of soldiers only, witholding announcement of their residence and next of kin: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested, if not inconsistent with the interest of the service, to inform the Senate if such an order has been issued; and if so, the reasons for such order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified. All in favor will say "aye"; those opposed, "no."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I would like to have the privilege of saying a few words on the subject, as I have made some objection to the resolution. Has the result of the vote been announced?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. MYERS. Then, if the result has not been announced I wish to say a few words. I do not hope to change the result; but I would not care to indulge in the futile task of making remarks after the result of a vote had been announced. I will take but a few minutes of the Senate's time, and in the beginning I wish to say that I have the very greatest respect, the highest regard, and the kindliest personal feelings for the esteemed Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], the author of this resolution.

It is a very unusual thing for me to object to a request for unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a measure before this body, and it was with regret that I did so the other day when the author of this resolution asked for unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. My reason for doing so was that I was opposed to the resolution when it was offered, and when I read of it and heard about it it impressed me unfavorably, and I did not care to be present when unanimous consent for its immediate consideration was asked without expressing my dissent from the terms of the resolution.

I realized that the Senator from Indiana was entitled to consideration of his resolution, and when he moved to-day for its consideration I intended saying in the few remarks that I had in view to make that if he were asking unanimous consent I would have to object again, because I was opposed to the resolution; but if he were making a motion I would have nothing to say against his motion to take up the resolution for consideration. I only had a few words to say in opposition to the resolution, and I felt I could express my views in regard to the resolution after it should be laid before the Senate for disposition. I will now proceed to do so.

On the day after this resolution was introduced and request was first made for unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, the following article appeared in the Washington Post with regard to the resolution:

Gen. March made the following statement:

"Gen. Pershing sent a cable to the effect that a protest had been made to him by the French Government against the publication in the United States of the data in the form it has been published. The Government said it was giving valuable information to the Germans.

ALLIES WITHHOLD CASUALTY DATA.

"The French system is to publish no casualties whatever. After three years of war this has been found the safest course to pursue. The names of the men are communicated to the mayors of the towns, who communicate the information personally to the relatives.

"The British publish casualties without any information that connects a man with any organization or with any particular action.

"Gen. Pershing regards it as of the utmost importance that casualties be not connected with the fighting, as it is going on in such manner as to provide the enemy with information.

"It is the patriotic duty of Americans to support Gen. Pershing in this. Get back of him."

The same article further said:

Gen. McIntyre, the War Department censor, explained further yesterday some of the reasons which made it necessary to conceal this information from the enemy. He pointed out that the enemy regarded it as of the utmost importance to ascertain as nearly as possible the line of battle of its opponents and the make-up of the opposing units.

Much of this information, he said, was obtained by the enemy airplanes, raiding parties, spies, etc., but in addition to this there were German agencies at work supplying information from neutral and other countries, particularly from the home country of the rival troops.

It is said that information of this character travels with incredible rapidity. It is not impossible that information printed in the newspapers here is dispatched to Germany via neutral countries by some dummy code or other ingenious means.

Particular stress was laid by the French Government on the published reports here concerning the number of Americans killed and put out of action by the German gas attack of March 1. For reasons not divulged this information appears to have done considerable harm, according to Gen. Pershing.

These articles, as I have said, appeared in the Washington Post, the morning after this resolution was introduced, upon which occasion the esteemed author of the resolution asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, to which objection was made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the resolution went to a committee. I do not believe that a paper of the standing and character of the Washington Post would print these interviews, purporting to quote the language of Gen. March and Gen. McIntyre unless they were authentic; and if authentic, these high officials of the War Department have already given the reasons which caused the making of the order in question.

If that is correct, if the order was issued at the request of Gen. Pershing, I do not care what Gen. Pershing's reasons are; I do not care what are the facts that caused him to make the request; if Gen. Pershing, our commander in chief in Europe, says that this is necessary or advisable and asks that it be done, I, for one, am willing to grant his request without a word.

Gen. Pershing is or is not competent to conduct the campaign which has been intrusted to his care in Europe. If he is competent, I think that he ought to have his way about it, without being compelled to disclose his reasons to this body. If he is not competent, I think he ought to be recalled and some competent man put in his place. That is my view of the matter, and it does seem to me that the War Department ought to be allowed to make some move or take some step without being criticized for it or called to account for it and made to give its reasons to this body.

I confess that I am not in sympathy with what appears to me to be a manifest disposition in this body continually to criticize the War Department, to call it to account, and make it give its reasons to the Senate or to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs for nearly everything that it does, or at least for a great many of the things that it does. It seems to me that we ought to go on the assumption that the War Department is competent to attend to some things, some part of its business, without being called to account by this body; and when I read a plain statement, which undoubtedly was an authentic, verbatim interview, published in a reputable newspaper as coming from Gen. March, the Chief of Staff, and Gen. McIntyre, the Chief of the Censorship Bureau of the War Department, it did seem to me that that was enough, without going further and requiring them to account to this body for their reasons in so small a matter as this.

I say "small matter," because it is relatively small. Of course, the parents and other relatives of our soldiers in France like to learn all they can about them, but assurance has been given by the War Department that in addition to publishing the names, the specific information about who the party is who has suffered a casualty, his full name and where he resides, is immediately telegraphed by the War Department to his nearest of kin, whoever that may be in this country, to his father or mother or wife or guardian. Of course, uncles and cousins and aunts in different parts of the country may be anxious to know who is John Jones, reported dead or wounded, and may be restive; but if the parent or the wife gets this information by telegram immediately from the War Department, and Gen. Pershing says that no more information should be given out, it seems to me that uncles and aunts and cousins and other distant relatives might be allowed to be restive for a few days until they may hear from the next of kin, who is promptly notified.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Do either of the generals whom the Senator quoted from the newspaper state that it would be dangerous to publish the town or city from which the soldier came who was killed?

Mr. MYERS. I have just read the interviews.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I followed it the best I could, but I did not see that the interviews said anything about the residence. What earthly reason there could be for withholding from the Germans the information that John Smith, who was killed, came from Chicago rather than New York, is beyond me; but it may be within the knowledge of our General Staff. If so, I would not want to extract it. But if they have no reason we do not ask them to give it, and if they have a good one, if they give it, it will be sustained, and if they have a bad one it ought to be overruled.

Mr. MYERS. Those interviews were given out, and the main reason they give is that Gen. Pershing has requested it. If he has requested it, that reason is good enough for me. I do not want him to give any further reason; and I must say that I am not in sympathy with what seems to me to be a manifest disposition in the legislative branch of the Government to call the War Department to account for nearly everything it does. We have investigations, we have resolutions, we have criticizing speeches. I notice that in the House of Representatives some Member has introduced a resolution to investigate the sinking of the Tuscania, to learn why it was sunk. The reason it sank, as I understand, is that it was torpedoed by a submarine; but they are not satisfied with that. They want to know, I suppose, why the submarine torpedoed it. I see that some ship went to sea a short time ago and sank, and that there is an announced intention of introducing a resolution to investigate why it was sent to sea and why it sank; and we have investigations about nearly everything the War Department does, it seems. While I do not impugn the motives of those who are more critical than I, it does seem to me that from the beginning of this war the War Department has been subjected to an undue amount of criticism. If it does a thing, it is criticized. If it does not do a thing, it is criticized.

When the cantonments were located in the South there was a wholesale, broadside, avalanche of criticism for locating the most of those cantonments in the South, and partisan reasons were intimated on the part of some. It was criticizingly asked, "Why was this done?" "Why were nearly all the cantonments put in the South?" Then, last winter, when the hard winter came on, unusually cold weather, there was a broadside of criticism because a few of those cantonments were located in the North—one in Massachusetts, where it was said to be too cold for the soldiers to be drilled. "Why were not all those cantonments located in the South, where the weather was mild," was asked by critics of the War Department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with great pleasure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Warm weather is coming on now pretty soon, and I should like to know if they have succeeded in getting any cotton uniforms for summer wear for the soldiers?

Mr. MYERS. There is another subject for criticism and investigation and resolutions. I suppose there will be an investigation of that. I suggest that the Senator from Washington offer a resolution to investigate that weighty question.

I am speaking in the best of feeling for Senators who take a different view about these matters. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] may wonder why I have taken his innocent little resolution, as he regards it, as an object of my opposition, and have said that we should draw there a line against criticism. Well, there had been so much investigation, so much criticism of the War Department that when I heard this resolution it seemed to me it was uncalled for and in line with the general spirit of criticism that pervades this body and that we might as well oppose some of these movements in that direction, for I regard the great majority of them as wholly unjustified. If the spirit of criticism of the War Department in Congress keeps up I think we might as well make a clean sweep of it and adopt a resolution and cable it to Gen. Pershing ordering that each night he is to map out a program of the movements of his troops for the next day, what he is going to do, what moves he is going to make, and require him to cable it over here and lay it before this body at 12 o'clock noon each day, and let this body approve or disapprove it and wire back its approval or disapproval. Of course, he would not be bound by it, but there would be as much merit in it as has been in some of the resolutions and criticisms that have been launched at the War Department from this body.

I believe that the entente allies and the United States have the most gigantic problem of all the ages of the world in their undertaking to defeat Germany and her allies in this war. I regard the central powers as already half victorious in this war. They have fought their way already half way to victory. When this war began the central powers were assailed on each side, the east and the west. They had powerful opposition on each side. To-day, after nearly four years of warfare, every vestige of opposition on the east side of the central powers is wiped out of existence, conquered, subdued. Not one vestige of opposition remains on the east side. Of course that is not the side on which the strongest opposition was made; but whatever it was has been conquered, and in addition to conquering that opposition the central powers have thereby gained control of almost unlimited fields of material resources and supplies, which probably put the central powers on as good a footing as to supplies and give them as strong a defense against starvation as the entente allies and the United States. I have been giving these matters serious consideration, and it does seem to me that with the most supreme and gigantic effort which we must make to reverse the operations of war on the western front and to put victory on our side in the remaining half of this war we ought to some extent follow our leaders without so much quibbling and criticism and without so much of a disposition to call them to account—to call them on the carpet, you might say—before this body and its committees, and make them give their reasons for nearly everything they do. I believe it is time we were getting together in better spirit and taking the judgment of the men at the head of the War Department and the judgment of Gen. Pershing in the field as being worth something and adopting it as our judgment, and pulling together instead of continually criticizing and pulling apart. Surely the War Department is competent to do something without interference from this body and its committees.

Those are the reasons why I have opposed this resolution. The sum and substance of it may be expressed in the one statement that Gen. Pershing has requested it, and that is enough for me. I think we should do everything in our power to back up Gen. Pershing instead of making him give his reasons for what he is doing so we may decide whether he is right or wrong. Trust him to know something. Trust him to do something right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF MILITARY BILLS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are at least 29 measures reported out of the Military Affairs Committee that are very essential to the prosecution of this war. The department has urged action on them, but somehow or other we have not been able to get these measures up. I am going to serve notice on the Senate now that if I can not get opportunity to take these bills up in the morning hour I am going to ask, to-morrow or next day, to displace the Indian appropriation bill, unless I can arrange with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to consent to let me get these bills in. I think their passage is essential, and I think the Senate will agree with me that they ought to be put through. Many of them have not yet passed the House. They must be acted upon by the Senate and then taken up in the House later.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the statement made by the Senator from Oregon. I do not believe that at 2 o'clock there will be any objection on the part of the Senator from Arizona to laying aside the Indian appropriation bill temporarily and proceeding with the bills mentioned by the Senator. If there were any real necessity for the passage of that bill within a given time, then, of course, it would be another matter, but no harm can come even if that bill is not passed for two weeks.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe not.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is absolutely correct in his position.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from New Mexico——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that instead of waiting until to-morrow, then, we undertake to proceed immediately after the address of the Senator from New Mexico to take up the military bills?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall undertake to arrange that with the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it very important to go right on with them at once, rather than wait until to-morrow, if the Senator from Arizona is willing to have that done.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was inquiring if, after the Senator from New Mexico concluded his remarks, the Senator from Arizona would consent to laying aside the Indian appropriation bill in order to dispose of some of these military bills?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, after the unfinished business, which is the Indian appropriation bill, is laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock, should the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs or any member of the Committee on Military Affairs assert to the Senate that the passage of a certain bill is very important, I would ask unanimous consent that the Indian appropriation bill be laid aside for two hours or three hours; but I wish in all courtesy to have it understood that I can consent to nothing that would displace the Indian bill as the unfinished business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I will not ask that, because the Senator has always been very courteous about allowing these bills to be considered; but I do think they ought to be considered by the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

SHORTAGE OF SUGAR AND COAL.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico resumed and concluded his speech, which is, entire, as follows:

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on December 11, 1917, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] introduced and the Senate passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be directed to inquire into the causes of the shortage of sugar and coal and report to the Senate thereon, together with their recommendation of any steps which they may deem it necessary to take with a view of remedying the conditions and, if possible, preventing their recurrence.

The Committee on Manufactures met on December 12 and appointed a subcommittee consisting of Senators REED, VARDAMAN, LODGE, KENYON, and myself to carry out the directions of the resolution. The subcommittee at once entered upon the performance of its duties, and on December 14 began the examination of witnesses. This examination continued, with but very few intermissions even during the holidays, until January 23 of this year. On the day after the taking of the testimony had been concluded the subcommittee met for the purpose of considering its report. No conclusion was reached other than that further consideration of a report should be deferred until after the testimony should have been printed. After a considerable lapse of time the chairman notified the members of the subcommittee that he was having prepared a tentative statement of facts regarding the coal situation. On February 25 the subcommittee met for the purpose of considering this tentative statement of facts, but inasmuch as other important questions were pending in the Senate, only a short session was held and no conclusion reached. On that day this statement reached the public press and was much commented upon. There has been no subsequent meeting of the subcommittee. At this meeting we were informed by the Senator from Massachusetts that, according to previous announcement, he would address the Senate upon the subject which the committee had had under consideration, on Wednesday, the second day thereafter. On this last-mentioned day the Senator, in pursuance of this notice, in a carefully prepared speech, which required about two hours in its delivery, presented his views both upon the facts which had been under investigation and the conclusions which appeared to him to flow therefrom.

My experience in this body has been so limited that I am not qualified to pass upon the propriety of the act of the Senator in discussing these questions at that time. It would seem, however, that the Senate, by the passage of the resolution and its reference to a committee which was subsequently authorized to employ reporters and incur the expense of printing its record desired a serious investigation of the subject matter and the benefit of the joint judgment of at least a majority of the whole committee. So far as I am advised, there is no reason why this result should not have been obtained. It would also seem that inasmuch as the Senator from Massachusetts has given complete expression to his views without conference with the members of the committee, that it is now impossible for the committee to take up the record, give it judicial consideration, and present a report in what I understand to be the usual way. The Senator in his speech not only discussed the immediate questions of sugar and coal, but entered into a general arraignment of nearly all the activities of the Government.

The public press discussed this speech at considerable length and its tendency has been to bring into disrepute not only the Food and Fuel Administrations but many other departments. From the Congressional Directory I have obtained the information that the Senator from Massachusetts was graduated from Harvard College in 1871 and from Harvard Law School in 1875; was admitted to the bar in 1876, and in the same year received a degree of Ph. D. from Harvard University; that his profession is that of literature; that he has published a large number of historical and biographical works, some of which I have read with much pleasure and, I hope, some edification. I find also in the Directory that he is a member of a number of literary societies and has received the degree of LL. D. from no less than seven of the best-known educational institutions in the country. He has occupied many positions of honor in the Republican Party and at its national conventions. He served two terms as a member of the House of Representatives of the Massachusetts Legislature, was four times elected a Representative in Congress, took his seat in the Senate March 4, 1893, and since that time has been a Member of this body.

Any statements emanating from a man with such an honorable career must create a profound impression upon all those who are permitted to hear or read them. The speech was delivered in a most pleasing and incisive manner. Its language was of the purest diction, and as a whole might be classed as a literary jewel studded with gems perfectly cut and highly polished. It would seem almost sacrilegious to mar its beauty, and I assure you that it is with a feeling of much temerity that I undertake to make any comment thereon. Only impelling reasons, in no wise personal, would tempt me to do so. Inasmuch, however, as I am forced to believe that the expressions and affirmances of the distinguished Senator tend to discredit the services of a vast number of patriots who are serving our country in this crisis and to discourage the great host of American citizens who are making sacrifices in order to preserve this Republic I can not remain silent.

Mr. President, I have attended practically all sessions of the subcommittee and have given to the matters under investigation as much thought and study as time and opportunity would permit, and I can not agree in the main with the Senator from Massachusetts upon some of the most important facts which he discussed nor with many of his most important conclusions. I feel it my duty, therefore, not only to the officials involved but the country generally, to mitigate, if possible, the evil influences which naturally follow erroneous statements from such a distinguished source. I crave, therefore, the indulgence of the Senate while I dwell as briefly as possible upon the statements and conclusions of the Senator from Massachusetts and also upon what I conceive to be a proper deduction from the record made up by the Subcommittee on Manufactures.

The Senator at the threshold of his argument calls to mind some of the general economic conditions of the world which existed prior to the war in Europe, and also the same economic conditions as changed by the war between August, 1914, and April, 1917. He points out that after the Spanish War an era of prosperity, not only in the United States but in other countries, was entered upon and that the prosperous condition of the people brought about a greater demand for all commodities entering into human consumption. He also very definitely sets forth the increase in the circulating medium through vastly increased production of gold and the expansion of credits and of currency based on gold. From these causes it was rightfully contended that commodities in general would be advanced in price. We are given the changes in price of 35 articles of food which took place between the year 1900 and the year 1910. From this it appears that 32 articles had increased and only 3 decreased in price during the 10-year period, and that the increase of all averaged 40 per cent of the 1900 prices. This tendency in prices was gradual and continued until the beginning of the European war. The effect of the European war upon prices is so graphically pictured by the Senator that I quote from him, as follows:

> Such, then, was the economic situation in regard to prices, which had existed for some 15 years, when the war broke out in Europe. That war brought with it a necessary reduction of the purchasing power of the nations involved, but this effect, tending to lower prices, was gradual in its operation, and, although it will undoubtedly be felt with intense severity after the close of the war, it has thus far in no degree offset the other effects which the war produced. Millions of men—it has been estimated as many as 40,000,000—were taken by the war in the course of three years from the class of producers and were converted into consumers. Other millions were taken from reproductive industries and forced into industries wholly nonproductive; that is, industries which were engaged in making shells and explosives, for example, which were immediately destroyed and which, of course, earned nothing. This absorption of millions of men in war and war industries produced inevitably a great shortage of labor in all the ordinary and reproductive occupations. There could be no more powerful cause than this for a violent advance in prices, and this movement was still further accelerated by the increase of the circulating medium in Europe through the issue of paper currency and the expansion of national credits, and in this country by the pouring in of enormous quantities of gold to pay for the purchases made by the belligerent nations. The general upward movement of prices, therefore, which had been going on steadily before the war was greatly and abnormally quickened by the unnatural effects of war conditions.

It is not pointed out, however, how much prices were advanced by reason of the European war, and while he states that they were abnormally quickened by the unnatural effects of war conditions, that fact does not seem to have made any permanent impression upon his mind. Immediately following the quotation just made, the Senator says:

> This was the situation which confronted us when we entered the war last April and when we undertook to check the operation of these great economic forces by the artificial and arbitrary methods of law and by Executive action. It was proposed to reduce prices in spite of the overwhelming economic forces which were working always steadily and relentlessly toward their advance and at the same time to stimulate production.

Again the Senator says:

> The fixing of prices simultaneously with the stimulation of production, which was the enterprise we undertook * * * proceeded on the pleasant theory that high and advancing prices were not due to deep and irresistible economic causes, but were wholly owing to the fact that somebody was making undue profits. Undoubtedly there were people who were making exorbitant profits, but this was not the case with the great volume of business. Profits on an advancing market were good, but they were kept within bounds by corresponding advances in the wages of labor and in all running expenses, as well as by the good sense and intelligence of the mass of those engaged in business.

It is contended that the theory which has been acted upon by Congress was based on exceptions and not on the general rule and is, therefore, vicious. It is also contended that the slaughter of all makers of undue profits would undoubtedly check speculation and tend to give stability to prices, but would not stop their advance, which arises from fundamental and universal economic causes which can not be suppressed by "laws or decrees or even by lungs and language." The conclusion is, therefore, easily reached that attempts to lower prices by Executive decree or by law can not with the present economic forces at work possibly succeed.

On the other hand—

> a great deal can be done to stimulate production. If production is stimulated, then the natural laws, which are much more powerful than Congresses and Presidents, begin to work. A large production will certainly steady prices and prevent famines. If carried to the point of oversupply, it will lower prices, and it is the only thing that will. Therefore we should have addressed ourselves to the stimulation of production, and if anything could be done to lower prices it could be done in that way.

To my mind the Senator has not given us an adequate picture of the conditions as they existed at the time of the passage of the food and fuel legislation nor has he correctly stated the objects of that legislation. No one can successfully contend that prices steadily advancing owing to fundamental natural economic laws can be permanently lowered by laws or decrees. The 35 articles of food heretofore referred to during the 10-year period from 1900 to 1910 advanced on an average of 4 per cent per annum, while during the one year, 1915, the index number of all commodities, as shown by the statistics of wholesale prices issued by the Department of Labor advanced more than 23 per cent. During the year 1916 all commodities made a further advance of more than 32 per cent. As compared with prices in December, 1915, Bessemer pig iron in 1916 had increased 142 per cent, steel billets 203 per cent, and barbed wire 80 per cent. In June and July, 1916, No. 2 hard winter wheat at Kansas City sold at less than $1 per bushel. In November of the same year No. 1 northern spring wheat was selling at Minneapolis at $2 per bushel. As compared with 1915, the price of granulated sugar during the year 1916 averaged nearly 24 per cent higher in price. During the last five months of 1916 in many instances prices of coal were more than doubled. Pittsburgh run-of-the-mine coal in Cincinnati increased from $2.20 per ton in August to $4.50 per ton in December. At the same time New River smokeless coal increased from $2.60 to $6.10 per ton. Pocahontas coal at Norfolk increased from $3.25 per ton in August to $6 per ton in December. From May to December in 1916 the price of coke was more than doubled. In 1914 the average price of copper was 13 cents per pound and during 1916 the price averaged 27½ cents per pound—during a portion of the year it was more than 34 cents per pound. No official data are readily obtainable as to prices of these various commodities during the early part of 1917, but it is safe to assume that they were as high and even much higher than the prices above mentioned on April 6, 1917, when the United States was forced into a world war.

The resolution which declared that a state of war existed between this country and the German Government pledged all our resources to the prosecution of the war. That this pledge was made in good faith received concrete affirmances in the various bills which were passed during the next few months making appropriations for the conduct of the war. These various appropriations and authorizations for the first fiscal year, not including the sums of money provided to be advanced to our allies or our ordinary expenses, amount to the stupendous sum of $12,413,452,720.41. When we recall that prior to the European war the total productive income of the United States did not exceed $40,000,000,000 per annum and that the net income of the entire country after the payment of living expenses probably did not exceed $5,000,000,000, we can realize in some degree at least the extent to which production must be increased if we should put into the war the commodities necessary to carry it on according to the standard set by these appropriations.

In this undertaking an unlimited demand for many commodities was created, and, taking into consideration the necessities of our allies, a demand for many commodities was created which could not be satisfied with any facilities then existing or which could be supplied in the near future. In addition to this, we began calling, and are still calling, men in vast numbers from the ordinary productive pursuits of life and forcing them, in an economic sense, to become consumers only or engaged in what usually is termed nonproductive industries. These were the conditions and these the future prospects which confronted the country on August 10, 1917, when the food and fuel legislation was enacted. In these circumstances it seems to me that it would have been the height of folly to have depended upon the natural laws of supply and demand for the regulation of prices. I do not believe with the Senator from Massachusetts that "profits were kept within bounds by corresponding increases in the wages of labor and in running expenses, as well as the good sense and intelligence of the mass of those engaged in business." In many lines of industry strikes were occurring because the operators were reaping unheard-of profits and the laborers not receiving their just share. The prices of food, fuel, clothing, rents, and all the necessaries of life were advancing and still advancing to such an extent that the laborer, although receiving what in previous years would have been considered high wages, was not satisfied. Contractors were declining to make bids upon work for the Government because they did not know what would be the cost of either material or labor. It was known to everyone that many months, and perhaps several years, would elapse before production under the greatest stimulation could overtake the demand. Without some regulation of the prices of the necessities of life there would have been an ever-increasing cycle of higher prices, and it would have been impossible for the War or Navy Departments to make estimates of the cost of ships, munitions of war, or the expenses of maintaining our soldiers and sailors, as the effectiveness of appropriations could not be ascertained. Notwithstanding what has been done, much uncertainty has existed, and still exists, as to the value in war of the appropriations made by Congress, and unless something had been done to regulate prices chaotic conditions only would have obtained. I can not, therefore, agree with the Senator that the purpose of the legislation of August 10, 1917, was an attempt to lower steadily advancing prices brought about through any natural economic causes. The purpose, as I view it, was to stay the hands of greed and avarice which had practically seized every industry contributing directly to the war, until, at least in some measure, production might be stimulated and overtake the demand. That such a purpose could be accomplished by what the Senator calls "legislative artifice and Executive action," in my judgment, has been accomplished, as I hope to demonstrate by an examination of the activities of the Food and Fuel Administrations.

The Senator from Massachusetts says months have elapsed since we entered upon the experiment of reducing prices and at the same time increasing production and that the time has come when we can profitably discuss the results. The legislation regarding food and fuel became a law on the 10th of August, 1917, and the investigating committee began its work on the 14th of December following, a period of four months having elapsed. It is impossible, of course, to determine in so short a time the actual effect of efforts to increase production of a crop which is produced only annually, as is the case of sugar, but careful reasoning from cause to effect will indicate the probable results.

The Senator after a lengthy discussion of the sugar problem reaches the conclusion that the shortage of sugar was artificial and caused by the attempt to establish artificial prices and by interfering to some extent with distribution, and he finds "two central facts as a result of the policy adopted by the Food Administration in regard to sugar to have been a slight reduction in the price from the high point reached in August and a scarcity of sugar, amounting in some cases to a famine." The Senator says:

> Admitting that there would have been high prices at the period I have described, there can be no doubt that with the higher prices there would have been sufficient sugar in all parts of the country for the normal consumption of the people of the United States, and that they would rather have paid a higher price and had some sugar.

If these contentions be true, the millions of our patriotic citizens who have voluntarily made self-denial in order to conserve sugar should feel a just resentment and the Food Administration be subjected to censure.

Let us therefore examine the evidence as to the shortage of sugar and why it occurred. There is no doubt but what there was during the last three months of the year an actual shortage in the supply of sugar in many sections of the country. In certain sections and at certain periods sugar could not be obtained except in small quantities and in some cases none was to be had. There is no evidence that there were any supplies of sugar above normal in any section of the United States. That there was a shortage there can be no doubt, but the Senator says that it was artificial, and this assertion is of such great import that it is worthy of careful examination. It was attempted at the hearings and also by the Senator in his speech to demonstrate by statistics that there was an abundance of sugar. These statistics submitted by the Senator upon analysis do not appear to me to be convincing. At the time these statistics were prepared they were largely in the estimate stage so far as the supply available for the last three months of last year was concerned, and there are serious discrepancies in their alleged demonstrations.

In the first place, no statistics were or are available as to the great stock of sugar in the country which had been sold by the refiners or the beet-sugar factory and which was or is in the warehouses of the jobber or stores of the wholesale grocer or shops of the retailer or the household of the consumer. For all statistical purposes sugar disappears as soon as it is sold by the primary manufacturer and is thereafter referred to as "invisible stock." Except for the two special surveys made by the Department of Agriculture on August 31, 1917, and December 31, 1917, at the instance of the Food Administration itself, the amount of this invisible stock in the country at any one time is a subject of guesswork, and yet at the same time there is enough leeway here to account for the difference between plenty and scarcity.

Another important matter on which there are no statistics available is the amount of domestic beet sugar carried over from the beginning of the year. Figures are available for the entire beet crop of 1916–17, but when we try to figure the supplies for the calendar year 1917 we do not know what proportion of this beet-sugar crop was sold by the factories before January 1, much less what was in transit to the consumers.

In the same way there have been no figures presented as to what proportion of the 1917–18 crop of domestic beet sugar was available before January 1, 1918. It is here that I think the Senator made a fundamental error in attempting to demonstrate by statistics that there was an abundant amount of sugar in the United States. In figuring the amount of sugar available during the three autumn months of last year, he states that the Louisiana crop was 271,339 long tons and the United States beet-sugar crop was 734,577 tons. These figures, as shown by the table on page 2728 of the RECORD, are the figures for the 1916–17 crop, which in both cases began to be harvested in the fall of 1916, was marketed in the winter of 1916–17, and was completely disposed of before last summer. No better illustration could be asked of the danger of statistics in the hands of those of us who are not thoroughly conversant with the subject.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator from New Mexico to say that the beet-sugar crop for the year which has just closed was not 734,000 long tons?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The year is not just closed.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the year 1917. They call it 1916–17 or 1917–18, but they only include, as the Senator well knows, the month of December.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is just that point that I am trying to make clear, that we do not know how much of that sugar was available during the month of December. We can only tell what was estimated for the entire year, but I do not happen to have any definite statement here of what was actually produced of beet sugar for the entire crop of 1917–18.

Mr. LODGE. The crop of 1917–18 is not in, and, of course, neither the Senator nor anybody else knows anything about that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have the figures here for the crop of 1916–17.

Mr. LODGE. What I mean to say is that I took the last figures for a complete year, and that was the year completed on the 1st of December, 1917.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. LODGE. That is, 11 months of 1917 and 1 month of 1916. I understood the Senator to say that I had taken the figures for 1915 and 1916.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; but the figures which the Senator took were the figures for the year 1916–17.

Mr. LODGE. One month for 1916 and 11 months for 1917.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It so happens that the one month in 1916 runs into 1917, and we have no data which divide that portion of the crop which was produced and consumed in 1916 from that portion which was produced and consumed in 1917.

Mr. LODGE. I took the official figures for the year given by Willett & Gray and by the department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not making any war upon those figures; they were the estimates given at the time; but I am attempting to show that such figures give us no information upon which we can rely as to the actual supply of sugar which was available for the calendar year 1917.

Mr. LODGE. As to that there may be a difference of opinion, but they were the best figures we had.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Unquestionably so. I am not attempting to say that the Senator from Massachusetts did not obtain the best information he could get, but I am attempting to present the proposition that by any statistics which are available it is impossible to demonstrate a shortage of sugar or an abundance of sugar for the calendar year 1917.

Mr. LODGE. That, of course involves a difference of opinion, and not of figures.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. For instance, the Senator used the estimates of the year 1916–17, showing 271,000 tons as the Louisiana crop, but when that crop was actually produced and its yield actually ascertained, it had dwindled to 225,000 tons.

At this point Mr. VARDAMAN raised the question of a quorum, and the roll was called.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I was proceeding to try to get before the Senate information which will be absolutely convincing that there was an actual shortage in the supply of sugar available for the year 1917, and that this actual shortage was not artificial and brought about through the activities of the Food Administration.

The domestic crops which were actually available for the relief of the shortage in the last three months of last year were such portions of the domestic beet crop and Louisiana cane crop of 1917–18 as could be manufactured and marketed before January 1. The latest estimates of these crops are 750,000 tons and 225,000 tons, respectively. But those familiar with western conditions know that it is impossible to manufacture and market the entire beet-sugar crop before January 1, so that only an indeterminate portion of this crop, which was particularly and unfortunately late, was available at the time of the scarcity.

In the important matter of consumption the figures of the Senator from Massachusetts again illustrate the unreliability of a statistical demonstration such as he undertakes. His figures are based on Mr. Hoover's estimate of a normal consumption of 3,700,000 tons. While this was a proper estimate, actual consumption in the United States turned out to be 3,954,000 tons, an increase of 295,000 tons over the corresponding figures for 1916. It is true, as I have previously stated, that the statisticians treat sugar as having passed into consumption as soon as it leaves the factory where it is manufactured, without regard to whether it is eaten, put into preserves, hoarded by the consumer, or still in transit, but this only adds to the uncertainty of attempting to ascertain the amount of sugar actually in the country by any statistics available.

I think it advisable to put into the RECORD the table to which I have referred which appears on page 2728 of the RECORD, and ask that this may be done without reading.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This table is taken from the Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal of January 10, 1918, and gives an estimate of the sugar crops of the world, the various countries which produce sugar, and the estimated amount of the yield in each. I call attention to the practically stationary production of the world for the three years therein given. The right-hand column is the crop for 1915–16, which for the most part, as shown by the harvesting periods, is harvested in the calendar year of 1916. The middle column is the crop of 1916–17, at the close of which we experienced the sugar shortage now under discussion. The left-hand column is the estimate for the crop of 1917–18, now being harvested, but which, with the exception of a portion of the United States beet-sugar crop, the Louisiana crop, and certain other unimportant exceptions, was not available to relieve any shortage before the 1st of January.

There are some things we do know. Prior to the European war England had derived the largest part of her supply of sugar from Germany. Russia and France were exporters of sugar. Java exported a very material portion of the world's supply. Last year Russia exported no sugar; France had changed from an exporter to an importer; and, of course, no sugars were exported from Germany or Austria. Owing to the lack of tonnage, very little sugar was obtained from the Philippines. France, Italy, and England were making greatly forced reductions in the consumption of sugar. Nine hundred thousand tons yet remain in Java because it can not be transported. It is estimated that the sugar actually obtained for France, Italy, and England was 2,000,000 tons below normal consumption. Canada and all the neutral countries of Europe, several countries of South America, and British Africa were bidding in the American market for sugar. The supplies in all those countries, so far as information is obtainable, indicated less than normal supplies and limitation upon consumption. Had there been sugar obtainable in the United States it is evident that these neutral countries, and especially our allies, would have purchased it. These exports of sugar from the United States were either made or contracted for prior to the organization of the Food Administration, and contemplated exports of sugar to our allies were actually curtailed through the activities of the Food Administration. No criticism of the Food Administration has been made for its failure to curtail exports of sugar further than was done. In fact, the Food Administration had no legal authority to limit exports. On the other hand, it appears that through the international committee, which had been arranged by the Food Administration, imports of sugar from various countries were being received almost continuously during the last three months of last year, as will appear by a table of such receipts and the allocations thereof, which was put in evidence, and which I ask to be inserted in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Other evidence of a shortage is not wanting. The Department of Agriculture has recently made a statement upon this subject, in which it is said:

The returns of the food survey made on August 31, 1917, indicated that the total stocks of sugar on hand on that date were 26.4 per cent smaller than the stocks on hand August 31, 1916. According to a partial tabulation of the returns from the survey made four months later, namely, on December 31, 1917, the stocks on hand on that date were 55 per cent smaller than the stocks on hand December 31, 1916.

The half-yearly supplies referred to in this report of the Agricultural Department are the imports less exports and first-hand stock, so that on the 31st of August, 1917, the stocks of sugar in first, second, and third hand were approximately 125,000 tons below normal. This in itself would account for a sugar shortage in the face of practically normal arrivals.

The fact that after October 1 millions of people in the country were not able to buy all the sugar they wanted and that no sugar existed beyond the supplies made available would seem to be some evidence on the point. The following table, which I ask to be inserted without reading, was compiled by Dr. Pearl, of the Food Administration, from data obtained from the Department of Commerce, and is illuminating on the subject.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Consumption of sugar by half years.

	First half.	Per capita.	Second half.	Per capita.	Total.	Total per capita.
	Short tons.	Pounds.	Short tons.	Pounds.	Short tons.	Pounds.
1914	2,386,830	48.2	1,825,296	36.8	4,192,315	84.9
1915	2,361,448	47.2	1,895,286	37.6	4,212,123	83.9
1916	2,394,261	47.1	1,703,379	33.3	4,097,649	80.3
Average	2,448,268	48.4	1,800,775	35.4	4,232,692	83.6

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From this table it appears that there was a shortage in the last half of the year 1917 of 1.3 pounds per capita over the normal average of four years, or, based upon the half year, a shortage of about 300,000 tons. The larger consumption of the first half of the year can well be attributed to the increased prosperity of the workers and the average below normal of the last half was for this reason more real than would appear.

The large canning campaign of the Department of Agriculture, the unusual exports of condensed milk and other provisions containing sugar, all contributed to even greater shortage in ordinary domestic consumption than the apparent 300,000 tons in the last half of the year.

The charge made by the Senator is that the shortage of sugar was due to the official acts of the Food Administration, or, as the Senator states it, "The shortage of sugar was artificial and caused by the attempt to establish artificial prices and by interfering to some extent with distribution."

A complete refutation of this position is found in sugar-trade circulars published during the summer and fall. From these it appears that the sugar shortage, instead of being due entirely to the acts of the Food Administration, after its establishment on August 10, was in fact pending and imminent on that date and had been publicly and generally predicted by those who made it a business to follow the statistics of the world's sugar supply prior to the time when any controversy regarding these matters arose. The presumption is that those trade circulars state the facts as the people engaged in that line of industry saw them at the time; and the statements there can not be influenced by any testimony or divergence of views which has arisen subsequent to that time and which appeared upon the hearing of this matter.

I read into the record of testimony a number of these circulars from the refinery whose officers afterwards appeared as the most hostile critics of the Food Administration. From these circulars it appeared that as far back as July 2 the statement was made:

The simple fact is that Cuba is getting to the end of her crop, and available unsold supplies are steadily diminishing. On the other hand, there is no slackening in the demand.

On July 19 this same trade circular said:

It is only a question of how long the remaining stocks (in Cuba) will last in the face of the demand from Europe and the United States.

On July 2 it pointed out that the usual fall supplies from the Philippines could not be moved for lack of ships.

On August 6, four days before the passage of the Food Administration bill, there was a specific prediction of an early exhaustion of sugar supplies. The market was described as running wild, reserve stocks as being steadily depleted, and Europe and ourselves competing for the remaining stocks in Cuba, which were relatively small and in few hands. The difficulty of transporting sugars from Java was referred to, and the conclusion was reached that:

It is now apparently too late to forestall the shortage which threatens us between now and November 1.

There was another comprehensive review of stocks and possible supplies on August 31, all pointing to the same conclusion that cane supplies would soon be exhausted, a forecast which was repeated on October 10. By October 24 the shortage was acute, and this trade circular ascribed it not to any acts of the Food Administration but to the total exhaustion of the supplies which are now assumed to have been so abundant and to "the way the statistical position has worked out based on supply and demand."

Manifestly, the Food Administration, which came into being in August, was projected not into the seasonal conditions of a normal market but into difficulties already acute and impending. The only reply which the author of these circulars could make to this obvious conclusion was that they showed, as far in advance as July 2, that it was known that "an extraordinary effort must be made to keep the market supplied," but even assuming that the Food Administration failed to meet this extraordinary condition, this is a far different conclusion than that the entire shortage was manufactured by or due to the acts of Mr. Hoover and his associates.

Let us now consider the effect of the refusal of the Food Administration to pay more than 6.90 for the remnant of the old crop of Cuban raw sugar. The Food Administration claims that the available supplies were negligible in quantity, that the price offered was not only fair but high, that any purchase in the ordinary way would have resulted in a disproportionate advance in price, and that by adherence to this price of 6.90 it finally secured practically the entire supply. I consider that these claims are supported by the testimony.

It seems to me that the case against this contention is based upon a confusion of dates. As early as September 19 two of the large refineries of this country were closed for lack of supply of raw sugar—the Franklin Refinery, of Philadelphia, on September 15 and the Arbuckle Bros., in Brooklyn, on September 19. It was not until October 1 that the agreement was entered into, which is now blamed for the shortage, under which the refiners agreed that they would not purchase except through the international sugar committee of the Food Administration. According to the testimony this was not actually signed until October 10, after a majority of the refineries had closed for lack of supplies. In the meantime the international sugar committee had begun purchasing what sugar was available. They began September 27 and purchased small lots continuously up to the date of the hearings. The table of their purchases, which has just been introduced, completely refutes the claim that there was any considerable period in which no purchases were made.

This table shows that the international sugar committee bought sugar at frequent intervals at this price of 6.90, or its equivalent, from Cuba, Peru, Surinam, Venezuela, Philippine Islands, Demerara, Costa Rica, Brazil, Porto Rico, and Santo Domingo. The purchases were only of small lots, because only small lots were available; but the fact that they were able to purchase and sellers from all these various countries were willing to sell supports the contention that by a firm adherence to their price they cleaned up all the available remnants, a conclusion which was confirmed so far as Cuba is concerned by a telegram from the American consul general put in evidence by Mr. Hoover.

The most that can be claimed is that there was delay in the arrival of foreign sugars to this market. That there was delay is denied in the record; but whatever the fact is, the total amount of sugar involved in the delay did not amount to eight days' supply for the American people, and the fact that it was all transported and consumed before the period of shortage was over should finally bury the whole of this argument. If it was delayed, it was only delayed to a period when the shortage would have been more acute than during an earlier period of the same shortage. But even assuming the view of the worst faultfinder, that it was delayed, we can examine briefly a few of the advantages attained by these delays. The first and immediate effect was to put a stop to speculation in sugar; the price of 6.90 New York was held pending the new crop, which comes in at about 6 cents. The second effect was that it paved the way, at a reasonable level, for the assessment of a proper price, both for beet-manufactured sugar and for the new Cuban crop. If the price had been allowed to race upward to 20 cents at retail for refined sugar, we should not likely have made any contract at 4.60 Cuba or 6 cents New York for raw sugar.

Another matter on which I differ radically in my view of the testimony from that of the Senator from Massachusetts is his contention that the price fixed upon beet sugar prevented it from coming east of the Alleghenies, and that when this price was finally raised the beet sugar followed the natural law of supply and demand and began to move. These contentions were made in the most emphatic language.

As I understand the testimony, the supply of beet sugar was at no time subject to follow the law of supply and demand, but was entirely in the hands of a distributing committee at Chicago charged with the duty of securing its equitable distribution. To have fixed a price on a product and then leave its distribution uncontrolled would have been contrary to the fundamental principles upon which Mr. Hoover testified he acted.

The agreement establishing this beet-sugar distributing committee was put in evidence. Under clause 5 of the agreement the committee was given power to equalize the net proceeds among all the beet-sugar producers, so that neither the question of freight advantage or disadvantage nor the question of increased price concerned any individual producer. In other words, the beet-sugar industry of this country was pooled and sugar went where it was sent by the distributing committee.

If it be now contended that this committee did not do its utmost in relieving the scarcity where it was most acute, or that the difficulties with which it claimed to be confronted were in part imaginary, it is a little unfortunate that no member of this committee was given an opportunity to testify.

As in other cases, I am grateful that the record contains some scraps of correspondence written at the time, because, to my mind, these are far more illuminating than the contentions made after the matter has become the subject of controversy. The fact that these letters were introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts as exhibits in a complaint of one of his constituents does not, of course, detract from their value.

I quote here and comment upon several of these letters and telegrams, showing that the beet sugar was controlled, as far as distribution is concerned, by the committee in Chicago; that this was well known at the time; that after other sources for all New England failed an attempt was made to get this sugar over into the Atlantic seaboard, and a large quantity of it did go there; that the reason why more did not go was because it was absolutely impossible to obtain transportation, but that any statement that when the price was raised on beet sugar it then began to flow into the Atlantic States can not be supported. The price had absolutely nothing to do with it. The distribution was entirely in the hands of this committee in Chicago.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the subcommittee received any testimony in explanation of this somewhat unusual condition. Last November and December beet sugar, which, as the Senator knows, is produced in large quantities in Colorado, was selling in the city of Denver at 8.15, and at the same time cane sugar, which must be transported something over 2,000 miles from the nearest seaboard point to reach Denver, was selling at 8.5, a difference of 10 cents per hundred in favor of the domestic product.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There was no testimony taken upon the identical statement made by the Senator from Colorado, but I think I can reason from the testimony which was taken and furnish a cause for the situation which he has just named.

The cane sugar to which the Senator doubtless refers was what is known as the plantation granulated sugar, which went up from Louisiana. That crop of sugar was expected to have gone into New England to meet the demand there, and the price was agreed upon by the refiners and by the planters of Louisiana in such a manner, taking care of the freight rate, that it was expected and agreed really that one-half the supply should be sent to the Atlantic seaboard to the refiners; but owing to those prices and owing to the shortage of the supply of sugar in the Mississippi Valley—and, to my mind, this demonstrates the actual shortage not only in one section of the country but in all sections of the country—the fact that there was a shortage of the beet-sugar supply in the Middle Atlantic States made a demand for the plantation granulated, or the yellow sugar produced by the plantations in Louisiana, and it must have been that supply of cane sugar which was selling at 10 cents below the price of beet sugar.

Mr. THOMAS. It is true the first time in the history of the beet-sugar producing section with which I am familiar that cane sugar was selling in the market at less than beet sugar.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I quite agree with the Senator, and my own observation has been the same as his.

This correspondence shows that on October 13 the distributing committee at Chicago issued a circular, beginning as follows:

CHICAGO, October 13, 1917.

Owing to extremely late beet-crop operations in all beet-sugar producing sections, transportation conditions difficult beyond parallel in this country, and exhaustion of cane stocks through the efforts of America to furnish her allies, especially France, with most urgently needed supplies, an acute scarcity exists throughout this country.

Every conceivable effort will be made to relieve this condition, but supplies will inevitably continue inadequate for several weeks, and every section should willingly accept its portion of the war burden.

Two points are noticeable here. First, the reference to the exhaustion of cane stocks, and, next, to the statement that an acute scarcity exists "throughout the country"—not, as now contended, that there was an abundance of supplies west of the Alleghenies. On October 20 the sugar-distributing committee authorized the public announcement that the beet-sugar industry would come to the rescue of New England and North Atlantic States during the existing exhaustion of cane supplies, but adds a reference to the "extremely difficult transportation conditions."

On October 22 the brokerage company conducting the correspondence quotes a leading beet-sugar producer as saying, "I think it would be advisable for you to notify all customers that shipments on orders filed with us are seriously delayed, account of our inability to secure equipment from the railroads." The brokerage company itself adds that "nothing can be gained by buyers or brokers in their efforts to secure shipments faster than is humanly possible for producers to make them. Furthermore, many factories have not yet commenced operations, account lateness of season."

On October 22 the brokerage company telegraphed to Boston, "No beet consignments obtainable for any territory," which is further evidence of the widespread scarcity and not of discrimination against New England. This was confirmed by the letter of the next day, which still fails to show any discrimination against the East, but describes the general situation as follows:

We understand from the above that, owing to many factories not yet being in operation and the inability of those now operating to secure cars, the Food Administration sugar-distributing committee is now holding many orders recently submitted to them, which they will gradually pass upon only as increasing quantities of the new-crop sugars become available.

On October 25 the Boston firm was notified that these orders were being held up, not by the Food Administration at Washington, but by the committee at Chicago, and it would seem only fair to have stated this in connection with the bare statement that orders were being held up. The telegram giving the information and reasons therefore is as follows.

Orders you submitted are being held up by Food Administration sugar-distributing committee, account increasing delay in securing beet supplies, due to greater acuteness in car situation, arising from imperative necessity for first moving and saving grains. Will advise further soon as possible. Meanwhile please discontinue soliciting or submitting additional business.

In the absence of a more searching investigation of transportation conditions than has been undertaken, I see no reason why these contemporaneous statements should not be accepted at their face value. They certainly show no disposition to reject eastern orders arbitrarily, but, on the contrary, every intention of dealing equitably with a mass of difficulties compounded by the unexpected lateness of the beet-sugar crop and the difficulties of transportation.

It is true that the natural market for beet sugar is west of the Alleghenies, and that the general plans of the Food Administration contemplated that it should be marketed in its customary territory, depending on Louisiana to furnish its accustomed quota of raw sugar for the eastern refineries. As soon as this expectation was disappointed other steps were taken. To twist this statement of a general policy into a deliberate plan to keep an abundance of beet sugar west of the Alleghenies, while the East was suffering from an acute shortage, appears to me to be a distortion of the evidence.

Had the Food Administration the same advantage as its investigators to see in perspective the various phases of the situation after they had actually developed, I do not doubt that other steps might have been taken in time to equalize conditions more nearly. That the Food Administration failed in any particular to take the steps which seemed reasonably necessary at the time, as various unforeseen conditions followed in rapid succession, I am not convinced.

Now, let us apply the Senator's theory of distribution under the law of supply and demand. Given that there was a shortage of sugar, the economic problem naturally arises, is distribution of sugar to be placed upon a basis of the highest bidder, or is there to be some form of control by which, for such sugar as is available, all may purchase alike—the poor as well as the rich? As the Senator states, the law of supply and demand in sugar has been interfered with. That law, to the minds of many, is as irrefutable as the law of gravity and as sacred as the laws of Moses. On the other hand, it would appear to the ordinary mind that given a shortage in supplies, the law of supply and demand becomes beneficial to only those members of the community who have sufficient money to follow it in its upward course. Under those circumstances the law of supply and demand is a distributing agent to the rich and not to the poor. It is truly a conservation measure, but it is a conservation measure for the rich and not for the poor, for the simple reason that the poor in their suffering do without and, therefore, there is less of the commodity demanded.

If the retail price of sugar had settled at 25 cents a pound under the influence of supply and demand, it means that there would have been enough sugar at that price. That is to say, enough for those with the money to pay that price. But there are a vast number of people in this country to whom 25-cent sugar would have been just as sterile a pleasure as that portrayed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The people of America were very patient under the existence of a condition by which there was doled out to them an occasional pound or two of sugar at a reasonable price. I am not quite sure whether they would have been so patient at seeing sugar held at a price entirely beyond their own means, but which permitted the more fortunate classes to have continued to purchase at will. If the studies of the Senator on the economic problems of the French Revolution throw any light on the "psychology of the crowd" under these circumstances, I hope he will give us the benefit of his erudition.

The Senator indulges in much literary merriment in discussing the question as to how high the prices of sugar would have gone had there been no control. Practically every witness who was an expert in the sugar business gave evidence that at the time Mr. Hoover began his work there was virtually a runaway market, and that it was necessary to close the Food Exchange in New York to prevent utter demoralization. These experts were in practical agreement that if there had been no control of prices sugar would have sold at retail from 20 cents to 25 cents per pound and even much higher. The eminent Senator merrily suggests that while these experts were predicting higher prices they might have predicted that they would have been still much higher and in such wise he would detract from or even destroy the value of this testimony. To the common mind, however, it would seem that the value of testimony coming from those who have spent years in the study of supply conditions and prices are of much greater value than the prediction or prophecy that such prices would have been only slightly higher coming from one who is only a United States Senator and whose activities outside of this Chamber have been in literary pursuits. I do not believe that membership in this body equips one to become an expert in all lines of industry and competent to criticize the opinions of others as to conditions of an industry in which they have specialized and to which their lives have been devoted.

The Senator from Massachusetts would infer that the producers of sugar had not been sufficiently kept in mind, that production was not sufficiently stimulated, and he says that the beet grower was certainly not considered when the arrangement was made fixing the price of beet sugar. The eminent Senator does not point out how these producers would have received any benefit from a larger price. The beet-sugar manufacturers who possessed the major portion of our domestic supplies when the shortage came on had already contracted for their beets at fixed prices—in fact, these contracts were made in practically all cases before the beets were planted. Anything that they received over and above the normal price for sugar would have been a profit to them and not the producer. The cane sugars of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Cuba, so far as they existed, were already in the hands of the refiners and dealers, with the exception of some small and isolated parcels. The sole group of producers who might have participated in famine prices were those of Louisiana, where a comparatively small amount of sugar is produced. These producers were taken into consultation and the prices established by voluntary agreement with them were considered fair. There was no complaint from the Louisiana producers.

Mr. President, in view of what was done by the Food Administration and the manner in which it was done, with reference to so-called price fixing, it is difficult to conceive that anything resulted other than a benefit to the great mass of American consumers and without injury to the producers.

In August the manufacturers of beet sugar were brought together and voluntarily agreed to reduce the price of beet sugar below the then prevailing market, and that that lower price should not only obtain for the beet sugar then available, but for the new crop which was expected to begin coming in in October following. The beet growers were not affected, but the profits of the manufacturers were curtailed.

The refiners of cane sugar had been reaping very large profits by selling the refined granulated sugar at a price much in excess of the cost of the raw sugar and the cost of refining. The Food Administration brought these refiners together and they entered into a voluntary agreement which provided that the differential to be obtained between the cost of raw sugar and the selling price of the refined sugar should not exceed $1.30 per 100 pounds, a differential much less than that which the refiners had previously obtained.

The price which the Food Administration was willing to pay for the remnant of raw sugar in Cuba and South American countries, while more than fair from the standpoint of profit to the producers, and almost a cent a pound higher than that afterwards agreed to, reduced the price at which those sugars were being purchased, prevented the price from reaching a much higher figure, and did not ultimately reduce the supply by any appreciable quantity. The price of Hawaiian sugar was based upon the New York price of Cuban sugar, and if the price agreed upon for Cuban sugar had not been maintained, but had been permitted to be increased, necessarily the price of all sugars must have been increased in proportion. Moreover, the reduction in the price of Cuban sugar at that time was an important factor in enabling the international committee to subsequently enter into another voluntary agreement with the Cuban Government planters and dealers which insured a less price and a reasonable price for the entire new crop which it was expected would begin arriving late in December.

At this point, Mr. President, we may profitably pause to consider some other effects of the last-named voluntary agreement between the allied Governments, the Food Administration, and the Cuban Government, by which the price is determined at which the 1918 Cuban crop is to be purchased. It has been shown that the allied Governments must draw larger amounts from our West Indian supplies in 1918 than ever before, and that they were drawing in 1917 on a scale uncontemplated before the war. The proper and natural thing to do was to sit down together and determine how the sugar was to be distributed amongst the nations, that we should have no scrambling and ill feeling about its distribution. But a thing perhaps more important than this has been effected by this contract. The shipping in the world is limited. The present supplies of sugar to the United States from the West Indies are limited to from 200,000 to 250,000 tons per month. The Cuban harvest comes on more rapidly than we can find ships to carry it. There are 450,000 to 500,000 tons of sugar on the wharf in Cuba. The stocks will probably increase to 1,000,000 tons before its high peak is passed in Cuba. Had this contract not been entered into, instead of the price being 4.60 cents in Cuba for raw sugar it would probably have been 2 cents to the speculator, the Cuban mills would have been closed down, we would have been faced with labor disturbances in Cuba and the danger of total loss of the sugar for not only this year but of next year's crop. On the basis of the international contract for the purchase of the sugar it has been possible to form a syndicate of American bankers to advance a loan of $100,000,000 to carry over the sugar until delivery can be obtained throughout the year. These are business arrangements necessitated by the total dislocation of trade during the war.

The law of supply and demand does not maintain when there is a stricture in transportation. There would have been a glut in sugar and a demoralization of the producers in Cuba. There would have been a scarcity with excessive prices in the United States at the same moment.

It is difficult to see how this price fixing by the Food Administration for sugar which was to be sold by the refiner or manufacturer to the trade can meet with any objection from the Senator in view of his expressed attitude regarding the so-called Peabody prices with reference to coal. These sugar prices were fixed voluntarily by the refiners and the manufacturers; they were only maximum prices; they made a large reduction from the then prevailing prices and prevented increased prices for the future. It will be recalled that the so-called Peabody prices for coal resulted from a voluntary agreement of the operators to fix a maximum price which was below the then prevailing open price, and in considering that action the Senator from Massachusetts says:

> The arrangement * * * made a very large reduction * * *. There was no attempt to fix a minimum price or an absolute price * * * the operators could make any price they pleased (below the price named) which gave sufficient elasticity * * *. The whole scheme * * * was a wise scheme, because it interfered as little as possible with the ordinary laws of trade and yet cut off undue profits.

It can not be said that the Food Administration thus far has done any act which had a tendency to decrease production. On the other hand, the prices agreed upon for all domestic sugars and for the coming Cuban crop were all fixed by agreement with the producers interested, and therefore must have been such as would enable them to continue production. During the hearings before the subcommittee it appeared that the Food Administration was at that time dealing with the question of the price which the growers of sugar beets should obtain for their product, and it has recently been announced in the public press that the Food Administration is insisting that the beet growers of Colorado and other Rocky Mountain States shall receive not less than $10 per ton for their beets. This is more than twice the price which beet growers received a few years ago, and if this price be fixed it will undoubtedly stimulate production.

Without speculating as to what has been accomplished in the way of preventing further increases of price, we know that the price of sugar to the consumer has actually been reduced about 2 cents per pound. Every cent on the cost of sugar means $8,000,000 per month to the American people. Three months of famine prices at even an advance at retail of 10 cents per pound would have cost our consumers over $200,000,000.

In view of all the foregoing, are we not warranted in saying that if the Food Administration does no other single act it has justified itself many times over for its masterly dealings with the sugar problems?

I shall not dwell at length upon the personnel of the Food Administration. Attempts were made at the hearings to have it appear that the organization was composed of men not suited to perform the services imposed upon them. All suggestions that the sugar experts who were brought into the organization had used their positions for personal gain or had shown favoritism in their actions were completely discredited. I believe it to be firmly established by the evidence that these men performed their duties impartially, wisely, without hope of personal gain, and with an eye single to the performance of a useful and patriotic service. The Senator from Massachusetts casts no aspersions upon them, but does not refer to them in any commendatory terms. The Senator does compliment in laudatory terms the Director of the Food Administration. He refers to Mr. Hoover as one eminently fitted for the position to which he was appointed and highly commends the work of the Food Administration in dealing with all subjects except that of sugar. We are not permitted, however, to pass on with these pleasing encomiums, for the Senator reminds us that the committee only investigated the question of sugar.

Now, Mr. President, let us turn to what the Senator from Massachusetts chooses to designate "the painful annals of the coal question." At the beginning of the European war in 1914 there was an ample supply of coal in the United States at a reasonable price. As the war progressed the allied countries, as well as the neutral countries, came into the American market for the purpose of obtaining supplies of various commodities much in excess of what they had been doing theretofore. This increased demand was particularly evident in a great number of the manufacturing industries of this country. An enormous demand was made upon the plants producing basic materials as well as the various fabricating plants. Our exports of all products in 1916 reached the enormous total of $5,482,641,101, as compared with exports of $2,113,624,050 in the year 1914, an increase of $3,369,017,051. The increase of manufactured products necessarily required a corresponding increase in the production of coal. In 1914 the production of coal, including both anthracite and bituminous, was 513,525,477 tons. In 1915 this was increased to 531,619,487 tons and in 1916 further increased to 590,098,175 tons. The increased output of coal, as well as the increase of other commodities, necessitated a corresponding increase in transportation. Until the latter part of 1916 the coal operators and the transportation companies were able to meet the demand. Coal was being produced at a reasonable cost and it reached the consumer at a reasonable cost. Finally, however, in the latter part of 1916 the ever-increasing demands upon transportation in the varied lines of industry reached the point where it was practically impossible for the railroads of the country to carry forward all the traffic offered and at the same time furnish the facilities for the distribution of the ever-increasing output of coal. In the summer of 1916 resolutions were passed by the Congress directing the Federal Trade Commission to inquire into coal conditions. The first resolution related to anthracite and the second resolution to bituminous. Reports of these investigations were submitted to Congress, the last bearing date of June 20, 1917. These reports and other evidence presented to the subcommittee disclosed a most startling situation. Prices of coal in some instances had increased at least 500 per cent above the cost of production and 300 per cent or 400 per cent above the price for which the coal had previously sold. In the coal industry it is customary for the operators to contract with large industrial consumers for three-fourths and even more of the output of the mines. These contracts ordinarily are made annually and terminate on the 1st of April. Prior to the 1st of last April many industries under these contracts previously made were securing their coal at a fairly reasonable price. But the domestic consumers and the smaller industries were dependent upon what is known as "free coal," and even the larger consumers who had been increasing their plants and expanding their activities were dependent upon this free coal for their additional supply. It became apparent that the supply of free coal was inadequate to meet the pressing and urgent demands, and the railroads were unable to furnish cars in such quantities as would prevent a shortage. The distributing agencies were primarily concerned with furnishing coal to their old customers, and many of the new industries, and old industries with respect to their extensions, were unable to secure an ample supply even at the enormously increased prices.

Out of the coal trade speculation arose and dealers in coal frequently paid demurrage upon cars in order to hold the coal for higher prices. These cars of coal became footballs in the arena of speculation. The consignees were frequently changed as often as five or six times and in some instances the original consignee became the reconsignee after the cars of coal had been passed through the hands of four or five other consignees, and without the cars being removed from the same terminal. About April 1 of last year a vast number of consumers had entered into contracts for a yearly supply following the 1st of April, 1917, at these enormous prices. This was substantially the situation of the coal industry at the time the United States entered the war. It is needless to say that the entry of the United States into the war added enormously to the unfavorable conditions which already existed. It was at once evident that almost immediately an additional heavy strain would be put upon the coal and transportation industries. Something of the condition and the importance of an ample supply of coal at a reasonable price may be gathered in brief from a few of the many letters which were presented to the Senate on July 5, 1917, by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I shall only call attention to a few of these letters, but for more detail information would refer to the speech of the Ohio Senator delivered at that time. They show the enormously increased prices and the manner in which the increased cost of coal affected the price of all steel products and other commodities requiring coal in their production. They also show the enormous prices which were being demanded for what was called "free coal." One of these letters was from Cleveland, Ohio, and is as follows:

During the year 1916 and up to April 1, 1917, our company paid Zettlemeyer Coal Co. $2.15 per ton, delivered in our bins at the market house, for Youghiogheny slack from mine 299, produced by the Pittsburgh Coal Co., and that we are now paying, from the same source and to the same company, $5.45 for the same coal, and even at this price we are unable to make contracts for any period.

Another letter from Erie, Pa., is as follows:

A year ago bituminous slack was being sold at a good profit at around $1.40 a ton at the mines. Since the coal dealers arbitrarily raised the price last winter the operators have taken the cue and now have the price up around $4.50 a ton at the mine, or an advance of 250 per cent.

As you know, their actual excess cost over last year is only 25 or 30 cents a ton.

It takes a little over a ton of coke to make 1 ton of pig iron, so that pig iron legitimately went up $8 or $9 when coal went up.

It takes, for some grades of steel, a ton of coal to convert the pig into the finished product of steel, and in some cases it takes more. Therefore, bring down the price of coal to where it belongs and you will bring down the price of everything.

Another letter from a steel company is as follows:

The contract price of standard Connellsville coke at the ovens, for the period of six months or a year, ranged from $2.20 to $2.30 per ton up to November, 1916. At that time the price for spot coke began to advance rapidly, and it became increasingly difficult to contract for future deliveries at any price. It is now impossible to make any contracts for future delivery of coke, all purchases being made at spot prices for immediate delivery.

During the past week the price reached $15.50 per ton, ovens, and the last quotation on last Saturday was $13.50 per ton, ovens.

Making the largest allowances in every direction, the price of $2.30 per ton may be distributed as follows: For 1½ tons of coal at $1.20 per ton, $1.80, and for coking 50 cents per ton. As a matter of fact, 1 ton of coke should be made from 1¼ tons of standard Connellsville coal. The normal profit on this coal is about 15 cents per ton.

To produce 1 ton of pig iron requires about 1¾ tons of standard Connellsville coke, making the cost of coke without freight $2.85 per ton of pig iron.

The smelting of ferroalloys requires a still larger amount of coke per ton. For example, to smelt a ton of 20 per cent spiegel requires 1½ tons of coke, making the cost (at the $2.30 price of coke) $3.45.

At the prices now asked for coke, namely, $13.50 per ton, the cost of coke per ton of pig iron is $17.10, an increase of $14.25 per ton since last October.

On the same $13.50 basis for coke the cost to smelt a ton of spiegel is $20.25, an increase of $16.80 per ton since last October.

Some quotations of prices under date of June 18 at Cleveland are as follows:

Pocahontas lump	$6.50
Pocahontas egg	6.25
Pocahontas mine run	5.25
Kentucky lump	4.75
West Virginia splint nut and slack	4.75
Hocking Valley lump	4.75
Hocking Valley mine run	4.25
No. 8 Pittsburgh 2-inch lump	4.75
No. 8 Pittsburgh slack	4.75

Above quotations are all f. o. b. mines and subject to change without notice.

It should be borne in mind that the freight charges for carrying coal had not undergone a substantial change. The cost of producing coal had scarcely any advance as compared with the advance of prices. During the early half of the year 1917, owing to enormous prices, a large number of new mines were opened up, known in the trade as "snowbird mines." Many of these mines were attempted to be operated by those not experienced in the industry. Often coal near the surface and containing much of impurities was put upon the market. The cost of opening these mines was reported as a part of the cost of the output of the small tonnage of coal, and these operators were insistent that the small output of coal should not only pay for the development of the mine and the mining of coal but a large profit upon the expenditure as well as the investment in the coal lands. The older and efficiently operated mines were increasing their output at these greatly advanced prices, but were not willing in most cases to share the advances with those who performed the manual labor of mining the coal.

This was the situation on August 10 when the fuel law was enacted. This law gave to the President the authority to control the coal industry. Almost immediately thereafter the President, in conjunction with the Federal Trade Commission, entered upon the ascertainment of a fair maximum price for coal. The Federal Trade Commission, as well as other branches of the Government, had previously made extensive investigations as to cost of production in all the more important coal fields of the country. As a result, on August 21 the President determined tentative or provisional prices for bituminous coal covering the largest productive fields. Without reading, I wish to have printed in the RECORD the order of the President establishing these prices for bituminous coal:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The order referred to is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, 21 August, 1917.

The following scale of prices is prescribed for bituminous coal at the mine in the several coal-producing districts. It is provisional only. It is subject to reconsideration when the whole method of administering the fuel supplies of the country shall have been satisfactorily organized and put into operation. Subsequent measures will have as their object a fair and equitable control of the distribution of the supply and of the prices not only at the mines but also in the hands of the middlemen and the retailers.

The prices provisionally fixed here are fixed by my authority under the provisions of the recent act of Congress regarding administration of the food supply of the country, which also conferred upon the Executive control of the fuel supply. They are based upon the actual cost of production and are deemed to be not only fair and just but liberal as well. Under them the industry should nowhere lack stimulation.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 23, 1917.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This was the situation which existed when Mr. H. A. Garfield was appointed by the President to the position of Fuel Administrator. It was evident that many problems existed and that to solve them it would be necessary to bring into an organization men of experience, men from different branches of business activities, and also those who were familiar with the economics of the trade and of distribution. The Senator from Massachusetts would have us believe that this was not done, and in expressing himself uses some very strong language. In one connection the Fuel Administration is referred to as a "bureau largely composed of amateurs." In another place he says: "Upon this conflicting and difficult situation the untried men known as the Fuel Administration was suddenly imposed." In another connection he uses the phrase "ill-considered and violent action of the Fuel Administration."

That these characterizations are unjustified will become apparent by reference to the personnel of the Fuel Administration. Owing to the fact that these attacks upon the Fuel Administration, and especially of the director, have a most deleterious tendency, I think it wise for us to have some rather extended information regarding this chief of a most important activity of our country in these perilous times. Our patriotic citizens are not willing to put responsible trust in irresponsible hands.

I intended to ask, Mr. President, that an article which is taken from the Daily Financial America, published in New York City on February 26 of this year, be read at the desk. I shall not, however, ask that that be done, but will say that it contains a brief biography of the business experiences and record of the Director of the Fuel Administration. I think it is important that the country should have it, and I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[News article from Daily Financial America.]

BUSINESS EXPERIENCE OF GARFIELD SET FORTH—FUEL ADMINISTRATOR'S LIFELONG FRIEND DETAILS MANY ACTIVITIES IN WHICH HE WAS PROMINENT.

The business experience of Dr. Harry A. Garfield, Federal Fuel Administrator, is detailed at length by one of his lifelong friends in the following letter to a business man of this city:

"Reply to your favor of January 17 has been delayed by the press of more important matters connected with the efforts to clear up railroad congestion so as to permit of a better movement of coal.

"In your letter you inquire, first, where Mr. Garfield learned anything about the coal business, and, second, where he learned anything about any business. As a lifelong friend of Mr. Garfield, it gives me pleasure to reply to your inquiry as follows:

"Mr. Garfield was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law in the city of Cleveland in June, 1888. His extensive business acquaintance brought him a large business practice in which he was associated with the most experienced and successful business men in Cleveland.

"Replying first to your first question, his intimate knowledge of the coal business, through personal experience with that business, was acquired, as manager, with Calvary Morris, a successful and extensive coal operator, of whom doubtless you have often heard as manager of the syndicate of Cleveland business men which undertook and carried to a successful conclusion the development of large coal mines in the Piney Fork district of Ohio and connection of those operation by a railroad with a Lake Erie port. This syndicate was organized about February, 1901, and the development of its mining properties and of the railroad occupied Mr. Garfield's time and attention almost exclusively for nearly two years until a control of the completely developed properties was disposed of to the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway. For some years thereafter Mr. Garfield remained, at the request of the purchaser, a director and vice president of the mining company.

"Replying now to your second question, very shortly after the beginning of practice in Cleveland, Mr. Garfield undertook and carried to a successful consummation the construction of the Garfield Building, at that time the largest and even to-day one of the largest office buildings in Cleveland. This building was constructed and owned by a corporation, among whose stockholders are some of the most successful business men of that city. Mr. Garfield had entire charge of the building contracts, the financing of the cost of the business, and the negotiation with tenants. From its completion to the present time the building has been a great success and Mr. Garfield is still one of the directors of the owning company. The building was constructed under a long-term ground-rent lease of land owned by John D. Rockefeller, with whom Mr. Garfield personally conducted all negotiations leading to the execution of the lease.

"Contemporaneously with the construction of the Garfield Building Mr. Garfield was actively interested in the organization of the Cleveland Trust Co. This trust company has been signally successful as one of the strongest and most ably managed financial institutions of Cleveland, and Mr. Garfield was one of its directors, its vice president and counsel, as well as a member of its executive committee from the date of its organization until 1904, when he retired from practice.

"Mr. Garfield, in connection with some other Cleveland gentlemen, undertook the organization of the Conneaut Water Co., which, at that time, was financially embarrassed, reorganized and refinanced it and developed it into a very successful company, which to-day and now for many years has furnished the city of Conneaut, Ohio, with an adequate and satisfactory water supply.

"From the time he began practice, Mr. Garfield had entire charge of a large estate. This estate included improved and unimproved real estate in the city of Cleveland, interests in various Lake Michigan iron mines, in a well-known Cleveland shipbuilding company, and other business activities.

"For several years Mr. Garfield was a member of the executive committee of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, was president of the chamber in 1898, and as chairman of its building committee conducted the construction of its present building.

"From 1897 to 1908 Mr. Garfield was chairman of the national committee on the reorganization of the Consular Service of the United States. This committee, as you doubtless know from your interest in business, was made up from representatives of the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of the 12 largest American cities, and conducted a very active campaign in efforts to improve our Consular Service and place it upon a basis where it could be more useful and helpful to American business interests. To this work Mr. Garfield devoted much time and attention, including frequent visits to Washington, until the successful accomplishment of its object in 1906.

"Mr. Garfield was instrumental in organizing and was for years the most active guiding spirit in the Citizens' Association of Cleveland. This organization was formed for the purpose of improving political conditions in Cleveland, watching the conduct of the business affairs of the city, and informing the voters relative to the merits of various municipal business policies and of candidates for municipal office. It was successful in freeing the city from the control of the so-called McKisson ring.

"The foregoing are only special instances of the business activities of Mr. Garfield, which I feel will interest you as furnishing rather specific answers to your very natural desire to learn his business experience. You, of course, can appreciate that his general practice as a successful lawyer in a city like Cleveland, which has grown so rapidly during the last 30 years, must necessarily have given him very wide general business experience. After 16 years of practice, Mr. Garfield had acquired a sufficient competence to enable him to retire from practice and to accept, in 1904, an invitation to become a member of the faculty of Princeton University. A few years later he was unanimously elected president of Williams College, of which both he and his father were graduates. Among the trustees of Williams at that time were J. Edward Simmons, president of the Fourth National Bank of New York; Eugene Delano, a member of Brown Bros., bankers; and Francis Lynde Stetson, the well-known corporation lawyer, of New York City. As one of the trustees myself of Williams, I can assure you that Mr. Garfield's success as president of Williams has been as remarkable in guiding the business interests of the institution as in the conduct of its educational activities, and has given the greatest satisfaction to all the members of the board of trustees, including the gentlemen I have just mentioned above.

"As, like yourself, I was always a great admirer of Gen. Garfield, it is pleasant to furnish you this evidence that his oldest son has, in every way, sustained the reputation of an honored father. In this connection you may be interested in reading an interview with Floyd W. Parsons, of the Coal Age. Like yourself, Mr. Parsons seems at first to have had some doubt of the wisdom of Mr. Garfield's courageous action in recently suspending for five days the use of coal in order to meet the acute situation which the breakdown in a portion of our American transportation system had produced, both for us and our allies, in the present war. This interview you will find in the New York Times of Wednesday, January 23, on the first page, and entitled 'Curb on industry may be continued.' You have doubtless noticed that the Director General of Railroads has indorsed the policy advocated by Mr. Garfield and has authorized the placing of embargoes on many of the most important eastern coal-carrying roads against the acceptance of any freight other than food, fuel, and certain necessary munitions."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that account includes the qualifications of Mr. Nims?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This does not. I will state to the Senator this relates only to the director of the Fuel Administration, Dr. Garfield.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Nims seems to be the chief subordinate and the practical dictator in fixing prices. I understand his qualifications to be that he wrote a work on unfair competition, and was a classmate of Dr. Garfield's.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state, Mr. President, that the information which the Senator from Colorado has is not in accord with the question of fixing prices generally, as established before the investigating committee. The prices for bituminous coal, fixed on August 21 by order of the President, were fixed two days before Dr. Garfield was appointed, and were fixed upon information obtained by the Federal Trade Commission during several months of previous investigations. The prices for anthracite coal were fixed on August 23, the very day that Dr. Garfield was appointed Fuel Administrator. Precisely what was the connection of Mr. Nims with the transaction, I am sure I do not know.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the prices to which the Senator from New Mexico has just referred were very satisfactory, and that it was the subsequent disturbances that were not so satisfactory.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I apprehend the Senator refers to the very recent disturbances, such as were indicated in the telegrams read by the Senator from time to time.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; those which have closed about half the mines of my State.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say that the very recent orders have not been submitted to the committee and have received no consideration from the committee; and it would be impossible for me to either affirm or deny their reasonableness or anything connected with them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator correctly to say that the article from some publication which he asked to have printed as a part of his remarks gave the business experiences and qualifications of the Fuel Administrator?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I so stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not suppose that Dr. Garfield had had much business experience. Has he had?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, that is just why I have asked to have that article printed in the RECORD. There is a prevailing opinion over this country that Dr. Garfield is a mere college professor. I wish to state in this brief way that he only became a college professor after a long and honorable career as a lawyer and as a business man, and after he had made enough money so that he could afford to be a college professor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, his being a lawyer would not necessarily lead us to the conclusion that he knew much about business; but that may be so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I certainly, and with great pleasure, invite the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the information which he will obtain from reading the article when it is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be very glad to read it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure the Senator will, and I have no doubt that he, along with many others, will be much enlightened by reading that article.

It is true that the information just furnished—I refer to the article taken from Financial America—comes from a letter written by a lifelong friend of Mr. Garfield. The facts stated in this letter can not be disputed, and that they should come from a lifelong friend adds to their value.

It would be difficult to suggest better qualifications for a Fuel Administrator than those possessed by Mr. Garfield. Here is a man of large general business experience and special experience in the coal industry, a splendid organizer, and no direct interest, in a large way, either as a producer or consumer. The Senator from Massachusetts designates a large producer of coal as one eminently fitted to deal with all the problems which have confronted the Fuel Administrator. Such a suggestion as applied to other war activities has encountered most violent criticism from many Senators upon this floor. The report in this case establishes that if such were done it would have met with violent opposition. I quote from the testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. What do you think, Mr. Thorne, of the proposition of men fixing prices on the thing which they themselves either produce or consume in large quantities?

Mr. THORNE. It is absurd, unjust, unreasonable, contrary to the whole spirit of American and English jurisprudence. I do not like to accuse these people of being dishonest or crooked, but Judge Cowan gave me a very apt illustration of the point involved there. He said, "You might just as well put a nigger in a watermelon patch and tell him, 'Now, don't you steal no mellons'; the temptation would be too great."

Of course, it is eminently proper that the responsible chief of such an important bureau should surround himself with able advisors possessing expert knowledge with respect to the different lines of activity. The Fuel Administrator has adopted this plan.

I have here a short statement regarding each one of the chiefs of divisions and those occupying responsible positions in the Fuel Administration, which I ask to insert in the RECORD without reading. There are about a dozen of them referred to, and it is shown that they are experts in the various lines in which they are to deal in connection with the Fuel Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

R. S. Neely, business manager of the United States Fuel Administration, was taken by Mr. Garfield from the position of assistant manager of the Ford Motor Co., Long Island City. Including this connection he has had about 20 years of experience in office and sales management, this service having been with the Michigan Sugar Co., the National Cash Register Co., the Michigan State Prison, in the capacity of chief clerk of that institution, and the Gleaner Farmer's organization of Michigan as field organizer.

S. A. Taylor, formerly dean of the mining school of the University of Pittsburgh, was, prior to his appointment in the United States Fuel Administration, a consulting mining engineer in Pittsburgh. He has been in the mining business for about 44 years.

John P. White, labor representative of the United States Fuel Administration, was president of the United Mine Workers of America for several years. He has worked in mines ever since he was a lad of 10 years. He resigned from the presidency of the United Mine Workers of America to take his present position. He is handling all labor matters for the United States Fuel Administration.

Rembrandt Peale, formerly of the firm of Peale, Peacock & Kerr, has been in the coal business as an operator in the central Pennsylvania bituminous fields, in Clearfield County, for about 30 years. He is at present operators' representative with the United States Fuel Administration.

James B. Neale, coal operator in the anthracite and soft coal fields of Pennsylvania, with the firm of Thorn, Neale & Co., is now anthracite adviser to Mr. Garfield.

F. M. Whitaker, director of inland transportation, representing the Director General of Railways, attached to the Fuel Administration, was born in Clermont County, Ohio, September 9, 1867. He entered the services of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway at Cincinnati in 1883, and went with the Kanawha Dispatch fast-freight line two years later as telegraph operator and clerk. He was successively rate clerk, chief clerk, acting manager, and manager of the Kanawha Dispatch. He was appointed assistant freight traffic manager of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway at Cincinnati in 1896, then freight traffic manager, vice president and traffic manager, and since 1910 has been vice president in charge of traffic, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. Mr. Whitaker is also vice president in charge of traffic for the Hocking Valley Railway, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway of Indiana, and the Chesapeake & Ohio Northern Railway.

G. N. Snider, transportation adviser to the United States Fuel Administrator and head of the Fuel Administration's transportation division since November 1, 1917, was born in Spring Valley, N. Y.; educated in the Nyack (N. Y.) High School and the New York University School of Law, being admitted to the bar in New York in 1906. He entered the employ of the West Shore Railroad in its general freight department in December, 1899. In February, 1902, he was transferred to the coal traffic department of the New York Central Lines, East, becoming chief clerk in the same department in 1907, assistant coal traffic manager in 1911, and coal traffic manager in 1917, which office he now holds. In June, July, and August, 1917, he assisted Mr. Rembrandt Peale in the organization and operation of the Tidewater Coal Exchange for the bituminous coal shippers and the eastern railroads moving that coal to tidewater.

W. S. Blauvelt, adviser to Mr. Garfield on coke, has spent about 20 years with the Solvay Process Co., of Detroit, Mich., and the Semet-Solvay Co. of that city in the handling of coal and producing of by-products in manufacture of coke. He was with these interests from 1898 until 1916. Since that time he has been a consulting engineer along these lines. He was also at one time president of the Michigan Gas Association.

J. D. A. Morrow, in charge of apportionment and distribution in the United States Fuel Administration, was formerly assistant secretary of the Federal Trade Commission for about a year when Mr. Hurley was chairman of that commission; was commissioner of the Pittsburgh Coal Producers' Association for about one year, and later general secretary of the National Coal Association since its organization, with headquarters in this city.

S. L. Yerkes, assistant to Mr. Morrow and in charge of southern fields, was graduated at Center University, Danville, Ky.; was fuel agent of the Queen & Crescent Lines and the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway for a number of years, and has had practical knowledge of coal operation, sales, and distribution for the past 15 years.

G. C. Foedisch, in charge of bunker and export coal and Shipping Board requirements for the United States Fued Administration, was for 15 years connected with the firm of Whitney & Kemmerer, Stephen Girard Building, Philadelphia, in charge of bituminous coal sales.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In addition to these experts in charge of various divisions of the work the director was given the right under the law to bring to his assistance, and has brought to his assistance, the Federal Trade Commission, with its great organization. Moreover, the director has had the cooperation and counsel of experts in the various departments of the Government with which the Fuel Administration must necessarily deal, and also of Mr. F. S. Peabody, who is connected with the Bureau of Mines in the Interior Department and who has been so highly and properly complimented by the Senator from Massachusetts. With such an organization composed of such men and of numerous other experts in coal and transportation, and with such assistance and counsel from other departments the country should feel convinced that this very important function of the Government reposes in experienced, skillful experts and competent men.

Now, Mr. President, we have before us the situation on the 23d of August and the forces which were assembled to deal with it. At this time the production of coal was only about 68 per cent of the capacity of the mines. Production had reached its lowest level for the year and the largest contributing cause was the justifiable dissatisfaction of the miners. Cost of living in general had made accentuated advances. The coal operators were reaping enormous and extortionate profits and were not willing that the miners should obtain a reasonable or even modest share of the golden harvest of dollars which the operators were reaping. Of course what has just been said does not apply to all of the operators, but it does apply to a very large number, and by reason of those conditions the output of coal was not only not being increased but enormously decreased. To this situation the Fuel Administrator first directed his attention. Operators and mine workers were brought together. Our dependence upon coal for the prosecution of the war was explained. It was firmly insisted that in the present crisis there should be neither union nor nonunion; that for the period of the war all controversy between operators and mine workers must cease. The appeal was heeded, and production steadily rose until winter set in, in spite of the fact that, as some thought, Government had laid a blighting hand on legitimate profits.

The Senator from Massachusetts reviews the coal situation as he sees it and says:

The Fuel Administration entered and proceeded to fix a price which made it impossible to work many mines.

I refer, I will state to the Senator from Colorado, to the condition as it appeared before the subcommittee appointed for the investigation.

The Senator from Massachusetts also refers to this as "reckless price fixing," and as an undertaking to "fix an abnormally low price for coal." Again he says:

Even if we admit that they kept prices down, which is purely guesswork, they brought a coal famine with its nominal fixed price.

These assertions may properly be classed as "important, if true."

The subcommittee did not take testimony as to prices to domestic consumers in many sections of the country, but it is obvious that if they were not materially lowered it was because of one or both of two factors. In many cases the wholesale and retail dealers were demanding exorbitant profits. Doubtless, however, the cause which contributed most to maintaining high prices was the fact that these dealers had contracted for their coal at the very high prices which prevailed last April. The wise decision of the President and the Fuel Administrator not to interfere with existing contracts illustrates the just and equitable policy of this administration to interfere only when clearly necessary with business pursuits. That the wholesale price of coal not under contract at the mine was cut at least in half there can be no doubt.

Nor can it be said, generally speaking, that the price of coal as fixed by the President was "abnormally low." As heretofore stated, these prices were fixed by the President upon information as to cost obtained after several months' investigation by the Federal Trade Commission and by other departments of the Government. It appeared in evidence that under these prices there were reaped profits which prior to the war would have been dreamed of only by the most avaricious. One very intelligent witness, Mr. Thorne, who was referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts in complimentary terms and as a man speaking from actual knowledge, appeared before the committee, gave detailed information, and insisted, and I believe established, that in many sections of the country the prices fixed were abnormally high. It was stated in the order of the President that the prices fixed were only provisional and subject to change. This invited coal operators to produce their cost sheets and present evidence as to the reasonableness of the prices. And, strange as it may seem, at the time of the hearing, out of all the coal fields only 80 individuals or groups of operators had appeared claiming that the prices in their cases were too low. After investigation of 40 of these complaints, and upon the ex parte showing of the operators themselves, it was found that in almost every case only slight increases were justified. These 40 complaints in which adjustments had been made at the time of the hearing involved not more than 3½ per cent of the value on the basis of the President's prices of the total coal output, and the increases allowed out of an estimated value of the total production of $888,000,000 did not exceed $30,000,000. These few operators who were permitted these advances in price were operating mines in districts, or particular parts of districts, in which the conditions affecting the cost of mining were more difficult than in the States as a whole. Doubtless many of these mines could not have been operated at all in normal times and under normal competitive conditions so as to show any profit upon their operation.

Nor can it be said that these prices so fixed decreased production. Notwithstanding labor troubles, car shortage, and unusual weather conditions the output of coal during the year as compared with 1916, the largest year of production previously recorded, increased for bituminous coal over 42,000,000 tons and for anthracite coal over 12,000,000 tons, making a total increased production of over 54,000,000 tons.

Notwithstanding the extraordinary labor troubles which reached the maximum in August, the increase for the months of September, October, and November, as compared with the same months of the year 1916, for both kinds of coal amounted to nearly 10,000,000 tons, about two-thirds of which was bituminous coal, but in December there was a shortage of nearly 2,000,000 tons, due to the extreme weather and car shortage. The modern coal car carries on an average about 50 tons of coal. If this total increase were put into one solid train that train would be over 8,000 miles in length and would make two solid trains from Washington to Berlin. Several witnesses testified that they had not heard of a single mine which had closed down on account of the President's order fixing prices, and I challenge the Senator to point to a single instance found in this record where there were idle miners and idle mines and idle cars.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that statement is true, and it seems to me to be one of the strongest possible arguments against interfering with the prices established by the President. If the mines had been permitted to operate under them I have no doubt the increase of output would have been kept up during the entire war.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am quite sure that there are views which to my mind have not made a sufficient impression upon many Senators. I have not been able to attend the sessions of this body all the time during the discussion of the Agricultural appropriation bill, but I heard statements made in the discussion of that bill which to my mind not only did not convey a right impression as to the operation of the economic laws but which, if fully understood and keenly realized, would cause different action on the part of many Members of this body. The principle announced I stated a short time ago in connection with the workings of the law of supply and demand with regard to sugar. If you once admit that there is a shortage of the commodity, that the demand can not be supplied, no matter for what cause, then the law of supply and demand becomes merely a distributing agent for those with the money with which to pay the price; and to depend upon the law of supply and demand to act as a distributing agent of coal in a time when there is an actual shortage of coal will mean that the rich should keep warm and the poor should freeze. I submit that no Member of this body would wish such a result to be brought about.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on the contrary, I fully concur with the sentiments of the Senator; and his position only serves to strengthen my conviction that there should have been no interference with the prices fixed by the President and upon which business had adjusted itself, because, as the Senator has already said, the increase in production was visible at the time that order went into effect, and there was therefore a plentiful supply of coal, subject only to distribution. Now, if the prices are fixed so low that the average mine must close because the price which the Fuel Administration permits the owner to get for the product is less than the cost of production, there is a shortage, and in consequence of that shortage the law of demand and supply would operate by an increase of the price; and as a consequence the commodity, to the extent to which it has been produced, will be available only to the rich, and the poor will be obliged either to go without it or help themselves in ways which the law does not recognize.

A Senator said here a few days ago that some coal at $3 was a great deal cheaper than no coal at $2—a sentiment in which I heartily concur. If the orders which have succeeded those of the President result as they have, at least temporarily resulted in Colorado, the increase of production will not only be arrested but the scale will go in the other direction. Hence, I think that the law of economics which the Senator announces is a sound one in time of war, but it emphasizes the importance of noninterference with an established statutory price, or a price fixed by Executive order, which is found to be a working price.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am very glad to find out that I misapprehend the position of the Senator from Colorado. But the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] strongly contended that there should have been no price fixing, and that the price fixing which was indulged in was an abnormally low price and was the cause of a famine in coal, and because I heard so many remarks in this Chamber recently about letting the sacred law of supply and demand have full sway I was misled by the remarks made by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I must plead guilty to great sympathy with the general view that the attempt to regulate prices by law is bound to prove a failure. I am satisfied that in times of war, if the necessities of life are supervised by Government agency and a price commensurate with the prices of everything entering into production is kept in view, it may be well to fix a maximum price beyond which profiteers can not go. Even then, however, I believe that experience will demonstrate that the only way in which prices can be kept down to a level within the reach of all is the way which England has pursued; that is, by the Government acquisition of large supplies of the necessaries of life and their distribution at times when price levels rise too high in the market. Of course that carries with it a loss to the Government, unquestionably, and that loss must be met by taxation, but I shall be very agreeably surprised if ultimately we shall not be compelled to regulate prices in that way before the war is over.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Colorado are most interesting, and I agree with him that except for the war I should not be in favor of interfering at all with the operation of the law of supply and demand, because then we would be dealing with steadily increasing or decreasing markets, and steadily increasing or decreasing supplies. Whether or not some other course should be pursued by the Government will always remain a question in the minds of many. There is no doubt that the working out of these problems in an unusual way and under unusual conditions must carry with it some elements that will not meet with general satisfaction. The question as to the fixing of a maximum price involves a good many questions. How high shall the maximum price be? Shall it be large enough so that the inefficient mines may operate? Shall it be large enough so that inexperienced men may invest their capital in a new enterprise? Or shall you put it low enough so that only the efficiently operated mines may continue? And during the time when there is a shortage of cars, should those cars go to the inefficiently operated mines, or should they go to the others, and perform the highest service?

These are all practical problems, and should be dealt with in a practical way by practical men; and this suggestion will lead to the conclusion which I shall make at the close of my remarks. Beginning with the 16th of June last the Geological Survey has tabulated by weeks the capacity of the coal mines of the country, the output, and the causes of failure to produce at the maximum capacity of the mines. These tabulations I have obtained and ask to have them inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, consent is granted.

[1] Difficult to calculate because of irregular observance of Labor Day.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From this table we get the information as to the total tonnage produced and the average per working day, the per cent of full-time output, and the per cent of total loss from all causes. The causes given are "Car shortage" in one column, "Labor shortage and strikes" in another column, and "Mine disability," "All other causes," and "No cause given" in other columns. Of course the most potent causes of loss arise from car shortage, labor shortage, and mine disability, none of which involve the price of coal. In the column headed "All other causes," up to the week ending January 12, 1918, we find that "all other causes" vary from one-tenth to nine-tenths of 1 per cent. When it is considered that this column includes loss on account of weather conditions and other causes, it is demonstrated that there could have been no substantial decrease in production on account of price fixing. Even this table does not fully indicate the severity and effect of the car shortage as it affected the congested northeastern section of the country. This section includes the highly industrialized Northern Atlantic Coast States and New England. Owing to the deficiency in shipping, these States were largely dependent upon all-rail coal. This coal originated principally along the lines of the Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio railroads. I have obtained information from these railroads regarding the percentage of loss in coal production, by weeks, on each of these roads, owing to car shortage, beginning with the week of December 8 and terminating with the week of February 23, and I request that this table may be printed without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Percentage of bituminous coal production lost on the Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad lines due to car shortage, by weeks, beginning with week ending Dec. 8, 1917.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Under the prices fixed by the President, as readjusted by the Fuel Administration, there was a steady increase in production each month over the corresponding month of the previous year until December, with its unprecedented weather conditions, was reached. But there was an arbitrary limit on the output of bituminous coal, over which the Fuel Administration had no control, and which up to January of this year was not under the direct control of the Government. This limit was established by transportation conditions. Senator LODGE says that "the mines could not work to capacity because they could not get cars." The Fuel Administration was absolutely without authority over the railroads. All of its efforts to increase production were dependent upon the ability of the mines of the country to secure an adequate and continued supply of cars. So far as bituminous coal is concerned, that car supply has not been available at any time since the Fuel Administration was organized. The factors of labor supply and price inducement were comparatively negligible in controlling the output of bituminous coal, because at no time has either of these factors been allowed to operate without the limitation imposed by a shortage of cars.

The economic pressure that might have been brought to bear by an industry driven to extreme under the pressure of an enormous demand, a short supply, and soaring prices, to secure transportation service that would have allowed an increase in the output could have been no stronger than the economic pressure brought to bear by the unprecedented demand for coal at the price fixed by the Government and the willingness of the operators to furnish it. No matter how high the price might have gone through the unrestricted law of supply and demand, the limit on the output of bituminous coal must still have been reached when the limit of transportation service was reached. It is futile to speculate as to what steps might have been taken by the railroads to meet the demand provided coal prices had been allowed to soar to $10, $20, or $30 per ton at the mouth of the mine. No amount of competitive economic pressure could have overcome the hard physical fact confronting the railroads of the country that their facilities were not adequate to care for the enormous increase in war traffic which was suddenly thrust upon them.

The Senator says:

> If we had let alone the system of distribution so long established, we should have been saved from the chaos and confusion into which we were thrown by the Fuel Administration.

The Fuel Administration, soon after its organization, saw that conditions in the coal industry would make it impossible for it to undertake to establish a new scheme or system of distribution during the winter of 1917–18. In a statement submitted to the committee, Fuel Administrator Garfield made it clear that by far the greater part of the 1917–18 coal production moved along normal lines through normal channels from the mines to the ultimate consumer. He said:

The coal year of 1917 was well under way before the Fuel Administration was created. The distribution of the coal output, which was largely under contract for delivery during the year, had already been arranged upon a peace-time basis. It was necessary that this peace-time basis be adjusted to meet the war demands. But it was quite as necessary that no action should be taken which would throw the entire fuel situation into chaos.

I quote:

President Wilson, in announcing his original prices for bituminous coal, recognized this situation, and said there would be no immediate wholesale interference with contracts already made.

Prices were at their highest when most of these contracts were made, and up to date there has been but a small proportion of the coal output available for distribution outside of these contracts. Many contracts, of course, have run out, but a large majority of the coal mined is still sold under contracts running until April 1, 1918.

The activities of the Fuel Administration from the very beginning have been directed toward supplying the extraordinary war demand for coal on the part of the Government itself and those branches of industry which the Government has called into war service. With the entire coal output inadequate to supply all the demands of the country, it has been necessary, of course, to make readjustments to supply the war demand. Upward of 10,000,000 tons of coal have been furnished to the Army, Navy, and other Government departments. Other millions of tons were essential to supply the increased and new demands of industries directly engaged in production for war purposes. In large measure these requirements have been met. Had these industries been left to the tender mercies of the relentless law of supply and demand and the usual avenues for distribution there would have indeed been chaos and confusion. The coal would have gone to the highest bidder, without any consideration of the necessities of the war. Any industry willing to pay the price would have obtained coal, regardless of the uses to which it might be put. The limited supply of coal for domestic consumption would have warmed the rich and left the poor to suffer and freeze. The truth is that the distributing machinery, to which the Senator refers in such laudatory terms, was wholly inadequate to meet the conditions which confronted the country. Substantial evidence that this machinery had "fallen down" lies in the fact that not until the late summer was any provision made for supplying coal to the Northwestern States. Had it not been for heroic interference with the workings of this distributing machinery a reasonable supply of coal for that section of the country, which must be furnished during the season of navigation, would have failed; and I apprehend that at such action no one would have been more ready to criticize the administration than the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that some of the—as I was about to characterize them—foolish priority orders had something to do with the breaking down of transportation, to use the Senator's expression?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am just about ready to discuss that question.

Mr. KING. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think I shall explain something which has doubtless confused the Senator from Utah as well as many other Senators.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, however, before proceeding with that, I shall not press for an answer now. My observation of the results of the Fuel Administration's orders has been this—and the information which I have received confirms my own observation—that instead of stimulating production the orders of the Fuel Administration have acted as a sort of a wet blanket upon production. They have closed down, in a number of places, mines that were in operation; and it looks to me as though the Fuel Administrator had tried to place all coal operators upon a Procrustean bed and to draw out and cut off to suit the limits of that bed, forgetting that in some sections you have to mine at a great depth and the cost of coal production is very much greater than in other coal mines in near-by sections; that instead of taking into account the difference in the cost of production, instead of taking into account the different industrial situations, there has been an effort to reduce all mines to a dead level and to secure the utmost uniformity in prices. Does not the Senator think that that has been the cause of chaos and confusion and has resulted in closing down mines and in preventing the output which otherwise would have gone into the market to satisfy the demands of the public?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Utah has not heard my entire discussion.

Mr. KING. I regret very much that I was unable to do so. I was in a committee meeting.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The question which the Senator asks is, of course, a most interesting and important one; and I think I have made it perfectly plain in previous discussion that under the prices which were fixed by the President no mines were closed down because of the price.

A few of the operators made application to have the prices increased so far as they applied especially to them, and in every instance the price was increased; but it was also found that the reason why any increases were granted was because the particular operators were laboring under special difficulties, and that, as a whole, the prices were not only high enough but in many cases they were abnormally high.

The question recurs, and will always be a very practical question, as to where your maximum price shall be and how far inefficiency shall be allowed to control the question of price; and the suggestion which I have to offer is that these things must be dealt with according to the facts in the particular case. I agree that no one blanket order, fixing an absolute price, is equitable or justified, and the prices fixed by the President were not absolute. They were merely maximum prices, beyond which the operators should not charge.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I agree with him in his statement that some of the prices were abnormally high. I think in many instances the Fuel Administration has been too generous and has fixed a maximum limit that allowed too great a profit and bore too heavily upon the consuming public. I agree with him, further, that each particular case ought to stand on its own merits and be judged according to the facts in that case. But I was under the impression, from my observation and from information which I daily receive, that the Fuel Administration has too often attempted to establish a uniform price, and that now the plan is to divide the country off into zones and to fix a certain price for a certain zone, forgetting that in those zones—and many of those zones will be very large in territorial area—conditions are divergent, and what would be a fair price for A would be a very unfair price for B.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have expressed my views upon those matters. I am sorry the Senator was not here. I have consumed much more time than I expected, and I believe I will ask the indulgence of the Senator that I may proceed.

Mr. KING. I will read with great pleasure what the Senator has said on that point.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I hope, at the same time, the Senator will gain some information along that line.

Substantial evidence that this machinery had "fallen down" lies in the fact that not until the late summer was any provision made for supplying coal to the Northwestern States. Had it not been for heroic interference with the workings of this distributing machinery a reasonable supply of coal for that section of the country, which must be furnished during the season of navigation, would have failed; and I apprehend that at such action no one would have been more ready to criticize the administration than the Senator from Massachusetts.

Such action would not have been necessary provided there had been ample transportation. Had transportation been unlimited, I think there can be no doubt but what the ordinary machinery for distribution would have expanded and met all demands. I have no doubt that the mines in operation would have increased their output so as to furnish an ample supply for everybody.

It is my belief that the question as to the causes of a shortage of coal and the high prices can be answered with one word—transportation.

The subcommittee did not enter upon an investigation of the transportation problem. Only a few isolated facts appear in the testimony, and I shall not attempt to discuss in extenso this most troublesome question. It is easy enough, with a partial and restricted view, to find fault, whereas upon the more comprehensive view a different conclusion might be reached.

Priority orders are referred to with much emphasis as a great impediment to transportation, and it is insisted that they should have been left in the hands of the priority board. This statement, made by the Senator from Massachusetts in connection with the discussion of the Fuel Administration, has a tendency to create a wrong impression and was probably made by the Senator owing to a confusion in his mind as to the facts. In order to clarify this question, it has been necessary to go outside the record, and upon such investigation as I have been able to make I reach the conclusion that the function and source of these orders have been misunderstood.

There are three methods of action, all of which are loosely called priorities, and all of which seem to have been discussed by him without distinguishing among them. Of the three forms of priorities about to be described only one—that first to be discussed—has in any way a relation to transportation or can in any way affect the transportation situation.

(1) PRIORITY OF MOVEMENT UPON RAILROADS.

By a rider to the naval appropriation bill of August 29, 1916, the interstate commerce law was amended to the effect that in time of war precedence should, upon the demand of the President of the United States, be given over all other traffic for the transportation of troops and material of war. There is no claim that the President ever made any demand of this sort. After the beginning of war in April, 1917, various representatives of the Government, chiefly from the War and Navy Departments and Shipping Board, requested of various railroads that preference or priority should be given for the transportation of commodities needed in the activities of those departments. While apparently in the absence of a demand by the President the railroads were not compelled to grant these requests, they not unnaturally wished to do so, feeling that to carry out the requests was a patriotic duty. The railroad war board, a voluntary committee of five railroad presidents, had been selected by the representatives of many railroads to coordinate and supervise the operation of the railroads in an effort to make the general railroad transportation system of greater use in war emergency. As a part of the organization of this board the car-service commission was intrusted with the duty and power of assigning freight cars for the transportation of commodities in special instances. The system of so-called "blue tags" was put into effect under authority of the war board. In carrying out this system blue tags or envelopes were given by the railroads to representatives of different Government departments upon the understanding that cars containing shipments of commodities for Government purposes which the representatives of the Government desired to have preferred in movement over the railroads to ordinary freight should be marked with the blue tags so as to insure such priority of movement. After this system had been in effect for some time it was found that the blue tags were being used excessively, and at least in some cases were being passed along to people holding contracts with the Government, so that these latter people could blue tag their shipments. This excessive use of the blue tags undoubtedly contributed to a considerable extent, and perhaps to a very great extent, to the subsequent congestion of traffic upon the railroads.

By an act of Congress approved August 10, 1917—Public, No. 39, Sixty-fifth Congress—the President was authorized, through such persons as he might designate, to direct that such traffic or shipments as in his judgment were essential to the national defense should have preference or priority in transportation by any common carrier. The President designated for this purpose Judge Robert S. Lovett, president of the Union Pacific Railroad. Judge Lovett issued very few orders of the sort contemplated by the act. One order issued by him was the so-called lake priority order, giving preference or priority in the shipment of coal to lake ports for transshipment thence by water to the Northwest. The shipments affected by this order were all from points west of Pittsburgh, and did not contribute to the bad congestion which developed on the railroad lines terminating in Atlantic ports.

(2) PRIORITY ORDERS OF THE PRIORITIES COMMITTEE OF THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE.

This committee neither claimed nor exercised any jurisdiction over orders for preference or priority in movement. The committee had no statutory powers and could accomplish whatever it did accomplish only by the patriotic response of manufacturers and others to its requests and recommendations. These recommendations related chiefly to the preference in furnishing raw materials or necessary finished products to such manufacturers and contractors as were working upon the production of commodities needed by the Government. This committee issued a large number of such recommendations and requests, but they had no appreciable bearing upon the transportation situation, as they did not carry any right to priority of movement. If any of them were accompanied with a preference in movement it was through the independent issue of blue-tag priorities by or under authority of the Railroad War Board.

(3) SO-CALLED PRIORITY ORDERS ISSUED BY THE FUEL ADMINISTRATION.

An order of this kind is merely an order for a coal producer or mine operator to ship coal to some public utility, a Government department, or some industry engaged in work deemed essential to the conduct of the war or to supply a shortage of coal needed for domestic uses. These orders had and could have no effect upon the transportation situation. Such an order merely directed the mine to ship its coal, or a certain quantity of coal, to A instead of B. It made no difference to the railroad whether the coal was going to A or to B, and the order carried no preference of movement respecting the shipment after the cars left the mine. The cars were taken by the railroad and handled by it as would be any other cars.

Of such orders a total of only 394 were issued. Of these 394, 117 were for an important steel plant, an important powder company, and for the shipment of coal to the city of Washington for Government requirements. Besides these orders, strictly so-called, the Fuel Administration made a great many requests to coal producers to ship coal to designated consumers, and such requests were usually granted by the producers. Like shipments on the orders, these requests in no way affected the railroad situation. Compliance therewith by a coal producer meant merely, as in the case of an order to ship, that his coal was consigned to one concern instead of to some other concern.

Occasionally, though rarely, the Fuel Administration did request the commission on car service to supply to a particular mine coal cars to enable such mine to comply more promptly with a request or an order from the Fuel Administration to ship coal to a designated consumer. These requests for assigned cars, however, did not carry with them any preference or priority in the movement of cars upon the railroads, nor did they affect or contribute to the congestion upon the railroads. The total number of cars thus assigned over the entire United States upon requests from the Fuel Administration totaled only 576 cars per day. It appears, however, that the car service commission arranged without requests from the Fuel Administration for the assignment of an additional number of coal cars in certain cases, totaling 1,134 cars per day. These cars, like those assigned on request of the Fuel Administration, were not entitled to preference in movement and therefore played no part in producing railroad congestion.

The figures above relative to assigned cars do not include the order issued early in January for the shipment of 500 cars of bituminous coal daily to New England, for which the Director General of Railroads ordered cars to be assigned. However, no one has yet strenuously objected to that particular order.

It thus appears that the responsibility for any confusion or congestion in transportation arising from priority orders rested and should have rested upon the railroad war board, because of its first authorizing and then continuing the use of the so-called "blue tags." This board consisted of five railroad executives designated by the officials of the various railroads, and I have not been able to ascertain that they made any effort to curtail the use of such orders. Had they been convinced that orders should not be issued, it would have been easy to secure their cancellation. Doubtless a simple request of three Government officials—the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and the chairman of the Shipping Board—would have secured the desired results. I am not advised as to why such requests were not made. I would not have it inferred that I am convinced that such requests should have been made or that the issuance of such orders should have been discontinued. There may have been ample and cogent reasons why the railroad war board permitted matters to go on as they did. Without knowing all the conditions, circumstances, and factors entering into the very complex problem of transportation and without the full point of view and expert knowledge of those in authority, judgment and criticism should be withheld. And in this connection I desire to express my disapproval of all attempts, here or elsewhere, by means of partial investigation, with limited information and with restricted view, to cast aspersions and adversely criticize those upon whom responsibility is imposed and who are endeavoring to do their utmost to serve the country in this hour of peril.

It is suggested by the Senator that the fundamental trouble of the railroad situation arose from the fact that when the war broke out the railroads were 10 years behind the requirements of peaceful times; that bad results had followed the manner in which freight rates had been dealt with during a considerable period of years, and it would seem therefrom responsibility for the railroad situation is intended to be put upon the Interstate Commerce Commission; and it is sought now to blame the Government because it did not address itself solely to the railroad problem. What should have been done by the Government was not pointed out. That a mere raise in freight rates would not have met the difficulties which afterwards developed must be apparent. Inasmuch as the Senator has not criticized the taking over by the Government of the operation of the railroads it is inferred that this action should have been taken immediately after the declaration of war. To have done this would have been to follow the example set by England. On the very day that England made a declaration of war that Government assumed complete control of the railroads. I submit, however, that if any such immediate action had been taken by our Government it would have been impossible, in view of the expressed belief of the Senator from Massachusetts, that ordinary business should be interfered with as little as possible, to have convinced him of its necessity. In fact, it is intimated that Government control has been a failure. The Senator states that the real car difficulty existed six months ago, and then says:

Between last summer and the present moment a Director General with the largest powers has been appointed to take charge of the railroads of the country, and yet here is the condition on the first of this month.

The Director General was not appointed until January 29, and the first of the month referred to was the 1st of February following. That there was a sinister purpose in using the indefinite language "between last summer and the present moment" a Director General has been appointed, I will not assert, but the casual reader would doubtless receive the impression that the railroads of the country had been completely under Government control for a period of about six months and that the Director General had been tried and found wanting. To use the language "between last summer and the present moment" for the purpose of fixing the date, January 29, is unusual and decidedly novel.

Let us now consider briefly the order issued by the Fuel Administration on January 17. This is referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts as the "reckless order closing down factories and industries of all sorts for five days." To the mind of the Senator there was no excuse or reason for the issuance of this order, and it is simply characterized by the word "reckless." The committee did not make an investigation as to the causes which lead to the issuance of this order further than to listen to a short and necessarily incomplete statement by the Director of the Fuel Administration. In the absence of such thorough investigation it would seem to be commendable to withhold criticism. That there were weighty reasons for the order we should assume. That some good came from it all must agree. The event has passed, and only a brief review of some of the causes and some of the results will be undertaken. A short view can be obtained in an excerpt from a speech delivered by the Director before the Williams Alumni Association of the New York branch on February 16, 1918. From that address I quote the following:

Beginning with December 8, winter laid its grip upon the land, and by the middle of January had virtually paralyzed our transportation system, but winter was not entirely responsible, perhaps not even chiefly responsible. Week by week during the latter part of the year, the records showed a menacing increase in production of war material. By our very strength as a great manufacturing Nation we were fast breaking down the transportation system on land and preventing its development at sea. We had orders for more material than we could hope to carry away. The condition will be best understood when we reflect upon the fact that our foreign commerce had increased since 1913 from two billions to nine billions of dollars. The commodities represented by this enormous increase had to be carried on the railroads and then on the ships. Five thousand additional locomotives annually would hardly have met the normal requirements. But during each of the past two years we had actually placed on our rails little more than one-half the required number, while in 1915 only 1,251 were received. The rest we sent to France and to Russia. Is it any wonder that loaded cars stood on the tracks for weeks and even months? From week to week the congestion increased. Nearly one-half of the thousands of cars thus clogging the railroads were laden with coal. This coal failed to reach destination, and empty cars failed to return to the mines.

At this point Mr. THOMAS raised the question of a quorum and the roll was called.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I shall not require a very much greater length of time to conclude the remarks which I had planned to submit. At the time the suggestion of the absence of a quorum was made I was reading an excerpt from an address of the Fuel Director regarding the celebrated order of January 17, which gives some views as to why the order was issued and what was accomplished by it. I proceed with the reading. I am sorry that all Senators now present could not have heard the first part of it:

One must keep constantly in mind the fact that the production of coal is a transportation proposition. The immediate effect of this railroad congestion was to deprive people of coal necessary to prevent them from freezing and to keep from the ships carrying our base of supplies abroad the coal necessary for their bunkers. It needs no argument to demonstrate the necessity of keeping people from freezing and of furnishing coal for ships if the war is to be successfully prosecuted. Week by week the number of vessels waiting for bunker coal in our harbors was increasing until by the middle of January the total was appallingly large, especially so when one reflects upon the necessity of an immediate and constant contact between armies in the field and the base of supplies. As a result of the closing order of January 17, 480 ships carrying over 2,000,000 tons of food, fuel, munitions, and other war supplies were bunkered and sent from our ports. This is the record from January 17 to 29, inclusive. Forty of those vessels carried food; 71 carried coal, oil, and gasoline; 369 were laden with munitions and other war supplies. Within a week after the order of January 17 went into effect, all ships ready to sail were bunkered. A normal number only remained at anchor, and the flow of supplies vital to our armies had been reestablished. Important as these facts are in themselves, they are cited merely to bring vividly before you the nature of the economic crisis which was upon us by the middle of January.

That you may have the whole picture let me approach the situation from another angle. Almost without exception the manufacture of war material was at its highest point about the 1st of December. To cite a few only of the most important articles, shipments of steel plates fell nearly 50 per cent from the 1st of December to the middle of January with but one partial recovery in the interval. Without steel plates we can not build ships and without ships we can not carry out our program. The loss in shipment of merchant bars was still greater. Even projectile steel dropped nearly 45 per cent during this period. The plotted curves of weekly shipments of all steel products look like a cubist representation of Niagara; the 1st of December marking the beginning of the drop and the middle of January the bottom. Had this decline been permitted to continue our most essential war industries would inevitably have been closed down, but not in an orderly fashion. Cooperation demands the sharing of losses as well as of gains. It is noteworthy that the upward trend was resumed for the week ending January 28.

But figures and diagrams are not essential to my thought. It was only necessary to perceive the destructive force of abnormal production to know that it was vital to the successful prosecution of the war to bunker our ships, to provide coal for domestic consumers, and, so far as the manufacture of war material was concerned, to "stop, look, and listen." The thought I would bring home to you is this: The Fuel Administration, believing in the democratic ideal, asked not that some but that all participate in the sacrifice necessary to save us from our own prosperity. Then the American spirit arose and asserted itself. There was no crushing of the weak in a great scramble, but all stopped except the few appointed to absolutely necessary work.

The reaction of the American people in the face of the greatest crisis which this generation has been called upon to face proved them true inheritors of the American spirit and practical advocates of the principles of democracy. They have demonstrated that free action and willing cooperation are more effective than autocratic compulsion. They imposed restraints upon themselves which the entire Army of the United States could not have forced upon them.

That the order was not wholly without justification may reasonably be inferred from the fact that after the effects of its operation in this country were known a similar order was issued and made effective in Canada.

The Senator from Massachusetts refers to this action of the Fuel Administration as "ill considered and violent." He presents reports from two industries showing the value of fuel saved in tons and the value in dollars of the loss of wages, loss of production, and the loss to stockholders, and says that these two examples represent thousands of other industries throughout the country.

The Senator inserted in his remarks, without reading, an editorial from the New York Times. This editorial refers to figures compiled for the Director General of Railroads which indicated the value of the coal saved in certain localities and the loss as measured by dollars in wages and production. The editorial criticizes this report made by an expert to the Director General. It will be observed, however, that the report to the Director General contained the same kind of information as the two illustrations of the effect of the order presented by the Senator from Massachusetts and which says "are examples representing thousands of industries." The criticisms upon the report by the editor and copied in the RECORD were not read, were not emphasized, and as they do not support the evident conclusion which the Senator had in mind it is possible they were inserted through mistake.

The editorial, in discussing this report, says:

Although the report is by an expert, it is not above criticism.

The article is given the heading of "Profit and loss of coal saving." Proceeding, it says:

Only in form is it a debit and credit statement and there are omissions which lessen its worth. The 18 cities for which profit and loss are estimated are all eastern cities necessarily, for the suspension was in the East. The loss in the East had compensation in the West, both directly and indirectly, in the gain to the West of the betterment of transportation. The greatest and fatal omission is that of the worth of breaking the ocean blockade. What was it worth to get hundreds of cargoes of supplies across the seas? What was it worth to have the movement of coal made nearly normal? What was it worth to relieve the railroad congestion, the real motive of the coal order?

And may I add: What was it worth to bring to full capacity the manufacture of steel plates, projectile steel, and war munitions? What was it worth to bring to the shipyards ample supplies for the building of ships? What was it worth to increase the output of clothing for the armies in France and the armies assembled in the cantonments? What was it worth to say to the soldiers in France the first consideration at home is their welfare and their support? What was it worth to the mothers of our country to say to them that their boys, who are making the supreme sacrifice, shall be sustained? What was it worth to bring to the business interests of this country a keen realization of the actualities of war? What was it worth to say to France, Italy, Serbia, Belgium, and England that their sacrifices for the preservation of world civilization shall not be in vain? What was it worth to say to them that when we pledged the whole of our resources to the conduct of the war we meant what we said? What was it worth to say to Imperial Germany that the whole of America is willing to stand at attention, cease ordinary industry, and in patriotic fervor watch the increasing glow of furnaces, listen to the ceaseless movement of trains, watch the departure of ships, all for the purpose of sustaining this war and convincing the imperialistic autocracy that civilization shall not be crushed and that democracy shall endure? A balance sheet showing only debits and credits in dollars is incomplete. There are some things which can not be valued in dollars.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts informs us in conclusion that he has discovered in this investigation three matters which seem to him to have had a very injurious effect upon all operations of the Government. One of these, he says, has given rise to the danger of acting upon theories based upon exceptional cases and not upon general conditions. He refers to "profiteers." The definition of this word is subjected to critical analysis, and its linguistic and etymological defects are suggested. He finally concludes that the word has a meaning all its own, which is fully understood, and is content, therefore, to use it.

It is admitted that some profiteering has been done and is perhaps being done, but not to such an extent that the sacred law of supply and demand should be interfered with in order to curb those practices. The remedy suggested is individual criminal prosecution of those thought guilty. If the word is to be given the meaning generally understood and comprehends all those who are demanding unreasonable profits, such a remedy, in the opinion of many, would be inadequate and ineffectual to suppress these practices, at least with respect to the two commodities which we have had under investigation. I am willing to agree that the universality and flagrancy of profiteering are not so apparent at the present time as when the food and fuel legislation was enacted, and it is futile to speculate as to what might have been the case except for the legislation. It may be that in the course of time shame and public disfavor, as suggested by the Senator, would have accomplished the desired results. But such was not the belief of a vast majority of the Congress and, as I believe, of a vast majority of the people.

In the sugar trade there are in this country about 350,000 retailers, 10,000 wholesalers, and an unknown number of jobbers and dealers. In the coal trade there are 5,000 operated large mines, 15,000 smaller ones, and a host of jobbers and dealers. It is substantially admitted that practically all these were demanding what we now conceive to have been unreasonable prices. The practical difficulties of criminal prosecutions do not seem to have been taken into consideration but are evident to all practical lawyers. It might not be very difficult to frame an indictment, but establishing a case would be more serious. I believe, therefore, that the legislation is fully justified, and that it has been far better and far more effectual to carry out the plan authorized by the legislation, as has been done by the Food and Fuel Administrations.

The second matter referred to as having a very injurious effect upon all operations of the Government relates to the question of essential and nonessential industries. It is admitted that during the war distinction must be made between the essentials and nonessentials. In discussing the method of making a practical distinction the Senator uses language which should be adverted to and the intended meaning of which can not escape even the casual reader. He says: "Where is the line to be drawn if you are going to enter upon a harsh and destructive treatment of many industries because some person in Washington dressed in a little brief authority chooses to define them as 'nonessential'?" He refers to "needlessly imposing additional deprivations and suffering" and "destruction of normal business," also "needless, useless sacrifices forced upon them by blunders of administration," "common injury inflicted by their own Government," "arbitrary power," "darken the life of children," "suddenly depriving them of all innocent and legitimate amusements," "loose talk about essential and nonessential industries," "blindly acted upon."

It should be kept in mind that such language is used in discussing a subject which it is said affects all departments of the Government. No direct charges are made that all departments of the Government have entered upon a harsh and destructive treatment of industry and are needlessly imposing deprivations and suffering, forcing needless and useless sacrifices, blindly acting upon mere loose talk, or suddenly depriving the children of all innocent and legitimate amusements and seeking to darken the lives of children, but the stilletto innuendos flowing from the use of such language are obvious.

The third matter referred to as affecting all operations of the Government is the legislation and administrative actions deduced from talk about profiteering and nonessential industries, and we are gravely told that if "you lower any more than is absolutely necessary the normal business activity of the country you are at the same time lowering the earning capacity of the country; you are lowering the saving capacity; you are drying up the sources from which your revenue by taxation must come and to which you must look for your loans." "The fear which was acute in certain quarters that somebody might make money if carried into irrational action dictated by prejudice and passion is entirely incompatible with raising the money." "It is much better to allow people to make profits, even if in some cases there are unreasonable profits, which can all be taken by taxation, than to deprive them of both profits and employment and bring business to stagnation and despair."

In this connection we are not relegated to a discovery of the innuendo, but are boldly told: "This seems to be something which is wholly overlooked." I must confess that this statement came to me with much surprise and astonishment. I had thought that the wholesome platitudes uttered by the Senator were accepted by all the departments of the Government. I had not thought that they had been overlooked. I had thought that every reasonable effort was being made to protect the business interests of the country, to enable labor to have its employment, to promote the comfort and prosperity of everyone so far as possible, to require the least sacrifice, and I am indeed sorry and extremely regretful that a contrary view should be sent forth by such an eminent and analytical judge as the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, there is another element in this remarkable speech which I feel should be referred to, yet I regret the necessity of doing so. In discussing the extensive organization of the Fuel Administrator and the delegation of powers to the State fuel administrators, he says, so far as he can learn—

> The only absolute qualification required of these last gentlemen is that they should be Democrats.

Again he says:

> It is not the duty of an administrative officer to promote political fortunes.

Also:

> The duty of any man, high or low, charged with the conduct of the war or any portion of it is to win the war and not to promote other measures which are purely social or political.

Referring generally to the food and fuel legislation and the purpose in carrying out its provisions, the Senator says:

> Unfortunately the reduction of the cost of living has a most enticing sound. Success in such an undertaking is obviously popular, and popularity has meanings and results which I need not explain, certainly not to a body like the Senate. Therefore, in the search for popularity, the difficult, if not the impossible, was undertaken, and the simple and direct method of aiding the war situation and of at least stabilizing prices was set aside or pushed into the background.

In another connection the Senator uses this language:

> I do blame them for making promises which never could be fulfilled and in searching for something popular.

Mr. President, I shall not consume the time of the Senate in presenting the facts heretofore established in this body to show that the administration has not been entering upon activities for the purpose of providing positions for Democrats. Nor shall I point out the impartiality and nonpartisanship shown in calling to the service of the Government the thousands of men and women who are devoting their time to the faithful and patriotic services of the country. The Senator has criticized substantially every branch of the Government, and would leave the impression that incompetence everywhere is to be found. I realize the futility of trying to convince some people that a Democrat is capable of any public service. There are still some people who feel that Republicans are the only ones competent to carry on this Government, and that they have a perpetual right to do so. Democrats are looked upon as mere interlopers, ought not to exist at all, and those so thinking confine their thoughts and efforts to belittling accomplishments of Democrats, however commendable, and suggesting that efficiency can only be found in Republicans. To convince such as these that anything is being done even in the conduct of the war without ulterior purpose or in a proper manner is impossible. To convince those who themselves are saturated with partisanship to such an extent that they only view political consequences in the consideration of all subjects is likewise impossible. We should not judge such people too harshly, because, perchance, they may be so constituted that it is both physically and mentally impossible for them to be or think otherwise. The Senator from Massachusetts may not be in such category, but I think it is extremely unfortunate that the efforts to reduce the cost of living should be characterized by him as a search for popularity, and that such popularity has meanings and results which he need not explain to a body like the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, let us take up this speech by its four corners and get a comprehensive view, so that we may discover its purport, if we can. Specific adverse criticisms are directed against a large number of public officials occupying responsible positions. Among them are those who constitute the vast organization of the Fuel Administration, the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Director General of Railroads, the Food Administration, so far as it dealt with sugar, and then in general "all operations of the Government."

There can be found no commendation of the acts of anyone now performing the duties referred to except the Food Administration with respect to dealings other than with sugar, and as to such other dealings he says he has made no investigation.

There are no words of encouragement for the sugar refiners and dealers who voluntarily reduced prices and sacrificed profits which would have reached stupendous sums, and there are no words of commendation of the mine workers who made important concessions in order to insure a continued and increased production of coal during the war, nor of the mine operators and the railroad operatives who brought about an enormous increase in the production of coal in 1917, far in excess of any previous record. There are no words of commendation for the host of men and women who, at great personal sacrifice, are serving the country. There are no words of commendation for the various industrial operators who have entered the service of the Government upon agreement for large reduction of prices. There is no recognition of the vast and invaluable service of the War and Navy Departments or the Shipping Board. I do not call attention to these matters for the purpose of having it appear that the Senator from Massachusetts is scolding indiscriminately. Here we have an example of studied and deliberate word lashing, and there may be some deep and controlling purpose which I am unable to fathom. I observe one train of thought constantly recurring throughout the speech, and which seems to constitute the controlling solicitude of the author. At every turn we are admonished that business should be interfered with as little as possible, that the laws of supply and demand should be accorded unhampered sway, that profits should be relied upon to increase production, that business should be permitted to control itself, all interspersed with frequent innuendos that those charged with responsibility at this time would enjoy if they did not seek the woeful spectacle of business unnecessarily hampered, uselessly interfered with, needlessly shackled, and utterly demoralized. Just why such an effort should be entered upon I do not know, but doubtless it will occur to some casual readers that the silent appeal and solicitude were not wholly disconnected with the thought of future political campaigns.

Mr. President, the resolution which brought on the investigation of sugar and coal directed that the committee should report their recommendation of things necessary to be done with a view of remedying conditions. The Senator from Massachusetts specifies a very large number of conclusions and suggestions, but inasmuch as he finds that the policies of the Food Administration brought on a famine in sugar and that the Fuel Administration should be abolished, it seems that all other suggestions may be laid aside. In connection with the fuel discussion, and I have no doubt the inference was intended to apply to all other things discussed, the Senator quotes the expression often heard:

It is easy to criticize and find fault—what would you have substituted?

And then adds:

That question, in my opinion, can be as easily answered as asked.

Here is a cocksureness expected to be found in certain species of young college graduates but not looked for among matured statesmen or professors of literature. If all the questions presented in this investigation can be as easily answered as asked, we wonder whether the investigation brought any enlightenment or whether the answers were ready before the investigation, and whether the investigation was the cause of this remarkable speech or only afforded the occasion.

Mr. President, the conclusions which I have reached are not in accord with those of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Directors of the Food and Fuel Administrations are men splendidly equipped, having both natural and acquired executive ability as administrators of high order, and were well chosen for their respective positions. The organizations have brought together a large number of expert business men who, through toil and study, have reached eminent position in the respective lines of industry with which they are to deal. All are serving the country solely for patriotic reasons. There is no inducement of a pecuniary nature. The great majority receive no salaries and pay their own living expenses. They are devoting their whole time to this service. They are even endangering their health. The problems confronting them are recognized as important and perplexing. Day after day, night after night, the combined wisdom and skill of these organizations is devoted to the solution of these problems, to meeting changed conditions, and if these problems can be dealt with so as to overcome the myriad difficulties presented and interfere with business as little as possible these organizations will do it.

The remedy therefore is, let these organizations alone. If they need more power, give it. Do not badger and heckle them. On the other hand, help and encourage them. Let us not say to the world that the affairs of our Government at this time are in incompetent hands. To the contrary, let us tell the truth and say to the world that the resources of this country are being successfully mobilized for the purposes of the war. Let us encourage the toilers in the mines and fields and those engaged in the essential service of transportation. Let us encourage the women in the land who are striving and on whom we must depend to conserve food for ourselves and our allies. Let us assure business in general that we have not entered upon an era of willful destruction. Let us not say to the taxpayers that their contributions are supporting inefficiency. Let us say to all those who are making sacrifices in this emergency that their efforts are not in vain. Let us uphold the hands of all those who are serving us in these hours of dire distress, and pray almighty God to sustain and strengthen them. Let us all be Americans; let us come together; let us work together; let us counsel together, so that this Republic "shall not perish," but shall remain "the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I had hoped to bring up some of the military legislation this afternoon, but because of the lateness of the hour, and because I feel confident that I can have it considered to-morrow, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 23, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 22, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, look down from Thy throne of grace, with favor upon the entente powers at the front, who may be at this moment engaged in a death struggle which promises the greatest battle of the ages, not only for the numbers engaged but for the great principles involved, aganist an insidious foe who would turn back the tide of civilization and subjugate all lovers of liberty to the power of might.

Give strength, courage, victory to our arms, that right may live and wrong die, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name, and thus for the good of all mankind.

Let Thy favor descend upon these soldiers gathered here to-day at this Capitol. Be with them now, and be with them when they face the enemy, and bring them, without the loss of any, we beseech Thee, home to us again, and everlasting praise shall be Thine. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SCREEN-WAGON CONTRACT OF H. H. HOGAN, KANSAS CITY, MO.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3689.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3689. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, can it be reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3689) authorizing the Postmaster General to cancel or readjust the screen-wagon contract of H. H. Hogan at Kansas City, Mo.

Be it enacted, etc., That should the Postmaster General find as a fact that the screen-wagon contract of H. H. Hogan, of Kansas City, Mo., was entered into prior to the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, and that the prices agreed to be paid in said contract are at the present time inequitable and unjust by reason of the increase in the cost of materials and labor employed in the performance of such contract, the Postmaster General is authorized, in his discretion, with the consent of the said H. H. Hogan and his bondsmen, to cancel the same or to readjust the terms of said contract in such manner as to relieve the contractor from the hardships being by him suffered on account of such increased costs and expenses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is the request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The request is to consider this bill that has just been read.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has it been reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is a Senate bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has it been reported back by a House committee?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BORLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONERGAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. LONERGAN. I rise to ask unanimous consent that after completing the consideration of the pending bill pension bills may be next in order for consideration.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman mean to-day?

Mr. LONERGAN. Yes; if we finish the pending bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. If you set a time to-day, that would be pertinent, but the House by special order set to-morrow for the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that if the House gets through with the pending bill in time to-day omnibus pension bills be taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there is no particular hurry about passing these pension bills. The House has passed a number of such bills that have gone away from here, and we have not seen anything of them since, and for the present I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. To ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the regular order. The regular order is that the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9414.

INCREASED PAY FOR POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Under the rule the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes, with Mr. CARAWAY in the chair.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire whether the bill is to be considered by sections or by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. By sections.

Mr. MADDEN. So that a whole section will have to be read before an amendment will be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment, instead of by sections. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum and $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles.

That after the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade.

That hereafter the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1 at $1,100; grade 2 at $1,200; grade 3 at $1,300; grade 4 at $1,400; grade 5 at $1,500; grade 6 at $1,600; grade 7 at $1,700; grade 8 at $1,800; grade 9 at $1,900; grade 10 at $2,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MADDEN: On page 1, line 3, strike out all after the word "that" up to and including the word "follows" in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Hereafter the compensation of postal employees shall be as follows."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Under the ruling of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] while presiding over the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the urgent deficiency bill was under consideration, when it was sought to add increased compensation for the department employees and for Government employees in all branches of the service outside of the Postal Service, he held that it would be in order to strike out, but that it would not be in order to add to a section similar to this. I maintain that under the ruling of the gentleman from Virginia the point of order is not good.

The proposition contained in the amendment which I suggest makes this law permanent rather than for the period of the war. I suggest to the Chair that it is perfectly in order to entertain an amendment of this character, and that the point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin should not be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] desire to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I merely reserved the point of order. I thought the gentleman wished me to reserve it so that he could discuss the merits of his proposition.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Wisconsin can discuss the point of order if he desires.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is the purpose of the committee to make this bill permanent law for all time, to fix these salaries for the future, I have no objection. I understood that the purpose of the bill was to provide temporary relief for postal employees on account of conditions caused by the war. If it is the purpose of the chairman of the committee and other members of the committee to bring in an amendment increasing the salaries of all the postal employees for all time, why of course I am not going to obstruct it by a point of order, which I consider would be well taken on the ground that it is not germane.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Wisconsin need have no apprehension on this question. There is no collusion between the members of the committee about it. The committee were of the opinion that this bill should be temporary in its character. It is purely an emergency proposition. The conditions existing now may not exist a year from now, or when the war is ended, and it is not our purpose to fix these salaries permanently, but to meet the present conditions. I am very glad to have the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not going to make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I will make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I only wished to obtain the opinion of the chairman of the committee on the merits. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think the point of order is well taken and sustains it.

Mr. MADDEN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained?

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 89, noes 134.

Accordingly the decision of the Chair was overruled.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CLAYPOOL. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio rose too late. The gentleman from Illinois had been recognized.

Mr. COX. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Is this the proper time to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Illinois has used his time, then the gentleman from Indiana will be recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of the justice of the amendment which I have offered I wish to quote no less a personage than the President of the United States. In a communication to the democracy of New Jersey at a banquet held there on the 20th instant, the President of the United States sent a letter of felicitation, in the course of which he said that new conditions are upon us, that old times no longer exist, that old conditions can no longer prevail, and that men must deal with questions hereafter on the basis of justice. In the time allotted to me for the discussion of this amendment I propose to read the last paragraph of the letter of President Wilson to the Democrats of New Jersey, and I wish to apply his advice to the members of the Democratic Party on the floor of this House. The President said:

Let the Democratic Party in New Jersey therefore forget everything but the new service which they are to be called upon to render. The days of political and economic reconstruction which are ahead of us no man can now definitely assess, but we know this, that every program must be shot through and through with utter disinterestedness, that no party must try to serve itself, but every party must try to serve humanity, and that the task is a very practical one, meaning that every program, every measure in every program, must be tested by this question, and this question only: Is it just, is it for the benefit of the average man, without influence or privilege; does it embody in real fact the highest conception of social justice and of right dealing, without respect of person or class or particular interest? This is a high test—

Says the President—

It can be met only by those who have genuine sympathy with the mass of men and real insight into their needs and opportunities and a purpose which is purged alike of selfish and of partisan intention. The party which rises to meet this test will receive the support of the people, because it deserves it.

Very sincerely, yours, WOODROW WILSON.

These are the words of the President of the United States. They apply as well to the measure now before this House as they apply to the occasion that is past, or the future, and I appeal to you men on the Democratic side of this House to follow the words of the President of the United States in dealing with this question that has for its purpose the dealing out justice to a class of men who by their service are entitled to the favorable consideration of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "for and" in line 3, page 1, and strike out all of line 3 after the word "the," and all of line 4 down to and including the word "President," and insert the following: After the word "the" in line 3, "fiscal year, 1919."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the subject matter of the amendment, which is said to be an amendment to my amendment, is not germane to my amendment and has no relation whatever to it. It is not an amendment to the amendment at all.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Illinois seeks to amend the paragraph 1 of section 1 by striking out certain language in the paragraph and inserting certain language. Now, granting that the gentleman's amendment is germane to the subject matter, then my amendment, which seeks to amend the same identical paragraph to which his amendment applies, is certainly germane.

Mr. REAVIS. Is not the gentleman's amendment an amendment to the bill rather than to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COX. No; I think it applies directly to his amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. It might be a substitute, but it is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is a motion to strike out a part of the language of the bill that is also included in the motion to strike out by the gentleman from Illinois. For that reason it can not be considered at this time. His motion is not to strike out a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, but a motion to strike out a part of the language that is included in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out and insert. Of course, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is proper for consideration and can be considered after this is disposed of, but it is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Iowa answers his own argument when he says that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is a motion to strike out a part of paragraph 1, section 1. My amendment strikes out some of the same language that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois strikes out. He moves to strike out and insert and I move to strike out and insert. I strike out a part of the same language that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois strikes out.

Mr. TOWNER. That is true, but the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is not to strike out a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois or change it.

Mr. COX. Both strike out the same language.

Mr. TOWNER. That is very true, and so it is an amendment to the bill and not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, but a substitute.

Mr. COX. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer it as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment again reported.

Without objection, the amendment was again reported.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope no one here will get the idea that I am opposed to a reasonable increase for the postal employees. The paragraph in the bill as reported by the committee provides that this shall be an increase until 90 days after the close of the war. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois proposes to make it permanent law. The substitute which I have offered only provides for an increase for the fiscal year of 1919.

Now, gentlemen, in all candor, in all seriousness, I do not believe that we ought to make fish of one and fowl of another of the Government employees. This House last week passed a measure appropriating $29,000,000 for the increased pay of various clerks of the various executive departments and branches of the Government, but it was for only one year, for the year 1919. Now, how in the world can we justify ourselves in voting to increase their salaries only for one year and voting here to permanently increase the salary of the postal employees of the United States? I put it to every Member here whether or not it is fair or unfair. There is bound to come a day of retribution and reckoning in this country. Of that there is no question on earth. This bill is carrying an appropriation of between thirty and thirty-two million dollars. I am wondering day by day, night by night, where the money is coming from to pay these enormous expenditures that are now being imposed upon us as a result of this war.

The salaries sought to be increased may not be too high. I feel sure of one proposition, and that is that they are not too high as to the rural carriers. I have full confidence on that proposition. What we ought to do is to increase the salary of all postal employees this year, because we can not tell whether the war is going to break up in the year 1919 or not. If it does, the high cost of living on which all of these increases are bottomed will fall out of the argument, because prices are bound to come down, and I want to ask you gentlemen if you would be willing to vote these increases of salary to these postal employees under conditions that obtained a few years ago, when the cost of living was so low? Is it not in the interest of the Treasury of the United States that we conserve our resources and only increase the salary for a period of one year, and at the end of that time, if the same conditions exist, it will be an easy matter to increase their compensation for the next year.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Has the gentleman noticed that on page 2, line 1, with reference to the delivery service and others, it is permanent law?

Mr. COX. If it is enacted in that form, it will become permanent law. I am against that, and I am only trying to get before the committee that what we ought to do is not to make permanent law, but to increase salaries for the fiscal year 1919, awaiting conditions at the close of that time. If present conditions continue, then it is no trouble for the House to offer a provision such as this that I have offered to you this morning; and if my amendment prevails, I intend to follow it up and move to strike out the provisions that proposed to make the remainder of this permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, it is with much regret that I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] make this motion. There was much difference of opinion about whether there ought to be any bill here at all with reference to these postal employees, but there was a general compromise of that question, and I was struck with utter astonishment when the gentleman from Illinois assumed a position against the committee in this matter. The second part of this section carries more money than any other part of it—that with reference to the clerks—and perhaps it may be permanent law. I know a number of gentlemen have yielded their judgment on this matter out of deference to the gentleman from Illinois, and therefore I can not refrain from the expression of a profound surprise at his rebellion against the committee on this bill. The purpose of this legislation is to meet a temporary emergency—the increase in the cost of living that has arisen since the war and that arose before the war as the result of public conditions. We do not expect that condition to last for all time. This is not a period in which salaries should be made permanent, but they may with propriety be raised to the per cent indicated in the bill in deference to the existing conditions. It is alone an emergency measure. It is not intended as a permanent measure. In normal times, when the necessities of life were as low as they were a few years ago, the salary of $1,200 was entirely sufficient, and the salaries of the other clerks were sufficient. We are raising them now in order to meet unexpected conditions, and I think it is a very unwise thing to undertake to legislate permanently at this time. The committee all thought so. There was no dissent there. This bill was reported unanimously. Whatever the differences may have been on sections of the bill between Members during its discussion and pendency, they come out on this question unanimously.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. While that is true, I would ask the gentleman if there was not some discussion in the committee when the consideration of the bill was finished at which it was announced, I think by the chairman of the committee, that every member of the committee would be at liberty to propose an amendment to any part of the bill?

Mr. MOON. Of course. Every member of the committee is at liberty legally to do that without any announcement by the chairman or anyone else; and I am not questioning the right to do it, but was just questioning the propriety among gentlemen on account of our implied agreement. Passing from that propostiton, I want to stay that it would be very unwise for us to attempt now to make permanent legislation as to postal employees, when just a day or two ago we passed a bill that made the legislation temporary as to the department employees, in every department of the Government, including the Postal Department. What a senseless position it would put this House in to go before the country with a bill already passed that provides an increase temporarily for the department clerks of the Post Office Department and a permanent raise for the field service! It would simply make a lot of idiots of you before the public, and that is just what you would be if you did it.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I notice on page 2, in the second paragraph, it says—

That hereafter the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows.

Is not that permanent law?

Mr. MOON. It possibly may be permanent law, but the railway mail clerks' section is a section that we will deal with when we reach it.

Mr. RUBEY. In the first paragraph, on page 2, I find the language:

That after the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows.

Is not that permanent law?

Mr. MOON. I think that the section of the bill that makes the bill applicable during the war is the controlling section, and when all the others are applied to it they are all made temporary.

Mr. RUBEY. With all due deference to the gentleman, I believe we are fixing it to be permanent law as to these others and making the rural-carriers' provision temporary.

Mr. MOON. I do not care what the gentleman believes about it; I am merely expressing my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have made these observations as chairman of the committee. It is utterly immaterial to me personally what you do about it. I do not want to be placed in the position of having supported in the House a bill that gives to the departmental clerks of the Post Office Department a temporary increase in salary and then on the next day come in and give the field men in the service a compensation that is permanent in its character.

It looks like a lot of school children instead of sensible men handling the question; that is all. I want to say another thing. You want this legislation. If you undertake to make this permanent, I question very much whether you get any of it or not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman oppose the amendment? I believe the gentleman is a member of the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not now a member of the committee.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am going to risk the propriety of differing with the opinion of the members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in voting to strike out this amendment and voting against the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana. There was a difference of opinion, and there is still a difference of opinion, among the members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads as to whether or not this should be permanent legislation. I for one, Mr. Chairman, believe that the time has come when the employees of this department should have their cause pleaded on the floor of this House and that they should come into that which belongs to them, justice at the hands of this Congress. [Applause.] To-day there are no employees of the Government of the United States who have so little opportunity to come before the Congress and ask for justice as have the employees of this department. Every time they voice their opinion as to what they want they are immediately met by an autocratic power that takes away from them in defiance of law their right to appeal to the Congress of the United States. It is nothing new that this legislation should come before this body. For three years since I have been on the committee the appeal has been made to the committee to give the employees of this service a raise in their wages, and each year it has been voted down. Now, what are the conditions here? Last year we voted to give the employees of the Government a raise in their wages of 10 per cent, but by a decree handed down the employees of the Postal Service were deprived of the opportunity of receiving the 10 per cent raise. That is the reason the first section of this bill was made to read "that for and during the time of the war," so that we could go back and do justice to the men in the Post Office Service.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. Who is it who repeals the acts of Congress?

Mr. TAGUE. Oh, there is but one power to repeal an act of Congress, and that is the Postmaster General, and as he pleases. [Laughter.] The words "for and during the time of the war" are put in the bill for the explicit purpose of dealing and treating fairly with these employees, and when this bill was before the committee it was directed that all employees of the service should receive this compensation. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, without breaching the confidence of the committee, that when the question came as to making this permanent legislation the vote was decided by one vote, by a vote of 9 to 9. So, Mr. Chairman, you can see that the members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads believe it should be permanent legislation. And why not permanent legislation? Here are employees giving service to the Government in a capacity unlike that of any other called for by the Government, unable to advance after they enter the service of the Government, and they can never get beyond the amount of money and salary stated in law. They can not enter any other branch of the service, either, unless they resign from the Post Office Department.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I observe in the latter part of the same section the rural carriers as well as the city carriers are divided into classes and a limit fixed for each class. The bill does not state, so I assume it is intended to leave their graduation into the classes entirely to the Postmaster General, and from what the gentleman has just said, would it be too much to assume that perhaps he would keep men down to the low classes with a low salary when he made up the increased pay, instead of letting them go up into the higher classes and receive the higher salary?

Mr. TAGUE. It is automatic promotion each year.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that fixed by law?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, I dislike to differ with the members of my committee on this subject, but I have differed with them before on things which I thought should be corrected. I believe the time has come in this country when we are being called upon to spend billions of dollars and every branch of labor in the country is receiving advance in wage, not of 15 per cent, not of 10 per cent, but of 40 and 50 per cent, with the cost of the necessaries of life going higher, to raise the wages of the employees of this department in fair proportion to the advance given to private employment all over the country. I believe this can and should be done with the passage of this bill and by making it permanent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close upon this amendment in five minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate close on this amendment in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not put the request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate has already been exhausted under the rule on the Madden amendment and it must be voted upon.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman permit an observation? There are many of us who desired to speak yesterday but the time was almost wholly consumed by gentlemen of the committee. I ask if the gentleman will not withhold his request?

Mr. MOON. I am willing to give any sort of time we have under the rule, but I do not propose that gentlemen shall override me under the rule. You have the right to have more time on the Cox amendment, and I do not object to more time being taken on this amondment but I just wanted to assert the rights of the committee under the rule. I ask unanimous consent that all debate be concluded upon the amendment that has been made to this section in 20 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman ask unanimous consent or make a motion?

Mr. MOON. I am going to make a motion if I do not get consent.

Mr. TOWNER. I think that probably we can reach an agreement that will be fair. I think the gentleman understands that there are a great many Members who did not have an opportunity of speaking yesterday on the bill. I think most of those would be satisfied with five minutes. I did not take any time yesterday myself in general debate, and I would like five minutes.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to the gentleman having time. This section contains not only this provision as to the time in which the bill shall run, but it contains the amount to be paid to the rural carriers and it contains the automatic promotion of clerks and carriers. Now, in order that everybody may be accommodated as to the matter, I move that the debate close upon the whole of this section, with all amendments thereto, within one hour from now.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope that motion will not prevail, Mr. Chairman. I wish to see if we can reach an agreement.

Mr. DYER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in one hour.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. This is not a matter of unanimous consent. This is a motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. In the judgment of the Chair, the noes seem to have it.

Mr. COX. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to stand here and enforce the rules of this House.

Mr. COX. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] demands a division. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 125.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] demand tellers?

Mr. MOON. No; I do not care anything about it. However, I want the gentleman to understand when he offers an amendment to strike out the last word he has got to talk on the subject of striking out the last word, and nothing else.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOON. How is the gentleman recognized?

Mr. DOWELL. In opposition to the substitute.

Mr. MOON. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted on the original amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that debate is exhausted in this amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the committee, but I have an amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ from the Chair. I was recognized, and it was so stated by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair recognized the gentleman for the purpose of striking out the last word. Is that the motion?

Mr. DOWELL. That was my motion. I want to say just a few words at this time, and I want to call the attention of this committee——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman has not said what the last word was that he was going to strike out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee is out of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the Chair permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment by way of substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we ought to have a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 182, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I want to offer.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the adoption of the amendment I suggested necessitates another one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Strike out, on page 2, beginning with line 1, the balance of the section down to section 2 on line 14, and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following language:

"That clerks in the first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and 10 per cent per annum where their salaries are in excess of $1,200 but not in excess of $1,800 per annum.

"The railway postal clerks shall receive an increase of 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum and 10 per cent where their salaries are in excess of $1,200 but not in excess of $1,800 per annum: Provided, That nothing herein shall authorize the Postmaster General to discontinue promotions of clerks in first and second class post offices or carriers in City Delivery Service or railway postal clerks from grade to grade under the provisions of the classification acts fixing the compensation of those employees in these branches of the Postal Service."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to strike out the so-called Madden reclassification plan and insert the same percentage increase on these particular classes of employees as is provided for the other class of postal employees. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes and present an intelligible statement.

Mr. MOON. Reserving the right to object, I want to suggest that this is quite an important amendment. Now, there will be other amendments offered. A good many gentlemen will want to discuss the matter, and I ask unanimous consent that every gentleman who desires to offer an amendment to this section offer it now, and that the debate on the whole section close in one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] asks unanimous consent that all amendments to be offered to this section be offered now, and that the debate on the same close in one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, who will control that time?

Mr. MOON. I will amend my suggestion by further asking that the Chair control the time, and let the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] have 20 minutes if he desires.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I fear that if all the amendments are pending at once, when we come to vote nobody will know what the amendment is, nobody will know just exactly what he is voting on, and so I prefer to see the amendments acted on upon their merits after proper discussion is had upon them, and let them all be disposed of in that way, instead of all being pending at once.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a further suggestion. I made the proposition because I wanted to give all the time we could to gentlemen who have amendments, and have the discussion as lengthy as they want it; but if they do not want it, I will try to see that the rule is enforced.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to make this counter suggestion to the gentleman——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, consent for that has not been given.

Mr. BLACK. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not object under any other conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I agree to all that has been said in praise of that great body of employees who compose the personnel of the Postal Service. They are undoubtedly an efficient, hard working, and loyal body of workers, and deserve the good things which have been said about them during this debate.

I agree that these employees should have an increase in their compensation, and such has been my emphatic position, both in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and here in the House.

I believe that whatever increases that are made should be just and liberal in amount and fair, both to the employees of the Postal Service and to the people of the United States, who furnish the revenue to maintain and sustain the Post Office Department. And I believe further that whatever law is passed on this subject should not extend for a longer period than the duration of the war and a reasonable time thereafter.

In my opinion now is no time to undertake to provide for permanent increases in the salaries of Government employees, because there is bound to come a period of readjustment after the war, the effect of which it would be impossible to judge with any degree of accuracy at the present time. No one knows and no one can tell what will be the size of the war debt owed by the United States when this great war shall have been brought to an end.

If we should pass a permanent law now providing for the reclassification of Government employees or should make these percentage increases permanent, then we Members of Congress have had experience enough to know that it will be well-nigh impossible to reduce the salaries, even though the revenues of the Post Office Department and the Government should imperatively demand it and living conditions should justify it after the war is over. Congress should not permit any class of Government employees, postal employees or otherwise, to take advantage of the abnormal conditions which now prevail as an excuse for permanent reclassification or permanent increase in pay. It would be unwise to do so, and it would not be just and right to the taxpayers, who are going to be burdened with a weight of taxation never dreamed of before in this country. Gentlemen, we had just as well awake to some stern realities. The taxes are coming. They can not be avoided, and the taxpayer is going to demand his day in court, and he ought to have it, and the quicker he demands it the better it will be for the whole country. There is an urgent need this very hour for the spirit of economy to fasten itself upon this Congress and the executive departments of the Government, and make itself felt in the reduction of public expenditures wherever it may properly be done. When peace does come and we can take an inventory of our resources and our ability to pay and can approach these things from an ordinary and a normal basis, then it would be a good time to go into a consideration of the whole subject of reclassification of the salaries of Government employees, with a view of permanently raising the compensation of the employee who is receiving too little and lowering the salary of the one who is receiving too much. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that there is a substantial number of Government employees who are receiving too small pay, and, on the other hand, I feel quite as sure that there are some whose compensation is quite enough.

But, despite some inequalities which exist, we must realize that with so many problems immediately connected with the war pressing for attention, a just solution of this problem can not be successfully undertaken at the present time and must wait the coming of the day when the country is at peace again and conditions are more normal than at the present hour. Therefore percentage increases for the period of the war and a reasonable time thereafter are more feasible and proper, to my way of thinking, than an attempt at permanent legislation on the subject. Most of the bill which we are now taking up for consideration is framed upon that idea and understanding, and as to that much of the bill, if it is adhered to, I am in sympathy and accord and will give it my free and willing support; but there are some other provisions of the bill, to which I will presently advert, to which I am emphatically opposed and will endeavor to amend so as to make these particular portions conform to the general intent and purpose of the measure and make it a well-rounded bill and fair to all alike.

Now, as to those provisions of the bill which increase the salaries of rural carriers 15 per cent per annum and increase the salaries of other miscellaneous postal employees, such as assistant postmasters, printers, watchmen, and so forth, to the extent of 15 per cent where their salaries are not in excess of $1,200 and 10 per cent where the salaries exceed $1,200 and do not exceed $1,800, and which provide for increased compensation for postmasters at fourth-class offices, I intend to lend my support, but I dissent from that part of the bill which, instead of giving the postal clerks and carriers in first and second class offices and railway mail clerks the same percentage increases as are given to other postal employees, seeks to reclassify them and raise the salary of each grade $200 per annum. The reclassification plan, if put into effect at the present time, would be making favorites of these particular classes of postal employees, to a more or less extent, and would therefore be an unjust discrimination against others who are just as worthy and efficient and whose work is fully as important to the Postal Service. Now, in order that Members of the House may understand what this proposed reclassification plan will do and the changes in compensation which it will bring about and the additional expenditure which it will fasten upon the revenues of the Postal Department I will mention some details of the present classification law and point out the changes that the passage of this bill as it now stands would accomplish.

Clerks and carriers in first and second class offices are now divided into five grades, and the compensation of each grade is as follows:

Second grade, salary $800; third grade, salary $900; fourth grade, salary $1,000; fifth grade, salary $1,100; sixth grade, salary $1,200.

One of the paragraphs of the bill which we are now considering would reclassify these clerks and carriers at first and second class offices into six grades and would fix the compensation of the respective grades as follows:

That after the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to sixth grade.

The railway mail clerks are now classified into 10 grades, with compensation fixed as follows:

GRADES OF RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

Grade 1, at not exceeding $900; grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000; grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100; grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200; grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300; grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400; grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500; grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600; grade 9, at not exceeding $1,700; grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800; chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,000.

If this bill is passed in its present form and not amended by the amendment which I have offered, then they would be reclassified into 10 grades, and the compensation of each grade would be increased $200 per annum, and would hereafter be as follows:

Grade 1, at $1,100; grade 2, at $1,200; grade 3, at $1,300; grade 4, at $1,400; grade 5, at $1,500; grade 6, at $1,600; grade 7, at $1,700; grade 8, at $1,800; grade 9, at $1,900; grade 10, at $2,000.

I have offered an amendment which, if adopted, will put all of these employees that are proposed to be reclassified on a percentage basis of increase and leave their classification just as is now provided by existing law. In other words, if a clerk or carrier is now receiving $1,200 per annum—and there are about 44,000 of them who are actually receiving that much—then under my amendment they would receive an increase in salary of $180 per annum. My amendment which I have offered reads as follows: Strike out, on page 2, beginning with line 1, the balance of the section down to section 2, and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

That clerks in the first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall receive an increase of 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and 10 per cent per annum where their salaries are in excess of $1,200, but not in excess of $1,800 per annum.

That railway postal clerks shall receive an increase of 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and 10 per cent per annum where their salaries are in excess of $1,200 but not in excess of $1,800 per annum: Provided, That nothing herein shall authorize the Postmaster General to discontinue promotion of clerks in first and second class post offices or carriers in City Delivery Service or railway postal clerks from grade to grade under the provisions of the classification acts fixing the compensation of those employees in these branches of the Postal Service.

Now, the inquiry which will naturally arise at once in this connection is, What will be the difference in cost to the Government between the bill as it now stands and what it will be if the reclassification provisions are stricken out and my amendment is adopted? That is a fair inquiry, and I will be glad to give the House the information. But before I start in to give the figures I will frankly state that if my amendment is adopted, the cost for the first year will be more than would be the cost if the bill is adopted with its reclassification plan, provided, of course, that the bill is not loaded down with amendments before it passes.

But this reclassification plan, as proposed in the bill, is one of ascending costs, and will cost more the second year than the first, and more the third year than the second, and more the fourth year than the third, and would about reach the peak of costs in the fourth year of its operation. For instance, the officials of the Post Office Department say that the increased cost of the salaries of clerks and carriers alone in first and second class offices the first year under the classification plan will be about $7,000,000, the second year it will be about $14,000,000, the third year about $21,000,000, and the fourth year about $24,000,000, and after that will be about the same in cost each year, except as to increases which will result from the normal expansion of the Postal Service. But probably the whole thing will be best illustrated by a comparison in cost for four years, the fourth year being the year when the peak of increased costs will be reached under the reclassification plan as now proposed in this bill.

If my amendment is adopted and all of these employees are put on the 15 and 10 per cent increase in compensation, and the present automatic-promotion law retained, the additional cost of the first four years of salaries to be paid to postal employees over that which they would receive under present law without increases would be approximately as follows:

First year, total amount of increase	$30,594,175
Second year, total amount of increase	31,838,150
Third year, total amount of increase	33,013,490
Fourth year, total amount of increase	34,263,490
Total cost of four years	129,709,305

If my amendment is not adopted and this bill is enacted as it now stands, and this permanent reclassification plan, with its ascending cost for four years, is retained in the bill, and no other increasing amendments are adopted, then the additional cost to the postal revenues over that which is now paid will be for the next four years approximately as follows:

First year, total amount of increase	$25,686,195
Second year, total amount of increase	36,912,795
Third year, total amount of increase	48,338,795
Fourth year, total amount of increase	53,000,000
Total cost of four years	163,937,785

Therefore the difference in cost, even assuming that the war will go on and we will continue the percentage increases for a period of four years, would be the difference between—

$163,937,785

I submit that $34,228,480 is a good deal of money, and we should do some very mature thinking before we saddle that much additional expense on the Postal Service, and without being able to look ahead and see what the conditions will be; and if, happily, the war should end sooner than a period of four years—and we all believe that it will end sooner than that—and the cost of living should again reach normal standards, and Congress should find that it was not necessary to longer retain these percentage increases, then the saving of my amendment would be a great deal more than I have stated. But, even assuming that it will be necessary and proper to continue these percentage increases of 15 and 10 per cent for a period of four years, the difference in cost for that four years will be, as I have stated, more than $34,000,000.

Undoubtedly some Members of the House, in listening to the speeches which some of the Members have made during the course of this debate, have gained the impression that a large number of the postal employees are in the lower grades and are receiving the smaller salaries, but that is a mistake. The most of them, by reason of the automatic promotion law now in existence, have already reached the higher grades, and would certainly receive a substantial increase in salary under the percentage basis which I have proposed, an increase which should be satisfactory, and I believe will be, to most of the employees.

Take the clerks in first and second class offices, for instance:

There are 1,977 in the $800 grade. They would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law and $120 by my percentage amendment, making $220 increase in all.

There are 2,000 in the $900 grade. They would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law and $135 by my percentage amendment, making $235 increase in all.

There are 3,300 in the $1,000 grade. All of this grade of clerks in first-class post offices and 85 per cent of them in second-class offices would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law, and all of them would receive $150 by my percentage amendment.

There are 9,000 in the $1,100 grade. Eighty-five per cent of this grade of clerks in first-class post offices would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law, and all of them would receive $165 increase by my percentage amendment.

There are 19,500 in the $1,200 grade. All of these clerks would receive $180 per annum increase under my percentage amendment.

Take the carriers in the first and second class offices as a further illustration:

There are 2,673 in the $900 grade. They would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law and $135 by my percentage amendment, making $235 increase in all.

There are 1,262 in the $1,000 grade. All of this grade of carriers in first-class post offices and 85 per cent of them in second-class offices would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law, and all of them would receive $150 increase by my percentage amendment.

There are 5,237 in the 1,100 grade. Eighty-five per cent of this grade of carriers in first-class post offices would receive $100 per annum increase by the automatic-promotion law, and all of them would receive $165 increase by my percentage amendment.

There are 23,606 in the $1,200 grade. All of these carriers would receive $180 per annum increase under my percentage amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Are these clerks and carriers promoted because of length of service?

Mr. BLACK. Under the law as it now stands they are automatically promoted from year to year in second-class offices up until the fourth grade, and in the first-class offices up until the fifth grade, and after that 85 per cent are promoted in the second-class offices up to the fifth grade, and 85 per cent in the first-class offices are promoted automatically to the sixth grade.

Mr. HASTINGS. Because of length of service?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I am sorry that I can not yield now, because I want to finish my statement and my time is limited.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wanted to ask the gentleman something in reference to what he has said.

Mr. BLACK. Very well, I yield.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will wait until later.

Mr. BLACK. I wanted to use this further illustration in discussing my amendment. There are about 44,000 clerks and carriers in the Postal Service who are now receiving $1,200. Under my amendment they will all receive 15 per cent increase in salary, which will be $180 per annum increase, and this will make their salaries $1,380 a year, and it seems to me that will be a substantial increase.

Members of the House would probably be interested to know what is the average salary received by postal clerks and letter carriers, and the latest figures that I have seen from the Post Office Department place the average annual salary of post-office clerks at $1,081.33 and of letter carriers at $1,114.35.

It is more than that now, because the general average has been raised since these figures were compiled, because of the normal effect of the automatic-promotion law.

The following table will show the figures for the railway postal clerks:

Average salary of railway postal clerks.

Fiscal year ended June 30—	Average salary.
1910	$1,164
1911	1,170
1912	1,174
1912 (Sept. 30) (Reclassification act effective Oct. 1, 1912)	1,173
1913	1,239
1914	1,265
1915	1,320
1916	1,380
1917	1,414
1917 (Nov. 15)	1,433

It will be observed that the above figures show an increase in this average compensation of 23.1 per cent since 1910.

And in a statement which First Assistant Postmaster General J. C. Koons made to the Subcommittee on Post Offices and Post Roads, while it was holding hearings on this subject, he said that since 1907, when the classification act for postal clerks and letter carriers was passed, that the average salary of post-office clerks has increased $269 per annum, or 32.42 per cent, and the average salary of the city letter carrier has increased $226.59, or 25.18 per cent. These increases result from the automatic promotions of clerks and carriers in the service from year to year and by reason of abolishing grade No. 1.

Now, the question arises, Are these increases enough under present abnormal conditions? And to that question I answer, "No."

I believe that percentage increases should be given as set out in the amendment which I have offered to help meet the higher cost of living which now prevails. If at the end of the fiscal year 1919 conditions should demand still further percentage increases, then I would be in favor of giving them; but I do not believe that we should go into a permanent reclassification of a portion of these employees at the present time, nor do I believe that we should make this bill permanent law as to the percentage increases in salaries. I have already given my reasons and I will not repeat them.

Undoubtedly a considerable number of Government employees do not expect us to adopt permanent reclassification at the present time.

In the February issue of the Federal Employee, the official magazine of the National Federation of Federal Employees, the following statement appears:

RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES AND POSITIONS.

It is not believed that Congress will take favorable action at this session on any bill providing for general reclassification of salaries and wages in any branch of the service. In all probability they will grant percentage increases and postpone action on general reclassification measures until the next session, when necessary information will be available on which to base such measures. The various local Federal employees' unions have been called on to submit information—statistics, recommendations, etc.—with regard to a general reclassification measure, so that the National Federation of Federal Employees at its next convention may adopt a specific measure and get the support of all branches of the service for one bill. If you have any ideas on this subject do not fail to send them in. All suggestions and plans will be considered.

CONCLUSION.

Now, I want to reiterate that I have the very highest esteem for the postal employees as a class of workers and the warmest praise for their service in the Post Office Department. If this bill is limited in its effect to the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter and carries reasonable percentage increases, I shall gladly support it. Otherwise I shall feel compelled from a sense of duty to vote against it. If only the postal employee was to be considered in a matter of this kind we might easily respond to almost any demand for salary increase which he might make, unless it was one which was over and beyond all limits of sense and reason, but it must be remembered that we have no postal revenues except what the people pay, and therefore in all good conscience a Representative must bear in mind their interests as well as those of the employee.

The amendment which I have offered, taken in connection with the other sections of the bill, will entail an expenditure of more than $30,000,000 a year upon the postal revenues, and I submit that is as far as we ought to go under present conditions.

As a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I have given this subject considerable investigation, and what I have said represents my deliberate judgment, and I purpose to follow out this judgment in the further consideration of this bill, believing that in so doing I am discharging my duty to the postal employees as well as the people whom I have the honor to represent.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is it not possible to arrange some time for the consideration of this most important paragraph? There will be various amendments offered. I think we ought to have an agreement as to the time.

Mr. MOON. I have done my best to get you gentlemen on the other side to agree to a limitation of debate, but you have refused to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MOON. You went into the work of striking out some language that the chairman had used.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the only objection that was made to the request by the gentleman from Tennessee as to the length of time for consideration of amendments to the paragraph was to that part which referred to taking a vote on all of the amendments at the close. Now, there are a number of bona fide amendments to be offered to this important section.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Illinois, the most interested Member in this section, as I understood him, wanted the regular order and to proceed with the amendments in order.

Mr. MADDEN. As far as the vote on the amendments. I am willing to have time given to each amendment.

Mr. BLACK. This is an important subject, and I think we ought not to pass over it without due consideration.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am not feeling very good this morning about these Republicans who voted on the proposition a while ago, but I am not going against them when they want to talk, for I know that nothing does them so much good as to get an opportunity to talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, by consent of all concerned, I want to say that, as far as I am concerned, I have three other amendments that I want to offer. They go to the section we have under discussion, and after that I have not any amendments to suggest. I would like to have the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], a member of the committee, given such time as he thinks he ought to have to discuss the pending amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I think it will not take over 15 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I would like to have, Mr. Chairman, an agreement as to the length of debate, and I want to ask the chairman of the committee if we can come to an agreement for 20 minutes debate on each of the three succeeding amendments, and then vote at the end of the 20 minutes' debate on each one?

Mr. FIELDS. Vote on all the amendments together?

Mr. MADDEN. No; on each amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Would that preclude the offering of other amendments and debate upon them?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all.

Mr. MOON. What total length of time does the gentleman from Illinois suggest?

Mr. MADDEN. I would suggest an hour on the three amendments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to suggest that yesterday the debate practically was all consumed by members of the committee, and up to date to-day it has been the same. Some of us who really wanted to say something pertinent on the last amendment could not get a minute. I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas taking what time he wants, which I am advised he can use to advantage, but I do submit that it is not proper to give all the time to the members of the committee, and then have the chairman of the committee chop it off. If other Members can have something to say as well as the members of the committee I will not object.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

Mr. MADDEN was recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want the House to be tied down strictly to the rules of the House if it does not want to. I have no objection, personally, to any length of debate on this section or any other, nor do I care how the House votes in connection with this bill or any other bill. If you want to fix the time for debate I will not suggest it myself, but let other gentlemen suggest it, and I will make no objection to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, which to my mind greatly modifies the situation, I will withdraw my objection to the extension of time for the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Texas to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman is permitted to go on for an additional time, will the opposition have the same amount of time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in the power of the Chair to determine.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the fallacy of the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is, to begin with, that he seeks to repeal the reclassification act entirely.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. My amendment provides that the automatic promotions shall not be suspended. It remains just the same.

Mr. MADDEN. It would, in effect, then, repeal the classification law passed in 1907 in the case of the clerks and carriers and in 1912 in the case of the railway postal clerks. There is no justice whatever in dealing with the men in this branch of the Postal Service on the basis of percentage in increase in their pay. They were not granted that increase last year when everybody else was. They were compelled to wait for further legislation. The legislation is now pending. It ought to be adopted. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] would destroy every future hope of every man engaged in the Postal Service, or those branches of the Postal Service to which his amendment applies.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the bill is passed as it is written, containing the gentleman's proposition, what would be the average increase of these postal employees?

Mr. MADDEN. The average increase would be about 15 per cent.

Mr. HAMLIN. And the increase on all the others is about what?

Mr. MADDEN. About 15 per cent.

Mr. HAMLIN. Fifteen and ten, is it not?

Mr. MADDEN. It ranges from 25 per cent down, according to the compensation they receive, so that it averages close to 15 per cent—about 16 per cent.

Mr. BLACK. How is it that it reaches such a peak of cost beyond the computation?

Mr. MADDEN. I presume that the men get into the higher grades after an average of service, and that, of course, increases the expenditure, whereas if they remain in the same class all the time and only receive 15 per cent increase in their pay it would cost more to increase them on the percentage plan to-day than the present plan costs, whereas it will cost more under the present plan in the years to come than it does under the percentage plan. These men, it may just as well be understood, have to serve on the average four years as substitutes. They earn on the average during the substitute period $35 a month. It takes them five years after they are regularly appointed to reach the highest grade. That is nine years, and during all of the nine years they receive an average compensation under the present law of $742.22.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that those classes who now get $800 are raised to $1,000 and those who get $1,300 are raised to $1,500?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think that will make an average of about 19 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it does not.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Eight to ten would be 25 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And 13 to 15 would be 13 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman may have his figures, I have mine. I believe that the only just method of treating these men in the Railway Mail Service and in the Postal Service, for clerks and carriers, is under the classification act which it is proposed to reenact with a higher grade of salaries.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want the information, because I follow the gentleman as near as I can about these matters; but what is the reason for making a different raise with these clerks than with the others?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no one else in the service that is classified except the men in the Postal Clerical Service, the Carrier Service, and the Railway Mail Service. All of the other men are working from month to month on the same standard day. These men are classified, justly so, because the hours demanded of them average 12 every day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I suppose a person who opposes this bill as I do, and who will vote for those propositions that relieve it as much as possible, as I shall do, and vote against it finally, as I shall do, had just as well undertake to stop the water from running over Niagara Falls. He had just as well try to beat back the tide of the ocean. I am not afraid to be in the minority when I know I am right. There is sufficient bait on this hook for every man in here to take under the hook, cork, sinker, and line. I have never seen, during the time that I have been serving in Congress, the membership as ravenous, absolutely ravenous and clamoring for pork as they are on this proposition. Now, here we are in the middle of a tremendous war, gentlemen. Your Committee on Military Affairs will report a bill amounting to $10,000,000,000. The Committee on Naval Affairs will report a bill of about $1,300,000,000. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee authorized the issue of $500,000,000 for the railroads. The Ways and Means Committee chartered a financial corporation of $500,000,000 capital, and authorized the issuance of $2,000,000,000 credit, all to be raised by sale of Government bonds. Summing it all up the appropriations this year will amount to about $15,000,000,000. Is there one dollar that you will appropriate by this bill necessary for the conduct of this war? In other words, when the demands of this Government for the preservation of its very life are the very heaviest——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. No; I have only five minutes. When the demands of this Government are the very heaviest for the purpose of preserving the Republic, Congress, without hesitation, without hardly an opportunity for a man to oppose it, passes an appropriation that runs in its fourth year up to about $60,000,000 for men who are now supported by the Government and who, in my opinion, if left alone and not agitated by men who are interested in stirring and agitating up matters of this kind, would be perfectly contented and willing to serve for the compensation they are now receiving.

When the shipbuilders strike, some men arise on this floor and denounce them. When the coal miners strike, these same men will get up here and say it is absolutely criminal, and every one of these disturbances have their incipiency, their beginning, right here in the Congress of the United States. Agitation in such matters as this is simply the cue passed on down the line to these other men; they decide to strike and you say they are not good American citizens, they ought to be put in the penitentiary, that they ought to be punished; and I am not defending strikers; I am far from it; but I want to see the American Congress some time while this war is on awaken to the fact that it takes money to wage war, that the United States is the last solvent belligerent country engaged in this war, that we must not only finance our war, but we have got to loan the money to the other allies in order to buy munitions of war.

As a means of raising war revenue the postage on letters was increased from 2 to 3 cents, the price of every postal card was raised from 1 to 2 cents. If this bill passes, every cent of revenue that was raised by this increase in postage will go, not in part payment of the prosecution of the war, but to increase the salaries of Government clerks and carriers in whose interest this bill is brought forward.

War conditions are driving women and girls into the fields as farm laborers. In some sections of the country women are taking the place of men as section hands on the railroads. Under such circumstances and conditions the office-holding class ought to share rather than add to the burden of the taxpayer and wage earner.

The Washington newspapers, conscious or otherwise, are doing the country irreparable injury by the continued agitation for increase in salaries of Government clerks and employees. Many of the strikes throughout the country during this crisis are traceable directly to the propaganda carried on by the Washington papers to boost the salaries of the Government clerks and employees. Every labor organization in the country has its representatives here, who are watching every opportunity to press demands for like advances in wages for the members of the innumerable labor organizations scattered through the country. The eyes of not only the Republic, but of the world, are focused on Washington as a reservoir of patriotism and self-sacrifice, to the end that the Government may be administered in such a manner as to guarantee the successful prosecution of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, if we can have, say, an hour's general discussion on section 1 of the bill and then let amendments be offered at the end of the discussion, so that each man will have a chance to say something on this section of the bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Wait until the Chair puts the request. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that there be one hour of discussion on section 1 and all amendments thereto——

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no!

The CHAIRMAN. One moment.

Mr. MADDEN. I asked unanimous consent that there shall be one hour's debate on section 1 of the bill; that the discussion on the amendments to be offered to the bill later shall be confined to 10 minutes on each amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. Just wait a moment until the Chair states the question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that there shall be one hour of general discussion on section 1 and that at the expiration of that time amendments may be offered and there be 10 minutes debate on each amendment, after which the amendment shall be voted upon. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] was talking to me about the matter a while ago I authorized him to say to the gentleman from Illinois that, as far as I was concerned, there might be one hour further discussion upon this bill; but I did not mean at the end of that hour amendments could come in and be discussed for 10 minutes under the rule as it now exists. That would be simply giving an hour of general debate and then the regular time as authorized under the rule. I am willing that one hour be given to the discussion of the bill and that any amendment may be offered in that time that gentlemen desire to offer, and, at the end of the hour's debate, then the vote be taken on amendments without further discussion.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there will be a good many amendments upon this first section of the bill; but I think if we can agree on an hour of general debate in connection with it and then agree that there shall be one speech of five minutes for and one of five minutes against each amendment we will get along pretty well.

Mr. MOON. Well, that is the rule now.

Mr. MADDEN. But we are not enforcing it.

Mr. MOON. You have been enforcing it on me.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; we did not enforce anything on the gentleman.

Mr. MOON. I do not know how many amendments you are going to propose.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there will be many amendments, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MOON. I do not like to have an hour's general debate and then a debate under the five-minute rule. I am not objecting to taking the hour in which time the amendments can be offered so that we can have a vote on the amendments at that time. I just want to save time and give opportunity for debate to gentlemen who desire to do so.

Mr. GILLETT. This is a matter of interest to both sides which men would like to debate, and I think it is fair and reasonable that they should have an opportunity to debate it, as the gentleman undoubtedly agrees.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman have any idea how many amendments there will be?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know. I have three amendments to offer—that is all I propose to offer.

Mr. COX. I have one amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, one amendment I propose to offer is one to perfect the section, due to the fact that the committee adopted one amendment and there should not be any objection to that amendment.

Mr. MOON. How would it satisfy the gentleman to take an hour for general debate and amendments, too?

Mr. MADDEN. Make the other half hour in connection with the amendments when they are pending, will you?

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I believe it would be utterly unfair to those who have amendments that they desire to offer in good faith to deny them the right to present their amendments and have them voted on at the conclusion of the debate on that amendment. I therefore object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] objects, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the Moon-Madden bill. It seems to me that we have waited long enough to do justice to a very large class of employees throughout the Government service whose faithfulness has been well established in every branch wherein this bill is applicable. As has been frequently stated on the floor, it is over 10 years since any adjustment has been made of salaries of postal employees, and no one will deny that during that period of time there has been a very marked increase in the cost of living. It is very essential that something should be done to retain the personnel. I happen to know of numerous instances where men have become absolutely disgusted with Postal Service conditions and have resigned from positions where their service has been valuable to the Government, and accepted others in order to better their living conditions. We do not need to paint, Mr. Chairman, any pictures of conditions under which these men serve.

The rural carrier goes out over his line in winter and summer, in heat and cold, rain and snow. The railway mail postal clerk is continually exposed, both to danger and to the hardships of travel, requiring long absences from home. The city carrier is also obliged to face the inclemencies of the weather in his routine work. All of these men are serving at very moderate rates of compensation. In fact, there is no feature of the Postal Service that is appealing to men to enter it at the present time.

Certainly we can do justice to these men by these moderate increases. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said yesterday, if any one of these men was in your or my employ and asked for an increase there would be no question of its being granted. Why does not that same rule apply to the thousands in the Government service? Why should we not do justice to them as well as to one individual employee? I do not agree with the attitude of the chairman of the committee that this is a war-emergency measure. The committee has acted wisely in striking out that feature of section 1 and incorporating a permanent basis of additional pay in the various postal lines of service. We have had in New England recently a good deal of complaint of the Postal Service. This has come, in large measure, from the fact that we have sapped the ambition of the men in all branches by the attitude of the department toward them and toward these increases in salary. I noticed only a few days ago that the Postmaster General made a statement whereby he showed that he was quite proud of the fact of the large surplus in the postal receipts. It strikes me that it is a bookkeeping surplus, pure and simple, but if there is a surplus let us put it to the right use. These men have helped earn that surplus by giving their best, by giving faithful service, and, therefore, it seems to me that we as representatives of the Government can do no better than to recognize that faithful service by granting such increases as are called for in this bill.

I have been in favor of this legislation since it was first brought forward, and have twice appeared before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, offering statistics and designating the organizations in my district that would be directly affected by these increases. I also have frequently stated my attitude to the men themselves and am very glad of this opportunity to add a further word in their behalf.

The requirements of their duties are very exacting, and they must be men of excellent habits and character to satisfactorily perform the duties demanded of them. They merit this recognition from the Government, and I hope that this bill will be speedily enacted into law.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], because I believe the committee, after having given due consideration to this bill, has reported a fair, just, and reasonable increase to the large number of deserving Government employees. With the amendment adopted on the floor of this House making the increase permanent, I believe we have a fair and just bill. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX], in whom I have the utmost confidence, stated on the floor of this House a few moments ago that the first provision, namely, the provision for an increase of the rural free delivery, was a fair, just, and reasonable increase. And I want to assure him that if he is certain that that increase is a deserving, justifiable, fair, and reasonable increase for that branch of the service, it surely is reasonable when it applies to the clerks and letter carriers in the large cities, which are covered by the provision which is aimed to be amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. I have observed that the gentleman from Texas in his amendment is not endeavoring to amend the first provision of this bill, which applies to the Free Rural Service, and I am satisfied that if he were acquainted with the services that are rendered by the clerks as well as letter carriers in large cities he would not offer his amendment, and that he would not begrudge them the small increase which is provided for in this bill.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], as well as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM], know that the people in the large centers to-day are obliged to pay three times as much for cotton goods as they did two years or three years ago, and the gentlemen from the West know that we are obliged to pay much higher prices for wheat and for corn, and for other necessaries of life. And in view of these tremendous increases that the people residing in the cities are obliged to pay for sustenance and for the necessaries of life, it is absolutely necessary that some step be taken by which these small salaries shall be increased so that they can maintain themselves and provide for their families.

I know, and, in fact, I am satisfied, if these gentlemen who oppose the increases on the part of some of the Government employees were familiar with the tremendously increased prices that the people are obliged to pay in the cities for the necessaries of life, they would not hesitate for a moment to grant the small increase for the men that are earning less than $1,500, $1,800, or even $2,000.

That the price of necessities of life has steadily increased is conceded and known to all. In many instances food has increased from 50 to 100 per cent, and, due to the high cost of cotton, wool, and leather, not only clothing, shoes, women's and children's dress, but all articles needed and required have tremendously increased in price. Shoes have increased 100 per cent, woolen goods 100 per cent, and cotton goods from 150 to 300 per cent. In view of these unjustifiable high prices that the people are obliged to pay for these articles, it is the duty of the Government to increase the salaries and wages of its employees, as it is the duty of all other employers.

The reasonable increases that are provided for in this bill, which I believe has been carefully prepared, and which, as I stated before on the floor of the House, with the amendment adopted makes it a bill that each and every Member should vote for, and the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] should not prevail.

Mr. Chairman, due to the low salaries paid to the actually overworked post-office employees many of them have been obliged to seek other employments so as to be able to make both ends meet. In that way the department has lost many good and experienced men. In addition a great number of these patriotic employees have entered the military and naval service of the United States and consequently the Post Office Department is handicapped.

Only a short time ago my attention was called to a notice which the collector of water rents is sending out to thousands of Chicagoans with the bills, which I herewith insert:

SAVE YOUR DISCOUNT.

Unavoidable delays in handling and delivering the mails are occurring and will increase, due to shortage of help, occasioned by skilled post-office employees gone and going to war.

Many discounts will be lost, due to such delays, unless you mail remittances covering water bills at least five days before expiration of discount periods.

Therefore please remit early and save your discount.

Approved:

W. J. McCOURT,
Superintendent of Water, Chicago, Ill.

And I also submit a communication received in connection with this notice which will bear out the statements made by me:

The reason assigned by the city collector is only partially correct. It is true that some of these men have been drafted, but by far the greater number have left to seek more attractive employment elsewhere. Owing to the meager wage, excessive overtime, and unnecessary night work the Chicago post office can not keep its force recruited up to the proper strength.

It has been stated that the delays in handling the mail are due to the Railway Mail Service. In this connection please observe that these statements sent out by the superintendent of water do not require any handling by the Railway Mail Service. It is local delivery pure and simple, and the delays are caused by the shortage of help and the breakdown in the spirit of the men in the Chicago post office.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOON. Has not the debate already been exhausted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. BLACK. I call for a vote, then, on the amendment.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, if the debate is exhausted on this section, we ought to have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an amendment he desires to offer.

Mr. MOON. An amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. To strike out the last word.

Mr. MOON. Which is really a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has been recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was recognized before the parliamentary inquiry was made.

Mr. MOON. I do not want to cut the gentleman off from his speech at all. I want to come to a vote as soon as we can.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret that my voice is not strong enough to-day to reach all of you, but I shall strive to make it do so. I feel deeply on this subject. During the five years I have been in Congress I have devoted myself largely to the betterment of the Post Office Service. I saw service 24 years ago under the Cleveland and McKinley administrations as postmaster. I made a study of the post-office question at that time. I have always taken a deep interest since.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that the men who were drawing $1,200 a year 20 years ago are getting $1,200 to-day, with no prospect of a raise. I am talking about the carriers of the country. One thousand two hundred dollars was the limit. They say to you that you ought to put them on a par with men who have been getting $1,500 or $1,800, or have a prospect of a raise such as the department clerks have in considering a percentage of increase in pay.

We have attempted to reclassify the clerks and carriers so that they may in time have a raise to $1,500 salary. One thousand five hundred dollars now is not half as much as $1,200 was 20 years ago, when the carriers and the clerks got $1,200.

It is a condition, not a theory, that confronts us. In all the cities of this country we find the best men in the service getting out because they can get more money elsewhere. The men who have passed the prime of their usefulness stay. The men who can not earn more than $1,200 stay, but the men—and there are thousands of them—who can earn more than $1,200 are getting out of the service, because for over 20 years they have seen nothing done to keep their salaries up with the rising cost of living.

We want to keep up the morale of the force. We want to fix it so that it is not required in all the big cities of the country to go out into the country seeking carriers because the people of the city know that the cost of living is so much higher than the salaries received that they will not apply for these positions.

Take, for instance, the city of Detroit. In three months 100 of their carriers resigned. The postmaster of the city of Detroit is writing out to the postmasters all over the State of Michigan asking them to send in men who could act as carriers, because they can not get them in Detroit. What is the result? The service is being demoralized, because men unfamiliar with the work, men unfamiliar with the cities, are forced to take the places of the best men in the service, who have to get out in order to make a decent living for their families. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, may we not have that amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Strike out, on page 2, beginning with line 1, the balance of the section down to section 2, on line 14, and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following language:

"That clerks in the first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and 10 per cent per annum where their salaries are in excess of $1,200 but not in excess of $1,800 per annum.

"The railway postal clerks shall receive an increase of 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and 10 per cent per annum where their salaries are in excess of $1,200 but not in excess of $1,800 per annum: Provided, That nothing herein shall authorize the Postmaster General to discontinue promotion of clerks in first and second class post offices or carriers in City Delivery Service or railway postal clerks from grade to grade under the provisions of the classification acts fixing the compensation of those employees in these branches of the Postal Service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the Black amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACK. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I wish to offer.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Ohio a member of the committee?

Mr. CROSSER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have a right to offer the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has anybody any rights here except the members of the committee?

Mr. MADDEN. I think we have preferential right on the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized to offer an amendment. The Clerk will report his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 1, strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Each carrier in the Rural Free Delivery Service now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less shall receive in addition thereto 15 per cent of the amount of such compensation and $24 per mile per annum for each mile by which his route shall exceed in length 24 miles."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in connection with this amendment that it becomes necessary to perfect the language of that paragraph on account of having adopted the amendment in the first paragraph of the bill making the language of the bill permanent. It simply provides a change in the language to correspond with the permanent language of the law, and makes clear exactly what is meant by the compensation to be allowed to the carriers in the Rural Delivery Service. It makes no change whatever in the purpose of the paragraph as proposed by the committee, but simply clears up the doubt that might exist on account of having adopted the first amendment which I offered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the present scale of pay of rural free carriers for routes in excess of 24 miles and up to 30 miles is $1,200.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not take me off the floor by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOON. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is right about that. Go ahead.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless the gentleman really wishes to make an inquiry in all good faith——

Mr. MOON. That is all right. I will make an inquiry that will be in good faith, but I will await the gentleman's pleasure.

Mr. STAFFORD. The rural carriers on routes above 30 miles up to 36 miles get an additional $24 for each mile or major portion of a mile above 30 miles. Is that correct?

Mr. MADDEN. They get additional pay for each mile over 30 miles.

Mr. STAFFORD. Therefore, under the amendment proposed by the gentleman a carrier who travels 30 miles will be getting $1,344, while a carrier who has a route 31 miles long will be getting $1,372, a much greater increase than the carriers on the shorter-distance routes will receive.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I think the gentleman does not understand the language.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the language very thoroughly.

Mr. MADDEN. Here is what happens to-day: The compensation of a carrier who has a 24-mile route is $1,200 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Up to 30 miles.

Mr. MADDEN. Up to 30 miles. Now, additional compensation for any mile over 30 miles is not considered a part of the salary. Under this amendment we propose to continue that. We propose to pay 15 per cent additional on the $1,200 received, and then $24 a mile for each additional mile above 24, no matter how many miles it may be, so that, when a man gets the compensation provided for in this section of the bill, for a 24-mile route he will receive $1,380; for a 30-mile route, he would receive $1,524; for a 31-mile route, under this provision of the bill, he would receive $1,548; and for a 32-mile route he would receive $1,560, and so on.

Mr. STAFFORD. I admit that I do not understand the gentleman's amendment if the salaries to be paid to rural carriers on the routes stated by the gentleman from Illinois will increase the compensation $300 or more.

Mr. MADDEN. That is exactly what it does. Now I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman's amendment, as I caught it, or as I comprehended his statement about it, was merely a consequential amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. That was all. Simply to clear up——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It was intended to provide that the increased compensation that these rural carriers should receive would be permanent.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Having in mind that in the preceding paragraph you have already provided for the permanence of compensation of all postal employees—and rural carriers certainly are postal employees—what is the necessity for this consequential amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. The language of the paragraph if it were not amended would read like this:

That carriers in the Rural Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, and $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles.

That would be on the theory that it was for and during the period of the war and 90 days thereafter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But you have stricken that out.

Mr. MADDEN. We have stricken that out. Hence it was necessary to modify the language of the succeeding paragraph.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What I wanted to point out was this: I do not think this is needed at all——

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is, because you have already provided in the preceding paragraphs that these postal employees, all of them, shall receive this advanced compensation as a matter of permanent law. It certainly does not hurt it to put in this language.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there are any rural carriers now getting over $1,200 a year?

Mr. MADDEN. There may be cases where they do on some of these motorized routes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to get some additional information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If it is true that none are receiving over $1,200 a year, why the necessity of having that language in the bill at all? In other words, would the gentleman have any objection to striking from his amendment the words "now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less"?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I have not the slightest objection to having the language so modified as to meet the views of gentlemen who know more about the rural carrier service than I do. The only purpose I have in mind is to see that the rural carrier service is properly protected on account of the amendment first adopted. I do not know whether the language of the amendment is going to meet the case or not, and I would prefer to have the matter referred to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], who has given this matter consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I would suggest that the gentleman from Florida confer with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], who has been giving consideration to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order yet. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have been recognized, and I decline to yield for a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment as reported by the committee and also the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] works an injustice to a large number of rural carriers. Under the existing law rural carriers receive a maximum of $1,200 for a route 24 miles in length, extending up to 30 miles, and $24 additional on routes in excess of 30 miles for each mile or major fraction thereof above 30 miles. The proposal reported by the committee provides for giving $24 in addition to the 15 per cent to all carriers on routes of 24 miles up to 30 miles.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what the paragraph says. Let me read the language as reported by the committee. This is a composite bill, the most awkwardly phrased and unworkable bill that I have ever seen presented by any committee of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. That is because we did not have any geniuses on the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because it was thrown into the House one afternoon without being first put into the basket and given careful consideration by the committee as introduced.

Now, the words are, the carriers of the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum and $24 per mile for each additional mile over 24 miles. The great majority of carriers are receiving $1,200 for a route of 24 to 30 miles. Under this amendment they will receive 15 per cent increase, and in addition to that receive $24 for every mile besides that. Take a carrier who has a route 30 to 35 miles who is receiving now $24 for each mile in excess of 30 miles. He will not only receive the 15 per cent in addition to his present pay but will receive also $24 more for every mile above 24 miles. It is not the purpose of this committee to present any such unfair proposition as that. I think the committee ought to devise some workable scheme whereby all these carriers will receive the same regular increase proportionate to the work they perform. When you have such an unworkable plan whereby you give some 15 per cent plus $24 a mile and another 15 per cent plus 24 plus 24, that is unworkable.

I took occasion last night to figure out what under the committee amendment the scale of wage would be as reported, and the 25-mile route carrier would receive $1,224 and 15 per cent additional of his present salary of $1,200.

Mr. MADDEN. No; he would not.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question from the phraseology that the carriers of the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum. Who are they? They are not only those covering 24 miles but those up to 30 miles, and they get 15 per cent increase and $24 for every additional mile from 24 to 30. And, in addition to that, those performing 30 and 36 miles would get $24 for each mile above 24 and 15 per cent of their present salary, which includes $24 a mile for each mile traveled above 30 miles. This House does not intend to present any such inequitable proposition as that.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does this take in motor vehicles? They cover routes up to 50 miles. Would not that take in this class?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have also motor carriers who are covering routes of 50 miles or more, and receiving salaries of $1,800. They would receive $24 a mile for every mile above 24 miles.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And this section would include it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; we are running wild with the Government money, going pell mell in extending increases where they are not justified. The way we are going it will cost the Government $50,000,000 before we conclude the work this afternoon; we are going at the rate of $5,000,000 every hour.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "mile," where it last appears, insert "or major fraction thereof based on actual mileage."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman from Illinois and the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment. In the event that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] prevails it would provide, in addition to an allowance of 15 per cent increase on salaries of rural carriers, an additional allowance of $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles. The purpose of my amendment is to provide equitable compensation. As a matter of illustration, if a carrier's route was 24.9 miles, under the provision of the bill he would not be entitled to any compensation whatever for that fraction of a mile that he would have to cover every day in the year. Under existing law governing compensation over 30 miles they are entitled to so much per mile for each mile "or major fraction thereof." The purpose of my amendment is to make it apply to routes of over 24 miles or major fraction of a mile as it will develop by actual measurement. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is a thoroughly equitable and just arrangement for compensation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take any more time if the proponent of the amendment is willing to accept it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Madden amendment as proposed to be amended by the Bankhead amendment: Page 1, strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That each carrier in the Rural Free Delivery Service now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less shall receive in addition thereto 15 per cent of the amount of such compensation and $24 per mile per annum for each mile or major fraction thereof based on the actual mileage by which his route shall exceed in length 24 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. No.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment which I desire to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, adding, after the word "miles," the following language:

Provided, That motor carriers shall receive 10 per cent per annum additional to what they are now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Madden amendment by adding, after the word "miles," at the end of the Madden amendment, the following: "Provided, That motor carriers shall receive 10 per cent per annum additional to what they are now receiving."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss it at any length or to detain the committee. The fact is, however, that those who are at all acquainted with this service know that in a great many sections of the country the roads are bad and these motor carriers have to provide their own automobiles and are absolutely responsible for the delivery of the mails. Some of the routes are over 50 miles in length. They are not to get any benefit from the $24 a mile extra which is given to the ordinary rural carriers who use horse-drawn vehicles. These people, with their routes over 50 miles in length, many of them, over rough roads, find it extremely expensive in keeping up their cars, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that in sparsely settled sections of the country where the roads are not very good, or so good as they are in New England and other more thickly populated sections of the country, where the carrier has a route, say, of 50 miles or more, he must start out in the morning, and there are no garages every few miles, as there are in other sections of the country. His car is liable to break down 25 miles away from home, and the only way in the world to get the car repaired is to get it back to the town from where he started, as that town probably has the only garage there is in that section. He is forced, then, to hire teams or cars or something in order to make his rounds and get his mail delivered on time. Most of the carriers in my section of the country are forced to own and keep two separate cars and keep them in condition in order to carry out the terms of their contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was wondering whether there could be any confusion on the administration of the law because of the designation in the amendment of "motor carriers" with those rural free delivery carriers who for nine months of the year, as is quite general in western and northwestern sections of the country, and I imagine in many other parts of the country, use an automobile for delivery on rural free delivery routes and during the winter season for three months use horse-drawn vehicles. During those nine months they may be considered motor carriers.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hardly think so, because motor routes and horse-drawn vehicle routes are clearly differentiated in the department. I think a motor carrier would be understood by the language in the amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. This particular service is the contract service, is it not? It is all under contract—they agree to carry it for so much?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, no; I do not understand it that way. There are motor carriers appointed under the civil service the same as the horse-drawn vehicle carriers are.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is a motor route?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but they are appointed under the civil service the same as the others are. This would give them, I think, about $1,980.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the designation indicated in the amendment of the gentleman from Florida specify clearly enough just what class of rural carriers would be affected by the provisions of his amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think it does. There is a very clear differentiation in the department.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not know whether there was or not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think there is.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. COX. It strikes me that the query propounded by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is important. For instance, in my own State I know several counties that happen to have good roads the year round, where rural routes are all carried by automobiles.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. COX. They are the ordinary rural routes, 24 miles in length, and possibly some of them up to 30 miles.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say to the gentleman that I know a good many in my own district that are horse-drawn routes where they use a motor car.

Mr. COX. I think what the gentleman is trying to get at is where the routes are 50 miles or over and to increase the pay there.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. COX. Would it not be a little better to add that phrase to the amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would not object to the gentleman offering that amendment.

Mr. COX. I think that would clarify it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then I ask unanimous consent to put those words into the amendment—"motor carriers on routes of 50 miles or more."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. What would be the average compensation of these motor carriers under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. About $1,980 a year.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why should these carriers receive $1,980 and our rural mail carriers in the Northwest, who are forced to buck blizzards and maintain three or four horses and an automobile, receive only $1,320?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Because I think their expenses are much more than the others.

Mr. KNUTSON. Wherein are their expenses greater?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman owns a car and buys gasoline he ought to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. We have not disposed of this amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Florida modifies his amendment by inserting after the word "carriers" the words "on routes of 50 miles or more," so that as amended it will read: "Provided, That motor carriers on routes of 50 miles or more shall receive 10 per cent per annum additional to what they are now receiving."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the Clark amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman arise?

Mr. STEENERSON. To oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this amendment applies to routes established under the proviso of the joint resolution of March 4, 1915, which reads as follows:

Provided, That in the discretion of the Postmaster General the pay of carriers who furnish and maintain their own motor vehicles and who serve routes of not less than 50 miles in length may be fixed at not exceeding $1,800 per annum.

Now, these are substantially contract routes. The Postmaster General has the discretion to not exceed $1,800, and they agree to that rate, and it is fixed by him. Now, it seems to me this would change the contract and allow them a pay more than they had agreed to perform the service for.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a question or a suggestion?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not understand there is any contract about this matter at all any more than any other employee of the Government. All of these motor carriers are appointed under civil service. They are examined the same as the others, and their compensation is fixed by law, the same as the others.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; it is fixed by the Postmaster General, and the compensation is within his discretion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is fixed by him under the authority that the Congress has granted him, so it is fixed by law after all.

Mr. STEENERSON. These regular carriers' salaries are fixed by law, but these so-called motor routes——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say to my friend there is absolutely nothing of what we usually understand as a contract in it. They take the civil-service examination, it is competitive; they have to stand that examination, and I want to call attention to the fact that they are the only ones in this bill whose salaries are not increased a particle.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman desires to increase the discretion of the Postmaster General to allow them more it might be very well——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But we are trying to exercise some discretion of our own right now in enacting this law.

Mr. STEENERSON. But you are applying it to the class of carriers who actually agree to perform a service at so much per year, whether $1,800 or what it was.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The law is they shall not receive to exceed $1,800.

Mr. STEENERSON. In the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, as a matter of fact, what do they receive?

Mr. STEENERSON. Most of them receive $1,800. I do not think it would be advisable to impose upon the Government the obligation of paying them more than they agree to accept. It is true they are civil-service appointees, so far as being eligible to the position, but before they accept the position they agree to perform the service at that rate.

Mr. WALDOW. One of the provisions of this bill is to provide for an increase in the compensation of the employees of the Post Office Department. Would not that cover the men the gentleman from Florida has in mind?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think that applies to star route carriers, which are the same as motor route carriers. They are contract men; they are not salaried employees at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Florida) there were—ayes 34, noes 61.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida demands tellers. Eleven gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-four gentlemen are present, a quorum.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the vote now come on the Madden amendment as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment to the Madden amendment.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. ALMON. By striking out "fifteen" in line 3 and inserting the word "twenty."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the Madden amendment offered by Mr. ALMON: In the third line of the Madden amendment strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty," so it will read:

"That each carrier on rural free-delivery routes now receiving compensation of $1,200 or less shall receive in addition thereto 20 per cent of the amount of such compensation," etc.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose of correcting, in a measure at least, a very glaring inequality in this bill against 43,318 rural mail carriers, who carry daily letters, newspapers, and parcel post to 5,882,799 families on the farms, representing 27,000,000 people, or one-fourth of our population.

This bill increases the salaries of city letter carriers, post-office clerks in the first and second class offices, and the railway mail clerks at least 20 per cent, and some of them 25 per cent, and only provides for a 15 per cent increase for rural carriers. Many of the Members of this House have expressed deep and profound sympathy and friendship for the rural carriers. Some of them have almost brought tears to the eyes of the Members of the House as they have told of the hardships endured by these carriers. Sympathy and friendship will not pay for horse feed, groceries, shoes and clothing or for the education of the carrier's children.

Now, I am going to give you an opportunity to show your friendship and sympathy for these worthy and faithful men by voting for my amendment providing for a 20 per cent increase in their salaries during the war, on account of the increase in the cost of living, and to equalize the salaries of the postal employees. [Applause.]

Provision in this bill for the payment of $24 per mile per annum on routes from 24 to 30 miles in length should not be regarded as an increase. It should have been the law all the time. It was never right to pay a carrier on a 30-mile route the same as one on a 24-mile route.

Other Government employees are provided with everything necessary to the performance of their duties, while rural carriers are required to provide and maintain, at their own expense, all necessary equipment. It necessitates an average initial outlay of about $600 and an average of $50 per month thereafter under present conditions.

There is a general demand from every part of the country for an allowance for equipment for rural-mail carriers, but there is no provision for it in this bill.

Mounted city letter carriers are allowed the entire cost of equipment and maintenance, amounting, as I am advised, in many cases to $1,000 per year. Rural carriers have no chance of promotion. They must give first consideration to their equipment, which must be kept in good condition to render efficient service. The support of their families and the education of their children must be made second to this.

An enormous amount of parcel post has been added since their compensation was fixed, and a heavy increase in the ordinary mail matter. They are exposed to all kinds of weather. When they start out on their trip, with several hundred people to serve, they must continue regardless of the weather or the condition of the roads. I have traveled over most of the routes in my district during the winter months, and I know of the difficulties the rural carriers encounter and the hardships they endure. With such weather as we had last winter, with the thermometer 10° to 15° below zero in the Southern States and 40° to 50° below in the Northern States, they must have suffered many hardships—oftentimes not sufficiently clad to protect them from the bitter cold.

The rural carriers in my district have sent me itemized accounts of the cost of maintenance of horses and vehicles for 1917, and they average $50 per month, or one-half of their salary, counting nothing for depreciation. Since their salary was fixed the price of corn has increased from 50 cents to $1.50 or more per bushel, and oats in about the same proportion; hay from $15 to $30 or more per ton. So they are affected more than other employees of the Government on account of the increased cost of the necessaries of life.

It is not surprising that 3,705 rural carriers resigned during the last six months of 1917 in order to enter other employment at better wages. As they resign, their places are taken by men without experience and whose service can not be as satisfactory to the Government, or the people they serve, as that of experienced carriers.

We should give the people in the country, as well as in towns and cities, the very best possible mail service, especially now, when so many of them are anxiously awaiting news from loved ones in the Army, some of whom are already fighting in the trenches in France. They are entitled to the very best service. [Applause.]

The rural carrier is in a sense the farmer's postmaster, as well as his carrier. He discharges practically all the duties of a fourth-class postmaster.

The Post Office Department is more than self-sustaining. The increase in postal rates was not for the support of the Post Office Department, but to raise money to assist in paying the expenses of the war.

Wages of carpenters, bricklayers, stonemasons, farm labor, and so forth, have more than doubled during the last few years on account of the increased cost of living. Then why should we withhold from these faithful, deserving, and worthy rural carriers a just and reasonable compensation for their services. "A laborer is worthy of his hire," no matter where he works. [Applause.]

CITY LETTER CARRIERS, POST OFFICE CLERKS, AND RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

The bill reclassifies and readjusts the salaries and provides for the promotion of the city letter carriers, clerks in first and second class post offices, and railway mail clerks, as provided in the bill introduced by Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, at this session of Congress.

These postal employees are as faithful and efficient men as can be found in any department of the Government. Under present conditions they are entitled to an increase of compensation, but no greater than the rural carriers. Let us do justice to them equally.

CLERKS IN THIRD-CLASS POST OFFICES.

If provision can not be made in this bill for a fair compensation for clerks in third-class post offices, then I am in favor of doing it in some other way. They are now paid out of an allotment from a lump-sum appropriation, which heretofore has been inadequate and insufficient, and the postmasters have been forced to add to it out of their own salaries, which is not right and should not be expected or required.

FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS.

Everybody, I believe, agrees that fourth-class postmasters, who are not allowed anything for office rent or anything else, are paid less for their time and work than anyone else in the service of the Government. No change in the method of their compensation has been made for half a century. This bill very properly gives them increase of compensation, in that it allows them 100 per cent of cancellations up to and including $100 or less quarterly, instead of $50 under existing law, based on postal rates prior to recent act increasing postal rates to defray war expenses.

STAR ROUTE CARRIERS.

Many star route carriers made contracts when the cost of living and equipment was very much less than it is now, and are carrying the mail at a heavy loss. Justice and equity suggest that the Government should make additional allowance in such cases. The purpose of section 4 of this bill is to authorize the Postmaster General to adjust the compensation of such star route carriers.

Congress has made reasonable increase in the compensation of all the other employees of the Government on account of the increased cost of all the necessaries of life. We should do the same for the postal employees.

In conclusion I want to say if some of the postal employees are to be given an increase of 20 per cent, as provided in this bill, then let us give it to all of them. But if some are to be given only 15 per cent increase, then let it be 15 per cent to all alike. All I ask is that justice be done to the rural carriers as well as to the other postal employees. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. QUIN. Yes, sir. [Applause.]

I hope this House will give me its attention for five minutes. There has in all this debate, up until this hour, but one Representative appeared here to say a word for the taxpayers of this Republic. I now stand up to speak for the people who must pay the bills which Congress makes against them. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] stated some pertinent facts to this Congress. This country is engaged in this great conflict at present with all its resources taxed, with the people in every walk of life taxed to the utmost limits, and the American Congress, disregarding those people who pay the taxes, goes into a carnival of extravagance in an effort to increase the salaries of these people who hold the lifetime positions of civil-service clerks, rural carriers, and city letter carriers, throughout this Republic, and thinking not for the man who has to foot the bills.

Do you know that under this bill you have made permanent law by your amendment here to-day that all of this increased postage that you have put upon the American people is taken away, and $7,000,000 in addition? This bill increases the salaries of all civil-service postal employees to the extent that the increase alone for the first year is $33,000,000 and the fourth year the increase is $60,000,000. The increased taxes that they are paying by postage, 3 cents on a letter instead of 2 cents, amounting to $26,000,000 annually, the people who pay it willingly and patriotically believe these extra postage stamps are going to help foot the bills for this war; but instead of doing that it is telling the farmer who puts 3 cents on his letter, the merchant, the blacksmith, the clerk, the banker, whoever the taxpayer is, that the man who brings his letter to him is receiving that extra 1 cent that he has to put on every letter which he sends. The letter carriers themselves would not ask the farmers nor any other people to do that. I will not vote to take that extra cent on each letter from the farmer and give it to the letter carrier. [Applause.]

Do you know, my friends, that when the people of this country realize that with this $15,000,000,000 that this Congress is bound to appropriate this year to meet the expenses of the Government and to prosecute this war, with the $29,000,000 that you put on the bill the other day to increase the salaries of the department clerks in this city and elsewhere, which I voted against, and then you come here in one wild swoop and put on this increase, that they will not approve it?

A MEMBER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield to a gentleman who seems to have no regard for the people who pay the bills, and who tells the farmer of his district that the rural carriers ought to get $1,600 a year, when that poor farmer is doing well when he goes out with his children and works from daylight in the morning until the dewy eve if he makes a living, even with his wife and children working in the field with him.

It strikes me that the gentlemen who were so impatient here and who were so rampant to give the organized forces of civil-service employees a regular grand handbag of the Treasury have disregarded the third-class post offices, where they have not the civil-service organization to back them. There is not a line in this bill to give the poor clerk in the third-class post offices, who gets about $15 or $25 a month from the Government and $10 or $15 from the postmaster himself, an increase. If you pretend to be so righteous and holy and want to do what is right about it in this bill, give the third-class postmasters a chance to give their clerks a decent living wage while you are running wild here to-day, increasing all of these $1,200 clerks, and $1,400 clerks, and $1,800 clerks, and $2,000 employees, and leaving the poor little fellow that is getting $25 a month that works—not 8 hours a day, but 12 or 14 hours a day—in the third-class post offices of this country no increase at all.

There is one good feature in this bill, and that is the one giving the fourth-class postmaster some increase. The other features of this bill, facing the great emergency that we do, are all wrong. I shall vote against the bill.

You do not increase the poor star-route contract carrier. He does not get half as much as the rural carrier—holding a lifetime job. Why do you not increase his salary? Is it because he belongs to no organization?

We are calling on all of our citizens back home to make sacrifices for the war. The people are willingly doing that. I now call on the rural carriers, the city carriers, and all other postal employees to make the same sacrifice. I know the cost of living is high, but we must all bravely meet the emergency. The cost of taxes is high, too. Instead of increasing the salaries of employees of the Government, I prefer to get more rural routes established in my district—to get daily mail to the farmers. We can not expect to get new rural routes established if you vote all the money into increasing the salaries of the clerks and letter carriers. There are many applicants for every rural-route vacancy in my district at the present salary of $1,200 a year.

I shall vote to protect the taxpayers of this Republic. I shall vote to conserve the resources of this country, and to maintain the liberties of the people, and to protect the civilization of America by preventing, so far as I can, these raids on the Treasury of the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] a vote shall be taken on the pending amendment.

Mr. EMERSON. A vote shall be taken on what?

Mr. MOON. On the pending amendment.

Mr. EMERSON. That is the Madden amendment?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] a vote be had on the Madden amendment and amendments thereto.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understood that the gentleman from Tennessee having this bill in charge asked unanimous consent that we have a vote on the Almon amendment.

Mr. MOON. I said the pending amendment. I do not know which it is. It seems every amendment offered to increase the pay of the carriers will get votes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall ask to have five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides an increase of compensation for rural carriers, clerks in first and second class post offices, letter carriers in City Delivery Service, railroad postal clerks, assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices, postmasters of the fourth class, and other employees in the Post Office Department and the Postal Service. Further, it provides that the conditions that have arisen under the contracts in the star route, and screen-wagon service shall be investigated, with a view to affording compensation, and adjustment in all of the cases, where the facts disclose the propriety and necessity for such adjustment.

Having in mind the circumstances under which these advances will be afforded, no one can successfully maintain that the recommendations of the committee err in the direction of prodigal extravagance. Quite the contrary. In most instances, the compensation proposed should be somewhat advanced, in order that it may be made commensurate with the increased cost of living, and I propose to support all proper amendments providing for such advances. Officials in the Government service are affected to the same extent as employees in civil life, by the continually advancing cost of living. Indeed, some of these employees are much harder hit than employees in civil life, for the reason that as a part of their job, they are required to maintain a necessary outfit of motor, or horse-drawn vehicles. This is particularly true of the rural carriers. The work of the employees in this branch of the Postal Service has been made more onerous in comparatively recent years, by a vast increase in the quantity of mail matter proper, and further by the establishment and development of the parcels post. Many of the carriers who were able to serve their routes 10 years ago with a very modest equipment, frequently on horseback, with a small bag for carrying the letters, newspapers, and other mail, now find themselves confronted with the necessity of operating wheeled vehicles through the greater portion of the year, and maintaining two horses at least, for motive purposes. Nor is this all. In addition to the need for a far more extensive outfit, the carrier has found that the cost of maintaining that outfit, has increased by leaps and bounds.

Corn that was formerly 85 cents, or a dollar a bushel, now sells for $2 and more a bushel. Hay that was eighteen to twenty dollars a ton, now sells for $40, or more. Other articles have advanced in like proportion. Should a carrier endeavor to serve his route in part by motor car, he finds that as compared with 10 years ago, gasoline has advanced two or three hundred per cent. Moreover the cost of maintenance of a motor car, is not a mere matter of gasoline charges. Such a car requires in the course of a year, considerable repair work, and the cost of this repair work is advancing all the time. Nor are carriers who seek to avail themselves of the modern motor car in order to expedite deliveries on their routes, able to confine themselves to the use of motor cars only. In a large proportion of the States, notably in Virginia, and many other Southern States, and particularly in the mountain areas of those States, a motor car can not be operated more than from six to nine months a year, under the generally prevailing weather and road conditions. Hence the carriers who undertake to use such a car, must provide and maintain for the service on their routes, both vehicles and horses in addition to the car. During the winter months, and at times during the bad weather in other seasons, the carrier must abandon his motor car, and revert to the more primitive method of transporting his mail in a horse-drawn vehicle. Many of the carriers in my district have given statements in detail as to the cost of their outfits, and the maintenance of the same. I have taken pains to examine these statements, some of them relating to service in the mountainous sections, and others to service in the comparatively level counties at the other end of the district. They all agree in substance, though differing in details. Corn may be cheaper in one county than in another, but where corn is cheaper, oats, or hay may be higher. Hence, as stated, the maintenance charges are in substantial agreement.

The cost of a carrier's outfit differs somewhat, in the several counties composing my district. Horses apparently are cheaper in some counties, than in others. The original, as well as the maintenance cost of the motor vehicles used, seem to be practically the same in all of the counties. In the statements submitted, an allowance is made for depreciation. This item of course is intended to provide a replacement fund for wornout horses and apparatus, whether the latter is a motor, or a horse-drawn vehicle. The routes in my district are as a rule from 21, to 26 miles in length, many of them over exceedingly rugged country, where the roads are bad, and the winters long and severe. It has been frequently stated that a large proportion of the rural carriers work on an average about four hours a day. How this claim originated, or upon what basis it rests, I am utterly unable to comprehend. The carriers in my district require in the main from six to eight hours a day to make their trips, and while of course those who use motor cars are enabled under favorable conditions to serve a route in a much shorter time, such carriers are at greater expense, by reason of the fact that they must maintain a double outfit, as compared with the carriers who use horse-drawn vehicles exclusively. The figures given by the carriers are interesting, and instructive, and I will cite a few of them, making the citations from the different counties of my district, in order that a composite picture of the value of a rural carrier's job in that portion of Virginia, may be accurately presented.

One carrier reporting from Franklin County uses two horses and one vehicle on his route. He puts the value of these horses at the very modest estimate of $315. The value of his vehicle and harness are respectively placed at $28, and $15. The cost of oats, corn, and hay for feed for a year is given at $456, repairs and horseshoeing are stated at $12.50, and other feed and expenses at $54. His allowance for depreciation is put at $50. The aggregate of these items is $572.50.

This carrier's route is 21.3 miles, and his gross salary is $1,080. The net balance for the support of the carrier and his family is $507.50—or something over $40 a month. In that community oats are 75 cents a bushel, corn $1.50 per bushel, hay $35 a ton.

I take an illustration from another county in my district, a mountain county, where the carrier likewise uses two horses, and one vehicle. The aggregate cost of horses, vehicle and harness is put at $430. The cost of feed, horseshoeing, vehicle repairs, and depreciation, is put at $665. The net balance for the support of this carrier, and family is $315. In that section, corn costs $2 a bushel. The cost of other items is not given.

The next illustration is taken from the extreme eastern portion of my district, where the roads are fairly good, and the route is 24 miles long. On that route, the carrier uses a car for nine months in the year, and a horse-drawn vehicle during the remaining three months. His aggregate necessary outfit therefore, is one motor car, two horses, and one vehicle. The cost of his motor car is put at $395. The upkeep of the same for nine months, including depreciation, is $313. The value of his horses and vehicles is placed at $275. The cost of upkeep for same for three months, including depreciation, is $225. The total cost of upkeep is $538, leaving $662 for the carrier, or about $55 a month. In that section, gasoline is 27 cents a gallon, oats a dollar a bushel, corn $2 a bushel, hay $40 a ton.

Another illustration is taken from a mountain county, where a motor vehicle can be used for six months in the year. This carrier has a route of about 23 miles, and a salary of $1,152. He maintains two horses, and one vehicle. The cost of this outfit is placed at $350, and maintenance of the same at $300. Maintenance of his motor car is put at $200. This carrier has a net salary for the support of himself and family of $652 a year. Gasoline costs him 34 cents a gallon, oats $1.10 a bushel, corn $2.05 a bushel, and hay $18 a ton. The next illustration will be taken from the central portion of my district, where there is a fairly good system of hard, and dirt roads. This carrier has a 24-mile route, and a $1,200 a year salary. He maintains two horses, and two vehicles. The cost of his outfit is put at $370, repairs on, and maintenance of same, $788.50, leaving something like $411.50 a year for the support of carrier and family. In that section, oats cost 98 cents a bushel, corn $2 a bushel, and hay $42.50 a ton. The following figures relate to a county in the extreme western end of my district, a very mountainous county, where the roads are practically dirt roads, and very bad. This carrier has a route of 24.7 miles, and a gross salary of $1,200. He maintains two horses, and one vehicle. The cost of his outfit is placed at $411. The total cost of maintenance and repairs at $725. The net balance for support of carrier and family is $475. In that community oats are from 90 cents, to a dollar a bushel, corn $2 a bushel, and hay $22 a ton.

One more illustration will be taken from a mountain county, where the roads are rough, and bad. In this case, the carrier has a 23-mile route, and a salary of $1,152. He uses two horses, and two vehicles. The cost of his outfit is put at $464.50. The cost of their upkeep at $552, leaving $600 for the support of carrier and family. In this community oats cost $1.25 a bushel, corn $2 a bushel, and hay $40 a ton. It will be noted upon inspection of the figures given, that while some of the items may be questioned, the valuation placed on the prime cost of the vehicles, horses and harness, are in all cases moderate and reasonable. The depreciation figure may be challenged, but in no cases is that an extravagant item. The cost of horse feed is the market cost, and the items for repairs are always moderate. The cost of gasoline where a motor vehicle is used, is always the market price. Whatever changes might be made in a critical readjustment of the items embraced in the totals submitted, the conclusion that will be reached in all of these cases, will be that these totals are substantially correct, and that a rural carrier serving a full route, after the payment of maintenance costs and charges on his outfit, receives something like five or six hundred dollars a year for living purposes, that is, for the support of himself and family. In other words, he is working at wages that represent from $40 to $50 a month, in the discharge of duties which require the qualities of fidelity, industry, sobriety, intelligence, and integrity. There are so many jobs in civil life which pay better salaries to men possessing these qualities, that it is no wonder that resignations from the rural carrier service are multiplying. In many instances, owing to the conditions of the roads, the work is very arduous, since Uncle Sam's mail must be carried under practically all weather conditions. The figures given afford the most cogent reasons for an increase in the compensation of this great army of faithful employees who are doing their bit in an important branch of the Government service, and who whether the winds blow high, or low, plod their way through storm, and rain, and icy blizzards, and deliver the mail with unfailing regularity on their routes.

I submit Mr. Chairman, that a position which calls for the qualities required in a rural carrier, and to which are attached duties of the onerous and responsible character which I have indicated, justifies a living wage. This wage is provided by the amendment which will be adopted to this bill. The case for increase of compensation for the clerks in the first, and second class post offices, the assistant postmasters in such offices, the letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, and the railway postal clerks, is also a strong one.

These employees are not required to maintain an elaborate, and expensive outfit, nor are they in the main exposed to the hardships of outdoor service, but they discharge important, and responsible duties, and are rigidly held to a high standard of efficiency. The railway mail clerk often has to work while others are asleep. He is exposed to the dangers of rail travel at all times. His hours of service are frequently long, and his duties are exacting and nerve wrecking. The service is a hazardous and dangerous one, and there is no class of our civil employees which more justly deserves a liberal compensation, than the railway clerks. One feature of their service, and a most undesirable one, is their liability to sudden transfers. A railway mail clerk may develop efficiency to the last degree, but that efficiency will not save him against translation to another and undesirable run. He may have been on a run for years, and bought a home, with the fond hope of permanent establishment in that locality, only to find after a few years of life in the community of his choice, that he must choose between a transfer to a new and remote section, with all the inconveniences that attach to a sudden change of location, or the loss of his position. Having in mind the dangers of this service, the high degree of expert knowledge required, and the liability to sudden transfers, who will gainsay the justice of the moderate increase in the salaries of the railway clerks that this bill will afford? Like all other employees of the Government, they are affected by that high cost of living which has justified the increase of compensation which has been given to the employees of the railroads, and the great industrial enterprises.

It is a pleasing thing to recognize that the men who work in the first, and second class post offices, and as carriers in the City Delivery Service have not been overlooked.

They too, and deservedly, have been included within the benefits of this measure. It has been stated as a fact that the maximum wage for these workers was established something like 10 years ago.

Since that time the cost of living has steadily advanced. This advance has operated in effect a wage reduction for these employees. Indeed the character of the service required of many of these employees, the uncertainty of promotion, and in many cases the exacting work at night, has caused such an exodus of workers in many of the cities, that the proper work of the offices in those localities has been seriously crippled. The adjustments, and increase of compensation afforded by this bill, are designed to retain efficient employees now in the service, and to attract other workers to fill the vacancies constantly arising.

The new salaries, after all, if the comparison is made with the old salaries, do not present a case of real increase. The purchasing power of the new salaries under present conditions, will be no greater than the purchasing power of the salaries of 10 years ago. As some one has remarked, this is in reality a restoration, not an increase of salaries. Another situation provided for by this bill, is an increase of compensation for the third-class postmasters, and the clerks in those offices. Having in view the meager allowance for clerk hire in the third-class offices, an allowance which the postmaster is compelled in most if not all cases to supplement out of his own slender salary, it has been an occasion of wonder to all who are cognizant of the facts, that the postmasters in these offices have been able to retain their clerks against the attractions of other employments. Indeed in many instances they have been unable to do so. The hours of service are long, the work itself is laborious and confining, and the compensation for clerks in these offices, as compared with the wages paid to employees doing a like amount of work in other clerical positions, is wholly inadequate.

The contention is often made that the fourth-class postmasters are perhaps the most poorly paid employees in the Postal Service. No change in the method of computing their compensation has been made in 50 years.

While other postal employees are working 8 hours a day, third, and fourth class postmasters must work from 12, to 14 hours. They furnish their quarters, and pay for their fuel, and light. The salaries of fourth class postmasters run from a minimum of a few dollars a month, to a maximum of something like $80 a month. In a fourth class office of the maximum compensation which, it may be noted, is just below the minimum for a third class office, the work is fully as arduous as that in a third class office.

The average compensation in the fourth class offices has been placed at $500 a year, out of which light, heat, clerk hire, and any other running expenses must be paid. Like all other persons, the fourth class postmasters place their request for an increase of compensation upon the admitted, and striking advance in the cost of living. The bill provides that postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as provided by law prior to the act of 1917, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations up to and including $100 quarterly. This increase is so moderate, and so reasonable, that I fancy not a voice will be raised in opposition to this section of the bill.

There is another class of persons who have been more severely hit by the high cost of living, than perhaps the clerks, and other employees in the Postal Service. I refer to the star-route contractors.

In my judgment there is no more meritorious section of this bill than the one which undertakes to afford relief to these parties. I would not favor a proposition which sought to compel the Government to supplement the amount of a star-route bid to such an extent that the contractors would be guaranteed a profit. The equities of the case do not call for such a guaranty, nor is that what is proposed to be done by this section. Many of the star-route contractors are men of small means who undertook these contracts on a very narrow margin of profit. In a number of cases the margins were so close, that the contractors were in substance hiring themselves and their teams to the Government, at a very moderate wage. These contracts were made one year, or more ago. Since that time we all know that great changes have occurred throughout the entire country in the items of living cost for man and beast. A very large proportion of the Members of this body represent country districts, and are familiar with the conditions I am describing. I think I am justified in appealing to these Members to confirm all that I have said with reference both to the small margin of possible profit in a large proportion of these contracts, and the plight in which the contractors now find themselves, in consequence of supervening conditions. Many of these contractors are discharging their contracts at a daily, and ruinous loss.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the Almon amendment.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ALMON. Division, Mr. Chairman. Come on, boys, and vote for 20 per cent!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 28.

Mr. COX. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, four Members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the Madden amendment.

Mr. EMERSON. May we have that reported as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MADDEN as amended: Page 1, strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That each carrier in the Rural Free Delivery Service now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less shall receive in addition thereto 20 per cent of the amount of such compensation, and $24 per mile per annum for each mile or major fraction thereof based on actual mileage by which his route shall exceed in length 24 miles."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the Madden amendment as amended.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the Madden amendment offered by Mr. RANDALL: Strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, on page 1, and insert: "That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service who receive under existing law a salary of $1,200 or less per annum shall after the passage of this act receive in addition thereto $24 per mile per annum for each mile or major fraction thereof by which his route shall exceed 24 miles and not exceed 30 miles: Provided, That all carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 20 per cent in addition to the salary fixed by law when such salary shall not exceed $1,500, and 10 per cent in addition thereto where such salary exceeds $1,500 per annum."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment agrees exactly with the Madden amendment as amended, with the exception that it provides that the additional $24 per mile for the extra mileage shall end at 30 miles. Under the present law, carriers are paid $24 per mile for a route exceeding 30 miles, and the intention of the committee—and the error was called to our attention by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]—was that the $24 per mile extra should be paid for those routes on which the carriers travel over 24 miles and not exceeding 30 miles. In addition to that, a 10 per cent increase is given for motor-route carriers similar to that suggested by the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The Rural Mail Service is entitled to the most liberal consideration of this House, because it makes rural life attractive. Attractive rural conditions may help to save the world from starvation. We need more people on the farms. Every dollar that we give to making rural life appeal to people who live in towns helps to make the world safe for democracy and democracy safe for the world.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the substitute which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the substitute offered by Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Strike out the words "twenty-four dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty dollars."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House but a short time on this amendment. In presenting it I want to say that when all the rest of the Government clerks are getting an increase in salary, and when manufacturers and employers are increasing the wages they pay to their employees, I do not see the policy of paying a person $50 a mile for carrying the mail the first 24 miles and only $24 a mile for all the distance over 24 miles.

The hardest part of the route is the increased mileage over 24 miles, and just why the carrier should carry his mail for just half of the rate he gets for carrying the first 24 miles looks inconsistent. I think it is worth more to carry the mail that added distance. I think these men work just as hard to cover that distance and are entitled to the same compensation and the same rate they get for the other part of their route. For that reason I hope the amendment will prevail.

So much for that. I wish further to state that I am in favor of increasing the pay of our postal clerks and rural carriers. There are several reasons which especially appeal to me why this should be done. I wish to mention one or two at this time. The first is that I think their services are worth more than they are getting at the present time, according to what is paid other laborers doing this kind of work. They must especially fit themselves for this service, find themselves, furnish an outfit, keep it in repair, be punctual, assume responsibility and accuracy. Who ever heard of a rural mail carrier getting rich? That does not happen in the carrier business.

Another reason is that it is simple justice, as was explained by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the author of the bill, and who has worked so hard to present this bill and bring it before the Congress. We have voted to increase the salary and compensation of all other Government clerks and employees, and why not the postal clerks? Is it fair to do that? It is simply discriminating against the postal employees to raise the pay of all others who work for the Government and leave them out.

Another thing, and that is that employers of every kind and in all classes of business are increasing the salaries of their employees, and why not the Government increase the pay of its employees? Is it that the Government is less able or the postal clerks less entitled to an increase? No reason has been given why the pay of the others should be increased that will not apply to them. Again, and perhaps the best reason and the one most frequently given, is that of the increased cost of everything the carrier must pay for, everything he gets, and this applies to the doctor, the rents, his upkeep, and clothing, as well as his food. If he attends the picture show, he pays more; and I think if anyone needs to have diversion it is the laboring and the small-salaried man. Why can not Uncle Sam afford to pay more now than he formerly did? We have increased the price of postage on all classes of mail matter. The Government is getting more for the work done, and it is only fair that the employees who do the work should participate in this added revenue and income.

If I were to make any criticism of this bill, I would say the increase is not enough. It was proven before the committee, what we all know to be a fact, that the 15 per cent provided by this bill does not begin to meet the increased cost of living and supplies the carriers are compelled to furnish to carry on the work. The average increased cost of living since the war is said to be 68 per cent. I think it is 100 per cent. But be that as it may, I am sure that the increased compensation provided by this bill will leave a deficiency at the end of each year which the carrier will have to make up. I think the rural carrier—and I will apply it to every postal and other employee of the Government—is entitled to such a wage and compensation that he can live well, buy a home, educate his children, and lay up something for old age. A workman must receive such a wage to be at his best and render good and efficient services.

Mr. Chairman, I know there are those who will say that, if they are not getting enough and can do better elsewhere, why do they not quit and get other employment? Well, that question is, in the first place, not a fair one. A person who has especially fitted himself for a position and has worked at it for a term of years can not seek other employment which is entirely different from that which he has formerly done. There is no work which fits into that of postal clerk or mail carrier. The mail carrier's job is different from that of any other, and there is none like it, so that when he quits it he is not ready to take up other different work. In this connection may I say that many rural carriers and other postal clerks are quitting the service and seeking better employment, and we may sooner or later be confronted with the proposition of competing not only with other employers but with other branches of the Government service to get help to do this work? There are 270,000 employees in the Postal Service. They are among our best citizens. We must treat them fairly. They are necessary in the proper conduct of carrying on the Government. Business men want them, the boys in the trenches want them, and we must have them to help win the war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from California offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment to the substitute was rejected.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a slight amendment for the purpose of perfecting the text, and I want to know whether I should offer it to the Madden amendment or whether I can offer it to the language after the Madden amendment is voted on. It is to insert two words right after the language "$1,200 per annum," which is in the original bill, and which is also in the Madden amendment, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is better to offer it to the Madden amendment after the substitute is voted on. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from California.

The substitute was rejected.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the Madden amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DENISON offers an amendment to the Madden amendment: Page 1, line 9, after the words "per annum," insert the words "exclusive of mileage allowance."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of correcting what I think is an error in the bill, and I would like to have the attention particularly of the committee, because I think it ought to be in the bill; otherwise there will be an injustice done. The bill now provides for a 20 per cent increase for all rural carriers receiving up to $1,200 per year. There are a great many carriers whose routes are 31 miles, and their salary amounts at the present time to $1,224 a year if they travel 31 miles. Therefore, if a man is traveling 31 miles now he will not get the benefit of the 20 per cent, whereas if he has only 24 miles he will get the benefit of it. The result will be that a man traveling 30 miles or less will get a greater salary than a man traveling 31 or 32 miles.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I understand the gentleman's amendment is in line 9, after the word "annum"?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That would not amend the Madden amendment at all.

Mr. DENISON. Is not that in the Madden amendment?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The word "annum" is in there, but it is not in line 9..

Mr. DENISON. My intention is to insert in the Madden amendment, after the words "per annum," the words "exclusive of mileage allowance."

Mr. EMERSON. There is a "per annum" in both lines 8 and 9.

Mr. DENISON. It is to be inserted after the words "per annum" in the Madden amendment. Here is what I mean: If a man is traveling 31 miles, he will get a salary of $1,200 and $24 for the extra mile above 30 miles, which makes his salary $1,224. Under this bill he will receive an increase of $24 per mile for the 7 miles above 24 miles, which amounts to $168 in traveling 31 miles, and his total salary will be $1,368. The man who is traveling 30 miles will get a salary of $1,200, and he will get an increase of 20 per cent, or $240, and then he will get pay for the 6 miles at $24 per mile, making $144 additional; and you see that the man who travels 30 miles will get about $216 more salary than the man who travels 31 miles. Therefore this amendment ought to be adopted, so as to exclude the mileage allowance in determining the carrier's salary. If it is adopted, I think the bill ought to pass, so the postal employees will get something near the compensation for their services that they are justly entitled to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to change the language of my original amendment by adding the words "per annum" after the word "less," and I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting the words "per annum" in the place indicated.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear that read with my amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. The words "per annum" should have been put in after the words "twelve hundred dollars or less."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported as amended by the suggested amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN asked to modify his amendment by inserting the words "per annum" after the word "less" in the second line, so that it will read, "That each carrier in the Rural Free Delivery Service now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less per annum shall receive in addition thereto," etc.

The amendment offered by Mr. DENISON proposes to insert, after the words "per annum," the words "exclusive of mileage allowance," so that as amended the amendment will read "each carrier in the Rural Free Delivery Service now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less per annum, exclusive of mileage allowance, shall receive in addition thereto 20 per cent of the amount of such compensation," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. DENISON, of Illinois.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, that seems to me, from hearing the amendment read and listening to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], to be a meritorious amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. I agree that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is correct, and that that ought to be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. AUSTIN offers the following amendment: On page 1, line 8, strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is that a proposition to strike out the "twenty" that we have just agreed to?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That can not be done now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Because the House has just agreed to it, and that represents the action of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. If I can get the votes here we will do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not take issue on that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying all the afternoon to get recognition in order to offer this amendment, which would mean an increase of 25 per cent for the rural carriers, or $300 additional per annum for a carrier whose annual salary is $1,200. Now that I have it before the House I hope my genial friend from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] will give me an opportunity to present its merits to the House. In this connection I wish to thank and compliment him for the excellent presentation of the cause of the rural carriers a few minutes ago. Also, I think it is only fair and just to say a word of praise of the membership of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for reporting the pending measure carrying increased compensation for all postal employees. While they have not, perhaps, gone as far as a majority of us hoped and expected, certainly they are entitled to praise for what they have done in the direction of a deserved increase in the salaries of a faithful and efficient set of Government employees. [Applause.] I think we are all of one mind, namely, that the rural carriers of this country are now taxed to the limit for all the necessities of life by the increased cost from 100 to 400 per cent of everything they must have in order to maintain and keep up this splendid and popular service for the Government and for the benefit of the people of the United States.

I also give my acknowledgment to my colleague from the progressive city of Chattanooga, Judge MOON, for his faithful services on the committee. [Applause.] Then here on this side of the House is our beloved MARTIN MADDEN, always the invincible champion of the postal employees [applause], and from out of the Northwest comes that splendid typical American who is, in season and out of season, working for the interest of the rural carriers, Mr. STEENERSON of Minnesota. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does not the gentleman think the committee deserves a bit of censure for overlooking the star routes in Kentucky and Tennessee and other sections of the country?

Mr. AUSTIN. We can correct that mistake. But the committee has done so well and so handsomely that I think we can afford to overlook the minor faults and only remember the big things they have done, along with their able colleagues on the important Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Now, we are all of one mind, that the cost of the rural service to the carriers, of the maintenance, repair, and upkeep is in the neighborhood of $500 or $600 a year. Fifty million dollars appropriated for this entire service in salaries for the carriers, and of this amount the carrier must pay one-half in order to provide and maintain his outfit in order to efficiently discharge his duties. This financial burden is only required of rural carriers and of no other Government officials. I hope we will make the increase $300 a year—about one-half of the actual upkeep and maintenance cost, according to the statement submitted to us by the carriers residing in our districts. And what a splendid body of men, along with their substitutes, they are! [Applause.] They must pass a civil-service examination, always be on time or suffer a forfeiture, and they have upheld the high standard of American officialdom and have made the post-office service of use and benefit to that great class of our citizenship—25,000,000 farmers—upon whom the hope and faith of the American Republic stands. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HAMLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the President had, on March 19, 1918, approved and signed bill of the following title:

S. 1854. An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. STONE, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INCREASED COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. FIELDS. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the Madden amendment?

Mr. FIELDS. It is an amendment to the Madden amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 1, line 10, after the word "the," insert the words "star and," so that the language as amended will read: "That the carriers on a star and Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200," etc.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentlemen reserve the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. No; we can not reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard?

Mr. FIELDS. I think, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who presented the point of order should state it before I am heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MOON. If the Chair has any doubt about it, I do.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard in opposition to the point of order. It seems that the star-route men have not got any friends here.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say on the point of order that this section pertains to rural carriers, and is providing for the pay of rural carriers under a statute to which an amendment is offered to increase the pay. Now the star-route service is altogether a different service. The star-route people do not bear the same relation to the Government that rural carriers do, because the rural carriers are employees of the Government upon a salary, whereas the star-route people are independent, public contractors, antagonistic in the contract, of course, to the Government, and the star-route people are paid according to the contract for an annual service on a given route. You could not in any way connect the star-route people with the rural-route people. You might just as well undertake—and that is just what it would mean exactly—to increase the terms of compensation under a contract made between the Government of the United States and some other people on a competitive bidding proposition. That, of course, can not be done, and the amendment is in no way germane to the section of the bill. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Kentucky that there is a provision in this bill a little later along——

Mr. FIELDS. I have read that provision.

Mr. MOON. That provides that the Postmaster General may readjust contracts by agreement between the star-route people and others, and if he has any amendment he ought to wait until we reach that.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman think the star-route carrier will ever receive any show whatever with the Postmaster General?

Mr. MOON. Well, I do not see why not——

Mr. LANGLEY. He never has had any.

Mr. BURNETT. He never has had, and that is the best reason I know of in the world.

Mr. FIELDS. I would as soon try to fry a pancake on the North Pole.

Mr. LANGLEY. That whole section is not worth a bag of peanuts to the star-route carriers.

Mr. MOON. You gentlemen who are on the floor discussing this matter, do you think the people will ever have any show with you where the star-route and rural carriers are involved?

Mr. BURNETT. They would if I could get a chance at it; I would give them more pay.

Mr. LANGLEY. So would I.

Mr. MOON. I make the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says this is a bill dealing with the rural carrier. This bill is a bill that not only deals with the rural carrier, it also deals with the men employed in the transmission and handling of the United States mails. It deals with the clerks in the city offices of the different classes; it deals with railway mail clerks, it deals with the rural carrier, and the star-route carrier, performs the same duties that the railway mail clerk or the rural carrier performs.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I do not yield just now.

Mr. MOON. I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. I am discussing the point of order, and I do not propose to be taken off the floor by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. Let the Chair rule on that.

Mr. FIELDS. The star carrier is employed by the Government under a different contract technically, but he is an employee of the Government transmitting the same mail that the rural carrier transmits, and if the Congress decides to raise that compensation it has a perfect right to do so, and therefore I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is germane to the bill.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. The increase in this compensation will not invalidate the contract, as the gentleman from Tennessee contended yesterday, if I remember his remarks correctly.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. In a minute. There is not a lawyer in this House who will after careful consideration contend that a contract is invalidated because one of the contracting parties pays to the other a greater sum than he agreed to pay in the original contract.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FIELDS. And another point suggested by my colleague is that the bill fixes the compensation of the motor-truck carriers, which are at present fixed by regulation.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow, the men the gentleman refers to are employees of the Government; the men he seeks to relieve are contractors, not employees of the Government.

Mr. LANGLEY. Those who contract are employees of the Government also.

Mr. FIELDS. They enter into a contract with the Government, and the other men, the star-route carriers also, enter into a contract with the Government to do a given service.

Mr. MADDEN. You might as well say that the shipbuilders making contracts to build ships are employees of the Government in the same sense.

Mr. REED. Do they take the oath of office?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that the point of order to this amendment was that it was not germane to the bill or not germane to this particular section of the bill? I take it no one will claim that an amendment of this kind could not be made in another place.

Mr. LANGLEY. It could be made under section 4, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the point of order was made that it was not germane to the pending amendment, and the Chair will rule, unless gentlemen want to be heard.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard against the point of order. My argument is argumentum ad judicium. Whatever is right ought to be in order. Gentlemen here have made long-winded speeches in favor of rural carriers, and that is all right. I am one of the friends of those carriers, but I imagine on account of the fact that there are so few of the star-route carriers and they have few votes gentlemen have not shed tears in their interest. Therefore I believe it is in order anywhere, whenever we can do right by anybody, to do it, and right here, when we are increasing the salaries of all of these other carriers, is the place to help the star-route carriers. They can not get loose from their jobs. The rural carriers and nearly everybody else can resign if they desire to do so, but the star-route carrier is held down by his contract, his bid, and his bond. Many of them took the contracts at low rates when provisions for man and beast were low, and now they can not turn them loose.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Section 4 of this bill provides:

That the Postmaster General shall have authority to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star-route and screen-wagon service with a view to adjusting compensation and adjust the same in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment.

Mr. BURNETT. The lamb when he appealed to the wolf said, "On account of your love for me I appeal to your mercy," and that will be the kind of mercy, Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General will show to the star-route carrier. Therefore I maintain that this amendment is in order anywhere, because it is right and just.

I voted most cheerfully to-day for the increase of the salaries of the rural carriers. I have always voted for every bill to help these faithful servants of Uncle Sam, and now I want to vote for an increase for their overworked and underpaid brethren, the star-route carriers.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this point of order.

So far as the merits of the star-route cases are concerned, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] that I will go even further than he does. I believe that numbers of the star-route contractors are in a much more desperate condition, than many of the other persons intended to be relieved by this bill. But that has nothing to do with the point of order. We are dealing now with one section of a bill relating to increases of salary of certain employees specifically mentioned in the bill. There is no precedent, I submit, that my friend from Alabama can cite, that under the circumstances would make in order at this time a motion to add to the bill another and different class of beneficiaries. To a limited extent, this bill deals with star-route contractors. But that is in another and later section. Manifestly any proposition relating to star-route carriers must be remitted to that section, and is out of order in the present connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not germane to the present pending amendment, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Has debate been exhausted on the Madden amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been exhausted on the Madden amendment; yes, sir.

Mr. MOON. Now, is this an amendment to the Madden amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Florida moves to amend the Madden amendment by striking therefrom the words "now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less per annum, exclusive of mileage allowance."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am particularly anxious to see that this portion of the bill is so framed that there will be no discrimination. Now, I do not believe that the language which has been added to the Madden amendment is specific and clear enough to accomplish that purpose. This amendment would simply make the increase of 20 per cent applicable to all rural carriers. Now, if one carrier is entitled to the increase the other is entitled to it, and just as much entitled to it as the first one.

Now, for instance, I understand that the law is this, that the maximum pay for a standard route of 24 miles is $1,200. Up to 31 miles there is no increase, but when a carrier reaches 31 miles he does get an additional $24 a year. Now, say, for instance, that there is a carrier in existence with a route 32 miles long. He will be getting $1,248 a year. Under this bill he would not be benefited a penny unless the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] reaches the point, and I do not think it does. Who is to determine what is meant by "mileage allowances," and why should we leave any room for construction? If you leave it that way, it will be involved in doubt, to say the least of it, to determine just what Congress did mean; and if it is construed not to apply to a carrier getting over $1,200 a year, and I apprehend the department will so construe it, then you will find this state of affairs: You will find a man with a route 32 miles long, when the law becomes effective, getting $1,248 a year. You will find a man with only 24 miles, who gets $1,200, getting, when his route is increased 2 miles—that is, to 26 miles—$1,248 and 20 per cent additional to the $1,200, which will be $240 added to that, and in all he will get $1,448.

Now, we ought not to leave any room for any such discrepancy as that between the pay of these different carriers. I simply want to call this to the attention of the committee. I believe the language as it is now in the bill is such as to leave it subject to a wrong construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now recurs on the Madden amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 2, line 7, after the word "grade" insert the following:

"Provided, That upon the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall pass automatically from the grades therein and the salaries they receive under the act of March 2, 1907, to the corresponding grades, with the additional salaries provided for in this act: Provided further, That all promotions of both clerks and carriers shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of one year's service in the next lower grade."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, that is simply complying with the law that is already in existence. I am not going to take up the time of the House to argue it. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAGUE: Line 13, page 2, after "$2,000," insert the following:

"Provided, That upon the passage of this act railway postal clerks shall pass automatically from the grades they are in and the salaries they receive under the act of August 24, 1912, to the corresponding grade with the additional salaries provided for in this act."

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is somewhat similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and is merely to make the section come within the provisions of the law.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Is not that the existing law now?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Do you think the Postmaster General would pay any more attention to it if it is reenacted than when it was originally passed?

Mr. TAGUE. I do not care to answer that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition, if nobody else wishes to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MADDEN. My amendment is already adopted——

Mr. STAFFORD. Or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] in their statements that the amendments which they propose are merely existing law. It is not the fact. The existing law provides that, so far as clerks and carriers are concerned, there shall be automatic promotions in second-class offices up to the fourth grade, and in first-class offices up to the fifth grade, and that their increases to the higher grades are dependent on the action of Congress.

When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] attempts by this amendment—and I am surprised that there is not some member of the Post Office Committee who is willing to take up the cudgels in behalf of the Treasury—to permit every railway mail clerk after a service of one year in a grade to the maximum salary of $2,000, and attempts to have it adopted on the plea that it is existing law, I feel compelled to rise in opposition.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have only five minutes, and I want to go ahead to explain what the purpose is, and to explain the existing practices.

Under the existing practice in the Railway Mail Service there are three classes of service. In all classes they enter at $900, and in class A after one year's service they are promoted $100 each year until they receive $1,200 as a maximum. That generally applies to the apartment-car service on the minor lines, the maximum salary being $1,200.

The next grade is class B, where they receive a maximum salary of $1,300. Class C is the railway postal car service, where the automatic-promotion pay for the clerks is up to $1,300, and he is privileged to receive the maximum salary of $1,500.

What do you propose to do under the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts? You intend to destroy all gradation whatsoever of the pay of railway mail clerks based on the character of the service. I served on this committee for 10 years, and it has been the universal practice for all time to recognize the pay of railway mail clerks as based upon the character of service performed. Never have we paid clerks in the apartment-car service the same salary as the clerks in the railway postal car. Here you are giving the clerk in the apartment car, on a small run, a maximum salary of $2,000, the same as the clerk in charge. Gentlemen, you are going wild to-day in your raid on the Treasury, simply wild.

A few minutes ago I said you were costing the Government $5,000,000 every hour that this committee was in session. It has been justified to-day by your increasing from 15 per cent to 20 per cent the pay of the rural carriers. You were not content to give to the rural carriers—those serving on routes exceeding 24 miles—the 20 per cent increase, but you gave them an additional $24 a mile in excess of 24 miles, when many are to-day receiving that additional allowance. Never before in the history of the country has there been such extravagance, and all because you are fearful of the organizations of these postal employees at home, fearful that they may destroy you because you do not have the courage in this crucial time to vote your judgment.

This amendment, if adopted, will cost the Government $5,000,000 each year, with an increase of $500,000 or $600,000 additional every year until they all receive a maximum of $2,000. Are you in favor of such wasteful extravagance when the Treasury needs all its money for the defense of the boys across the sea? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEATING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] will be adopted.

I gained recognition, though, to speak of another matter—related to this part of the bill. This paragraph was originally introduced as a bill by our colleague from Minnesota [Mr. VAN DYKE], who for a number of years was a railway mail clerk. He quit the Railway Mail Service largely because of his efforts to benefit the railway mail clerks of this country. Things were made so uncomfortable for him that he was compelled to get out, and thus the way was opened for his election to the Congress of the United States.

I think the Members who have observed his conduct here will agree with me that never during the years he has been in Congress has he for a single moment forgotten "the boys" who still remain in the Railway Mail Service. Mr. VAN DYKE is unable to be here to-day. He is absent in his home city of St. Paul performing a very important public service. A great industrial struggle is disturbing St. Paul, and Mr. VAN DYKE has been requested by the Secretary of Labor to assist in adjusting the controversy. Therefore it is impossible for him to be here this afternoon and witness the triumph of a cause for which he has labored so earnestly and unselfishly. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, it will be unnecessary, of course, for Mr. VAN DYKE to be here. There is no doubt as to the result as these proposed increases in salary are presented. This is a glorious day in the history of our country. The additional salary allowances we gave two or three days ago, of $120 to each of 240,000 of the highest-paid clerical employees in the world, was merely the barrage fire in preparation for the events of this day; and to-day, with banners flying, gloriously, the membership of this House, in their assault on the Treasury, go over the top, and these absurd amendments are put on this bill. And there seems to be no place to stop. This bill was not recommended by any efficiency committee. These increases and the original bill itself were not recommended by the head of any department, but that does not make any difference. The elections this fall are approaching, and it is an inexpensive proposition to vote here to-day for these demands on the Treasury, to be shared by 300,000 or 400,000 men in the United States, and then go back home. It is an easy proposition. It makes campaign expenses lighter upon the men who have the courage to vote here for these things, and who have the courage to lay these enormous expenses upon the taxpayers of this country. It is useless to oppose any of these amendments. The only chance the country has with reference to this bill is that all of these additions will be put on hoping that the Senate of the United States will interpose or that the President may interpose his veto. That is the only chance the Treasury has against the movement started upon it here in the House two or three days ago, and carried on with such magnificent success this day. Just a few minutes ago we voted to increase the salaries of rural carriers 20 per cent. I asked the author of this amendment how much it would cost and he did not know how much it would cost the Treasury. It is not interesting to the men who stand for these propositions, it does not interest them, what kind of a demand it makes upon the Treasury of the United States. But I called up the Assistant Postmaster General of the United States and asked him what that amendment would amount to, and he said an addition of 20 per cent to the salaries of rural carriers meant the small item of $20,000,000 a year. Of course, that is not much with the elections approaching. That is not much with these clerks, all of them organizing. That is not much when the millions who belong to the American Federation of Labor stand back of them pledging their aid and support. This charge that you are making upon the Treasury this day does not amount to much. Where is this money to come from? You are getting part of it by the most oppressive system of taxation this country has ever known. You are getting the most of it by borrowing it, and after this war is over, if it last two or three years longer, we face a budget of $5,000,000,000 every year containing a fixed annual interest charge upon the money we are borrowing to pay the extravagances of this Congress of perhaps $2,000,000,000 every year. But that does not make any difference. The movement upon the Treasury has commenced, a glorious movement. Keep the banners flying; keep up the movement; for God's sake do not stop it!

This movement is led by my genial colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], one of the leaders on the Republican side, and back of him stand grandly almost the solid Republican membership of this House, and there are enough Democratic Members following him to make victory sure. The vaults of the Treasury lie open—ask every Government employee to come in and help himself. They are organized, all of them. They think they can defeat any one of you, and you seem to think they can. Of course, your reelection is more important than the safety of the funds we are collecting by taxing the people as they never have been taxed before and by borrowing from the people the money we do not take from them by taxation. Your constituents—those of them who are not the beneficiaries of these salary grabs—were probably under the impression when they voted for you that you would act as reliable custodians of the great fund you are collecting from them. But no such plebeian impulse controls the gentlemen who to-day so grandly and generously vote to give away money which does not belong to them.

The people are paying now 3-cent letter postage without complaining, for the reason that one-third of it goes into the war funds of the Government, and they expect to return to 2-cent letter postage when the war is over. But you have already added $130,000,000 increase per annum to the expenses of this department, and the bill is not yet concluded—the raid still continues. If the bill you are passing with so much enthusiasm becomes a law—and these are not war-time measures; you are making them permanent—do you realize what you have done? You have made impossible a return to 2-cent letter postage. And that is not all. You have made absolutely necessary legislation in the very near future which will compel newspapers and magazines to pay the entire cost of carriage through the mails. And that is not all. You have made it necessary to raise letter postage to 4 cents at least. Of course, these little matters will not interfere with the progress of this salary grab, but I am calling attention to them. There may be enough of us to compel roll calls on all these propositions, and of course you all want to be able to show by your record votes how generous you have been with the money entrusted to your care.

It already appears that people, on account of the 3-cent letter postage, are economizing in the matter of mailing letters—and the extra 1 cent will only bring into our war funds $50,000,000 per year. We pay the expense of the Postal Service out of the sale of stamps, and if you add to the expenses of this department $130,000,000 per year, and if an increase of 1 cent only brings in $50,000,000, you can see that when these charges you are making to-day become effective even an additional 3 cents is a possibility, and unless the war ends soon the 6-cent letter postage rate is in sight during the period of the war, with a possible reduction to 5 cents when the war ends.

In order to get at the Treasury of the United States in this magnificent and apparently successful raid you have suspended the rules of the House—you have overruled the decisions of the Chairman, clearly based on all the precedents, in order to give to thousands of clerks and letter carriers in first and second class post offices each an ultimate salary of $1,500 per year, and in order to give every railway postal clerk an ultimate salary of $2,000 a year. The farmers you are taxing to do this have an average annual income of less than $700 per year, and the wage earners you are taxing have an average annual income of considerably less even than that. But, of course, little considerations of this character ought not to interfere with the generous motives which inspire so many of you to-day. I am sorry to have interrupted the hilarity which prevails here this afternoon—on with the raid on the Treasury; let joy be absolutely unconfined. In France they celebrate the anniversary of the day when the Bastile fell—we ought to celebrate hereafter the anniversary of this day on which the Treasury falls before your courageous, magnificent advance. At some time in the future the taxpayers upon whom you are placing these burdens may also organize—but I ought not to call attention to such an unpleasant possibility.

The raid you successfully pulled off two or three days ago, when you added $120 per year to the salary of over 240,000 clerical employees, will cost the country over $30,000,000 per year. The raid you are pulling off to-day will cost $130,000,000 per year. The minimum wage bill when it passes will cost another $50,000,000 per year. For the aggregate amount of these three items you could build every year 15 great battleships, and this would mean that in three or four years we would be invincible upon the seas and would be able to command the peace of the world. But, of course, this is also a matter which ought not to be mentioned on the present joyful occasion. Even after your magnificent victory of to-day something may happen to keep this bill from becoming a law. Of course, nothing can be expected here, but some patriotic influence may yet intervene to protect the Treasury against the events of this day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one minute, so that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended one minute, for the purpose of asking him a question. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I shall have to object.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, is the debate upon this amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. There have been five minutes debate on each side, and more.

Mr. MOON. Is the debate exhausted on the amendment that is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOON. Let us have a vote on it.

Mr. BLACK. I want to amend the Tague amendment by adding to it a proviso—

Provided, That this shall not alter or modify the three classes of railway mail clerks as now provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACK offers to amend the Tague amendment as follows: Add at the end of the Tague amendment:

"Provided further, That this shall not alter or modify the three classes of railway mail clerks as now provided by law."

Mr. BLACK. I think I understand what the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to accomplish by his amendment. It is, as I understand it, this: Under the pending bill grade No. 1, for instance, has been raised from $900 to $1,100, and so has each of the other grades been raised $200 per annum; and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] intends that the Postmaster General shall place the $900 man in the new grade No. 1 at $1,100, and so on up the line, giving recognition to the new grades which have been established. But under the language of his amendment it might be construed as directing the Postmaster General to promote all railway mail clerks automatically one grade each year up to the $2,000 grade. I have not been in favor of this new reclassification plan and have offered an amendment to strike it out and substitute percentage increases similar to the percentage increases proposed for other postal employees, but the House has refused to adopt my amendment and therefore I would not want to offer any obstruction to these men going into the new grades which the House intends by the adoption of the new classification plan.

Under the law as it now exists, as pointed out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], the grades of railway mail clerks are classified into three classes, namely, classes A, B, and C. It is not that way as to postal clerks and carriers, but it is as to railway mail clerks. I do not understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts intends to alter or modify the three classes—namely, A, B, C—but merely to put the railway mail clerks into the new grades which this bill will establish, and so I think the amendment ought to be adopted which I have offered to the Tague amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman cite the committee to the section of law wherein the railway mail clerks are divided into three classes?

Mr. BLACK. It is section 1549 of the Postal Laws and Regulations. I have stated the substance of it to the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will examine the phraseology of the Tague amendment, he will see that it is obligatory on the Postmaster General to promote the respective clerks up to the maximum salary.

Mr. BLACK. I do not think it would be that way with my amendment adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, there would not be any purpose in the classification.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; it would put the men in the new grades under the new salary basis which the House has adopted, but would not repeal the three classes, A, B, and C.

Mr. STAFFORD. The maximum salary in class B is $1,500. Does the gentleman mean to say it would be $2,000?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not understand it that way.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what is the purpose of his amendment?

Mr. TAGUE. It is merely to have the different grades now fixed by law, previous to the passage of this act, go into the grades that are defined in the present bill. In other words, a man getting $1,100 under the old law, under this bill would get $1,300, and he would automatically go from $1,300 to $1,400 increase in the grade defined in this law.

Mr. MADDEN. In other words, if he was in class 1 at $1,000 a year, he would remain in class 1 unless he was entitled to be promoted, and he would be increased in compensation $200 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The law would still restrict the salary of class A to $1,200, class B to $1,300, and class C to $1,500. I want these clerks to receive a fair increase, but no such increase as provided in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, where they all will be promoted automatically until they receive $2,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAGUE) there were—82 ayes and 42 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the figures "$2,000," strike out the period and insert the following: "and chief clerks at $2,250."

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, as I am advised, there are 120 chief clerks to be affected by this amendment, should it pass.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman and to the House that the Post Office appropriation bill, passed in December, carried 6,400 promotions and included the men in the class referred to in the amendment he proposes. There is no necessity to have anything done for them in this bill, because they are already provided for.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, I contend that every clerk in the Postal Department throughout the United States will get an increase of salary as provided by this bill and as provided by former appropriation bills, except 120 chief clerks, whose salary is not affected by either this bill or any other appropriation bill made at this session of Congress. There are 120 of them who will continue to receive $2,100 a year. These men have a tremendously important duty to perform. The law has always recognized that their services were worth about $450 more than the services of the highest paid clerks under them. Under the law as it will stand after the bill is enacted their salary will be within $100 of the highest paid clerks. If this amendment should pass, it will increase their salary only $150. The increase is less than the increase of any other class of clerks. I submit to the fair consideration of this House that these 120 men have not received just treatment, if this amendment fails to carry.

Mr. Chairman, I want to turn from this amendment that I have introduced to say a word concerning other features of this bill. Uncle Sam is the biggest and richest employer of labor in the United States. We boast for him the distinction of being the most kind and generous of all who have entered into the field of labor employment. I am sorry that statements in his praise are not always true. The Federal Government in this connection in too many instances is neither kind, just, nor generous in dealing with those who are called upon to do its work in the various fields of Federal endeavor. In many instances there has been no increase of either salary or wages in many years, yet within that time the cost of living has so far increased until to-day this inflated cost has depreciated the value of a dollar at least one-half, and in many instances the purchasing power is even less than one-half. The private employer of labor has taken this into account long ago, and the wage of those in private activities has been materially increased, perhaps not to the point of absolute justice, but the increase has been a material one. This is not true of public employment. [Applause.]

However, there is a ray of hope struggling through the clouds for those who are in the service of the Government. The Congress of the United States at last has awakened to the fact that these thousands of poorly paid men and women shall come into a part, at least, of their just reward for a long and faithful service. A few days ago a bill passed this House carrying increase of salaries for department clerks in Washington. Every bill of this nature has had my earnest support, because it seems to me but justice. I shall vote for the pending bill with only one regret, and that is the increase of pay to some of these faithful employees of our great Postal System is not enough. I would like to see a greater increase than this bill provides be given to each carrier of rural mails. Remember these men out of their present pay must either own or hire at least two horses and a conveyance for the entire working year. If he owns this team and conveyance, or whether he does not, we must not fail to take into account the original cost to him or some one else and couple that with the fact that there is a constant cost of the everyday upkeep, with prices of feed increasing from month to month so rapidly that I do not even know the cost of hay and oats and corn and straw to-day. I do know, however, the cost is three and maybe four times that of only a short period back. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it may be that the carrier has provided himself with a motor vehicle in order that he speed up the delivery of mail to anxious patrons who await his daily arrival hoping for tidings from a son or brother now in trench or camp. If so, his outlay for gasoline, tires, and repairs amounts to fabulous sums in comparison with his meager wage. Neither has the high cost of living in its sweep of the country missed this class of workers for Uncle Sam. Before this class of men can buy their living necessities when their pay check comes, they must first take care of the upkeep bills, and when this is done there is such a little left that in many instances their families are in want. This ought never to be said truthfully of the employees of the greatest Government upon the face of the earth. [Applause.]

Confronted with all these facts there are some who reject the demands of postal clerks and carriers for a living wage on the ground of public economy. I want economy, and rigid economy, in the expenditure of public funds, but not the economy, so called, that makes our Government mean and miserly. Not the economy that withholds from those who perform an honest service a just reward. Not the economy that will stunt and dwarf the children of these carriers of the mail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 2, line 13, insert as new paragraph the following:

"Clerks, carriers, and railway postal clerks who are detailed to serve in a foreign country shall, during the period of their foreign service, receive a salary 20 per cent in excess of that herein provided for the grade to which they belong."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, and I am very glad that I shall have an opportunity to vote for it in the near future.

I have offered the amendment which has just been read in order to give a 20 per cent bonus to the men who are being sent to France by the postal authorities to deliver the mail to the soldiers who are now with the American Expeditionary Forces. Our soldiers receive an increase of 20 per cent in their pay for foreign service. My suggestion is that somewhat the same considerations which make it proper to increase the pay of the soldier when he is overseas make it proper to increase the pay of the postal employee when he is overseas.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Is it not a fact that these men who were sent over there get extra pay?

Mr. ROGERS. The only extra pay that they receive, as I understand it, is a very small allowance for commutation of quarters and rations. I think all they so receive is $2.50 a day, both for board and lodging, which will probably prove less than their actual and necessary expenses. I want to call the attention of the House to a statement which was cabled from France by the Associated Press three or four days ago, and which was published throughout the United States in the press. The Associated Press dispatch says in part:

BAKER'S ARRIVAL SPURS AMERICANS AT FRONT AND IN CAMP TO ACTIVITY—"OLD MAN WILL FIND US READY WHENEVER HE COMES," MEN SAY—MAIL DELAYS CAUSE WORRY.

[By the Associated Press.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE,
Tuesday, March 12.

In Army circles there is general gratification over the coming of Mr. Baker, in order that he may see at close hand what has been accomplished thus far in the face of the obstacles and the difficulties of distance, and especially the moral and physical condition of the troops, so that he may carry home a personal knowledge of easily remedied deficiencies and complaints.

DELAY OF MAIL SERIOUS.

The most serious of the deficiencies and complaints surround the Army mail service. Everywhere the rank and file complain of the absence or great delay in mail from home.

Company officers generally say the mail problem is one of the most serious they have to contend with, because the men become lonely and anxious in the absence of word from their families. The ordinary mails are from one month to six weeks ahead of the Army mails, and the officers express the belief that there would be no better factor for the happiness of the men than the most expeditious mail service it is possible to devise—even a faster service than through the ordinary civilian channels.

If this article is to be believed—and I think we shall agree that an Associated Press dispatch is always intended to represent the fact and does not display any partisan prejudice or bias—it appears that the ordinary civilian mails to France are from one month to six weeks ahead of the Army mail. A friend here in Washington has just told me of his experience. He received yesterday a reply to a letter which he wrote a civilian member of his family in Paris 35 days ago. The letter had traveled from Washington to its destination in Paris and the answer had been written and returned to him in Washington, all in 35 days. Members of this House know that the average time that the soldiers' mail would take for the round trip would be from two to three times as long. I submit that if there is to be any distinction between the civilian mail and the soldier mail it ought all to be in favor of an expeditious delivery to the soldiers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman advised as to what the scale of pay is for the postal employees connected with the delivery of mails in France?

Mr. ROGERS. My understanding is that they receive the pay of their grade in this country and an allowance for food and quarters.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the gentleman's understanding. Does he know whether that is the fact?

Mr. ROGERS. That is my information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the employees doing service in connection with the Auditor for the War Department are paid much more liberal salaries for service abroad out of lump-sum appropriations than they receive in this country, and I rose to ascertain information as to whether a similar system does not prevail with respect to the postal employees over there?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I want to say that without information upon the subject of what the policy of the Postal Department is with respect to the pay of these men abroad I do not think we ought to adopt any amendment of any kind to this bill on this proposition, because no one knows what the department is doing. It is not fair to adopt the amendment without information. We have not the information, and we are not going to be able to get it, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, my time has expired. As an argument has just been made in my time in opposition to my amendment I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman understand how these men who have gone to France are paid?

Mr. ROGERS. My information is they are paid the amount of the grade which they carry in this country.

Mr. MOON. Well, they are paid in addition all their expenses.

Mr. ROGERS. I have stated that it is my understanding that they are paid $2.50 per day for rations and lodging.

Mr. MOON. No man goes over except upon his own request.

Mr. ROGERS. That is true. Most of our soldiers in France are volunteers. Is that to their discredit?

Mr. MADDEN. Hundreds are making applications to go.

Mr. ROGERS. And hundreds are making applications because they want to render patriotic service in connection with Army work on the other side.

Mr. MADDEN. If a man has a home and can stay at home, and wants to take this salary and go to France and get the additional pay furnished for such service, why is it the gentleman wants to increase the salary of a man after he has gone over without any intimation on the part of the Post Office Department as to its necessity?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman did not apply that argument when the pay of soldiers who went to France was very properly increased because of their over-seas service. I think that many of the postal men who volunteered to go over to France are moved by just the same patriotic motive as that which actuated the soldiers.

Postmaster General Burleson, in response to House resolution 232, which I introduced and which was adopted by the House, said (H. Doc. No. 892) under date of January 31, 1918:

> The time required to transmit postal matter from the United States to the members of the American expeditionary force in France has been found to be from 15 to 30 days.

Every soldier in our forces and every wife and mother of every soldier knows that Postmaster General Burleson had been misinformed when he made this statement. Of course it was difficult to cooperate with the Post Office Department in securing an improvement in the service when the Postmaster General has officially stated that the service was unimprovable. Lately I am glad to observe a modification of this rather uncompromising attitude. The Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Praeger, recently admitted the delays before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, but attributed them to the Army and not to his own department.

Mr. Praeger, who is in charge of over-seas mail, testified before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on February 16. A statement has recently been printed in the Official Bulletin of March 16, which is described as a "statement given out by the Post Office Department," and which presumably emanates officially from Mr. Praeger's office. These two sources, taken together, refute absolutely and definitely the sweeping indorsement by Mr. Burleson of the mail service. They show that the delays which everyone recognizes, but which the Postmaster General denies, are attributable to at least five causes.

DELAY 1.

Permit me to quote the language of the testimony:

> Mr. PRAEGER. The mail at these terminals—
> Referring to the terminals in New York City and Chicago—> is distributed without any information from the War Department. We don't know how to make up the mail except by the fact that letters are coming in for this unit or for that unit. Out of that we build up, day by day, a new section, showing that there are new troops there because there is mail arriving.
> In the Navy we handle the mail for the entire naval forces, but the Navy furnishes us by telegram or by radio a change in the shift of its ships on the day they take place. The Army gives us no information whatever, as, I assume, it is a military necessity to hold it secret. So all we can do is to make up all the mail we receive for Company A, of the —— Infantry, in one sack, and label it so. (Praeger hearings, p. 114.)

DELAY 2.

> Mr. PRAEGER. After the mail is made up in the New York office and put in a sealed bag addressed to the company we have two ways of sending it. One is by the French liners. They are running very irregularly—sometimes 14 days, sometimes 18, and we have known it to be longer, nearly a month, between the arrival and departure of French liners. They used to have enough ships to operate, I think, a semi-weekly service. Then when the war broke out it got to be weekly service. Now they run irregularly. We have had intermissions of two weeks frequently between sailings of those French liners.
> Our other source is to send it on the transports. We can send on the transports mail only to such an extent as the embarkation officers will permit to go aboard. We can not control it. They are to tell us how much mail they can take and when they will take it. They will send, say, for example, 3,000 sacks at noon to-morrow or 1,000 sacks at noon to-morrow. We may have waiting eight or ten thousand sacks, but 3,000 sacks are all that they will take. (Praeger hearings, p. 116.)

DELAY 3.

> Mr. PRAEGER. That mail, arriving in France at one of the ports, is dispatched by a post-office official, who is furnished, confidentially, by the Army there with the location of all the units in France. That information from the Army to the postal authorities has heretofore been uniformly 8 to 10 days after the unit is finally settled in its location. Sometimes it is longer and sometimes a little faster, but not very frequently. (Praeger hearings, p. 116.)

Mr. Praeger has recently told me personally that all mail for the New England troops was, early in the year, held up and undelivered for several weeks, because the military authorities would not tell the postal authorities of the new location of these troops.

DELAY 4—WAITS FOR DAYS ON CARS.

> The mail that is unloaded from the ships must frequently wait days at the port before cars can be spared from the heavily burdened railroads in France to move the mail.
> When the United States Army Postal Service was first inaugurated, mail reached all of the camps in the country in one to two days, according to distance and train connections. To-day mail, by reason of its vast volume and the heavy demands on the railroads, frequently takes six days to reach Gen. Pershing's headquarters. (Official Bulletin, Mar. 16.)

DELAY 5.

> Mr. PRAEGER. When one unit moves from this section, or from this section to that section, the Army will not give us in all cases that information maybe within 10, 12, or 15 days. Meanwhile the mail continues to go to the old place. (Praeger hearings, p. 116.)

There may be, and doubtless are, other sources of delay. I confine myself solely to those which are of official record. Of course, all these delays can not be eliminated, but I can not believe all are incapable of improvement. Mr. Praeger sums up thus what seems to be the fundamental difficulty:

> I know that we could give a greatly improved service if the War Department's idea of what constitutes military necessity and secrecy were liberalized. But we are entirely subject to their direction in every step that we take, and wherever their idea of secrecy conflicts with our service we must give in. (Praeger hearings, pp. 121, 122.)

So, in spite of Mr. Burleson's statement, there are delays.

Very likely, Mr. Praeger's "passing of the buck" is justified. I do not know. No one can find out. Assuming it to be well founded, is there any adequate military reason? Can not the War Department trust the Post Office Department and give instantly the information concerning movements of troops which will promote prompt delivery? Can not complete coordination be attained? Great Britain has no such fear or reluctance. In a previous speech I have told the House in detail how Great Britain has systematized her mail service and how soldiers in the front-line trenches receive London letters the day following their mailing, and mail from the most remote parts of the British Isles within 48 hours.

France and Germany also lay the greatest stress on prompt and reliable mail service to their soldiers. It is not with them a matter of sentiment; it is a matter of morale and of urgent military necessity.

To show the importance of the mental well-being of the soldiers if an army's efficiency is to be kept at its height, a recent statement by Lieut. Gen. Baron von Ardenne, one of Germany's foremost military commentators, is of interest. This article appeared in the Berliner Tageblatt of January 4, and was reprinted in the New York Times of March 17:

> If, however, the things pertaining to the material field have a high importance, those which are not to strengthen the stomach but the heart and mind have one much higher. First in importance among these are the consciousness of victory, the faith in the supreme army command, and, not least, the confidence that the folks at home share the interests and hopes of the army. Good news from other battle fields flashes through the troops like an electric shock. For instance, what enthusiasm was raised alternately by the news of the double battles of Worth and Saarbrucken in 1870 among the armies marching separately! And so the French attack in the Aisne-Champagne Battle of April, 1917, was so extraordinarily powerful because previously the news had been spread among the troops of the victory of the English at Arras and the declaration of war upon Germany by America. Indescribable was the enthusiasm of our fighters in Flanders when they received the news of our victories in Italy and the conclusion of the armistice with Russia.

WARNING AGAINST PESSIMISM.

> The mental life of the army is extraordinarily sensitive and is particularly receptive to the changes of feeling at home. Those at home are to be expressly warned against any expressions of pessimism. And vice versa, reports of the abuse of German prisoners by our enemies are to be avoided. These reports have filled many a heart at home with anxious care, which has then come back to the front. The German Army command does not need these complaints to cause it to adopt the measures necessary to improve the lot of our poor prisoners. That among the other mental imponderables the army mail service, that carries the news from house and farm, from wife and child, from town and city, occupies first place is known to everybody who understands the depths of the German soul. That gifts sent from home at Christmas time possess a much higher charm than usual is shown by the warm thanks of those who receive them.

The contact with the fatherland has the effect of something mysterious, something holy. When our divisions roll through the broad German Empire on their journeys from one border to the other the railroad trip of several days is a rich source of strength and of confident consciousness of victory.

The plight of our boys is in at least one respect worse than that of the French, the British, or the German soldiers.

French, British, and German soldiers are enabled to go to their homes on furlough every few months. Our boys will not return to the United States until the end of the war. There is no shipping to carry them and they could not be spared if there were. The letter is the only link with home. Let us have that link perfected.

Surely, in the light of the experience of other armies, it can not be that the Army should not give every aid to the swiftest possible deliveries of mail to the soldiers. Every member of the overseas force, high in rank or low in rank, is eager, nay restless, for an improvement. I am glad that Secretary Baker is to learn for himself its importance. The country will not long tolerate a lack of coordination in a matter of this extreme moment.

I have no personal grievance in this matter. I have no desire to attack or embarrass any department of the Government or any individual. My purpose is to be constructive and not destructive. But I deeply deplore the hopeless inadequacy in the Postal Service to France, of which I learned when I was on the spot in December and which the Associated Press dispatch indicates has not improved in the last three months.

No one can deny that civilian mail to France is far swifter than soldier mail.

Why should our soldiers in France be discriminated against? The message from home—the news that the wife and the mother are well—is of the essence in our Army's morale. This is not a matter of sentiment merely but a vital military necessity. Let us temporize no longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to observe only that this amendment certainly does not appeal to the intelligence and good sense of this House on a question of this sort and I am not going to argue it at all. If the House is in the humor to pass any more legislation along that line in addition to what it has already I hope we may rise soon and wait until Monday for something else.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is the present status of business before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. A discussion of the Rogers amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has debate been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has; but the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure as to the merit in the amendment for the proposed increase in pay of the postal employees in foreign service. What I want to call to the attention of the House is the fact that the Postal Service is very deficient so far as the service to the soldiers is concerned. It takes months for a letter to reach a soldier from his parents and it takes months to receive a letter from the soldier to the parents. It is important that this service be immediately improved. The morale of the soldier depends upon how he feels. He is always anxious to hear from home. He wants to hear from his mother and father, his sister, his brother. He wants to hear how things are going on on the farm, in the shop, in the factory, in the mill, in his place of business; if he is a married man he wants to know how his wife and children are, and if he has a sweetheart he wants to hear from her. The courage of the man on the morning of the battle depends largely upon the news from home. If the letter came and was full of cheer the soldier will be fit for the hardest trial of physical and moral courage. The boys ought to get a letter from home once a week. That letter ought to contain nothing that would distress the soldier. It ought to contain no bad news. He ought not even to fear bad news. He ought to have nothing but encouragement from home—news that everything is all right; and, I repeat, he should have a letter from home at least once a week. I would, if I could, get that suggestion into every home that has a soldier on the front. If a young man without relatives has gone from any community some one should write him a good cheery letter to show him that there is an interest in him. It will help him do his best in the camp, at the front, and in the trenches. Now, if the Postal Service over there needs additional men, or if those men need additional pay both should be provided in order that this service may be rendered to the soldiers who are in the trenches and behind the trenches and serving on the front and in the camps and cantonments. It is important to the country that the soldier should feel that he has encouragement from home, as important that he know that everything is well at home on the morning of the battle as to know that his arms and ammunition are in good condition.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman be willing to take my word that everything that can be done to adjust the disposition, delivery, and transportation, and all that, of the mail is being done, so that there will be no complaint in the near future about it? I happen to know the details of the work that is being done, and I want to say this of the Postmaster General and those in charge, that there is not a thing that can be done that is not being done to get that mail service out of the chaotic condition it has been in. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am glad that is so. It has taken a long, long time.

Now, I wish the relatives, friends, and sweethearts of every soldier in the service would write to him once a week. It should be done.

Mr. Chairman, this bill with the increases provided should pass. Then the law should be so administered as to pay the increases provided for. It will greatly aid in restoring the Postal Service to its former efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOBECK: Page 2, line 13, after the figures "$2,000," insert:

"Provided, That railway postal clerks that have been heretofore transferred, or may be transferred hereafter, to terminal post offices shall be paid the same salaries as had been paid them before such transfer, and the clerks so transferred shall not be lowered in grade by reason of such transfer."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I make the point of order. This is a question of salary increase and not a question of classification.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order, then.

Mr. MADDEN. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman be heard. I will not argue it. I reserve it.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, this is not raising salaries. Men have been transferred from the railway mail post office on trains to the terminal stations, and their salaries have been lowered. They have been demoted. I know men that have given many years of service, who were in grades of $1,400, $1,500, $1,600, and $1,700, and who have been ordered to go to work for the Postmaster General or his department for $1,200 in the railway terminal offices. The reason why the Postmaster General and his department have said they did not pay them more than $1,200 was that they did not pay the clerks in the local post offices more than $1,200, and that these men should not receive more. So, it has been a demotion by order of the Postmaster General, and it is not fair to the men who have given years of service in the Railway Mail Service that they should be transferred on an order, and then deliberately have their salaries lowered on an order. And they ought to be entitled to the same that they have been getting, or, if transferred hereafter, should have the same salary in the terminals that they had on the railways. I do not see where it is an increase of salary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman want to be heard?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that this is a bill to increase the compensation of the employees in the Postal Service and not a bill to regulate the administrative side of the Postal Service. The amendment offered by my friend from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] seeks to direct the Postmaster General as to how he shall conduct the business of the service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule unless the gentleman wants to be heard. The Chair believes the amendment is in order and overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In opposition to it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. Unless some gentleman objects, I would like to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will give this matter due consideration. There is no provision that is contained in this bill that is more important, if the House wishes to do justice at this time to a very worthy class of our railway mail operatives.

Before I go any further I want to say that I approve the bill as a whole, and especially that part which raises the salaries of the rural carriers, who have been working for the past year or more under circumstances so onerous as to be fairly heartbreaking. The expense of the upkeep of their equipment alone has in many cases absorbed the greater part of their salaries. Hay and feed of all kinds have risen "out of sight," and the prospect is for higher rather than lower prices for the ensuing year. Only employees of the most faithful character, who took not merely an interest but a pride in their work, would have stuck to their jobs under such trying circumstances.

Now, as showing the propriety of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK], let me explain the situation. The terminal post offices were created at railway terminals, where large quantities of the mail are transferred and is assorted while being held, thereby saving time and enabling the sorting to be done quicker and easier. The plan was an excellent one, for it enabled the mail to be forwarded more expeditiously, saved space on the trains, and saved work; in short, it made for efficiency and economy, and I congratulate the Post Office Department on its adoption. Here, however, my congratulations must end. It necessitated taking many clerks off the trains and putting them in the terminals. This change was necessary and proper, but there was no reason why their salaries should have thereby been lowered, but, on the contrary, every reason why they should have remained as before. The clerks were just as efficient as before—in fact, accomplished more work. The experience and knowledge which they had gained by long practice entitled them to a raise rather than a cut when so transferred.

The law heretofore enacted has been evaded. It was not the intention when provision was made for the transfer of these employees from the Railway Mail Service to the terminal post offices that any of them should be lowered in salary, and a provision was inserted in a former statute which was intended to prevent this being done. That provision has been plowed around by giving the clerks transferred the choice of taking some out-of-the-way route which would remove them from their homes or accepting a position in the terminals at a lower salary.

Now, if the House desires that these railway mail employees who, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] has stated, have given the best years of their lives to the service, perfecting themselves in the service of the Government, should not be demoted, contrary to the spirit of the law as it now stands, this amendment ought to prevail. I believe that this will put a stop to this practice that the House endeavored to put a stop to in former years, but failed, so far as I am informed.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DILL. I want to say that I have had two instances of that in my own town, in my own district, in the last two months, where that has been done.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And the gentleman agrees with me?

Mr. DILL. Yes. I think it is a very important amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think the Postmaster General would pay any attention to it if we passed it here?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This amendment is very explicit. Its terms are clear and unmistakable, and it would take care not only of the cases which may arise in the future, but of those which happened in the past.

I am sorry that the House seems to be impatient as the hour grows late and to be inclined to vote down all amendments now offered regardless of their merits. I know that it is desirable to finish the bill to-day, if possible, but we ought to do justice, no matter how long we sit. These terminal clerks who have been taken from the trains are the only class out of all the great body of Government employees whose wages have actually been reduced, and we will not do justice to them unless we restore them to their former grades and salaries before we make the increase and prevent in the future their salaries being lowered by reason of transfer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LOBECK. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 56.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks for tellers. All those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One gentleman has risen—not a sufficient number. Tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS: Page 2, line 2, after the word "city," insert the words "and village."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer is to raise the pay of village carriers, and I submit that it is not subject to a point of order. I want the attention of the committee to this amendment, which I regard as a meritorious one and one offered in all good faith.

This amendment is designed to raise the pay of village carriers. The pay of the city-delivery carriers is provided for in this section, and this amendment proposes to put, after the word "city" and before the word "delivery," in line 2, page 2, the words "and village," so that the section will read "carriers in the city and village delivery service."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. We have no such municipal organization as "village" in Pennsylvania. The organizations there are boroughs, townships, and counties. I do not know what you have in Oklahoma. "Village" would not mean anything with us.

Mr. HASTINGS. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that they are classed as village-delivery carriers.

Mr. EMERSON. In the Post Office Department?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes. Here is the distinction: In cities where the postal receipts are more than $10,000, those who deliver the mails are called "city-delivery carriers," but in any city where the receipts are under $10,000 that service is called the "village-delivery service." Now, those who are engaged in the village-delivery service, let me say to the members of the committee, receive the sum of $50 a month, which, I think, was increased last year $5 a month, so that they now receive, as I am advised by the Post Office Department, $660 per annum.

The village-delivery carriers render practically the same service that the city-delivery carriers render. They have the same responsibilities and they perform the same duties, and if this amendment is adopted it will permit the increase of those performing village-delivery service up to the class of those who perform city-delivery service. In other words, the minimum amount that the city-delivery carriers receive under the terms of this bill, if enacted, will be $1,000, and the village-delivery carriers will receive a like amount.

Now, for the information of the committee——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. In just a minute; then I will be glad to. There are 498 cities in the United States that have this village delivery service, and there are 715 such carriers in the United States; and, as I said a moment ago, these carriers receive a maximum of $660 per annum.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman has just answered the question I was going to ask him. I wanted to find out how many villages had such service.

Mr. HASTINGS. Four hundred and ninety-eight in the United States, as I am advised by the Post Office Department; and there are 715 village-delivery carriers. Some villages have only one carrier, some have two.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to.

Mr. MOON. What does the gentleman say about the point of order?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOON. I am inclined to think that it is. The section to which this amendment is offered is for the increase of pay for postal clerks and city carriers in the classified service. The gentleman proposes, as I understand it, to increase the pay of the clerks in the village deliveries. The village delivery is an experimental proposition purely. These clerks are paid by the postmaster in the village out of a lump-sum allowance allowed by the Post Office Department purely as an experiment. I will say to the Chair that I do not think it is in order, because of these reasons. It does not pertain to the classified service, and that is what we are considering.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, let me say that the village-delivery service is past the experimental stage. It was inaugurated some time ago. In the year 1912—some six years ago—it was inaugurated, and it has been extended throughout the United States, until the service is now in 498 villages.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is mistaken about that. There is not enough appropriation to go one-tenth over the country. There are only two small appropriations made for it, as an experimental proposition. I think the whole appropriation now is less than half a million dollars.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have the figures given me by the Post Office Department to the effect that the service has been extended to 498 villages throughout the United States. I am not mistaken. These figures were given me by the department.

Mr. MOON. That is not one-tenth of them.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. ROUSE. I want to ask the gentleman if his amendment should be held in order would he be willing to advance the men to the sixth and eighth grades?

Mr. HASTINGS. The question of the advance of the men would be left to the Post Office Department.

Mr. ROUSE. If the amendment is agreed to in that particular section, would it not be mandatory?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; as I interpret it, they would go into the first grade and receive $1,000.

Mr. ROUSE. And the next year they would be advanced, and so on, each year.

Mr. HASTINGS. They would be entitled to be advanced, of course, under the law and regulations of the department. I think these people ought to receive more than $660 per annum.

Mr. ROUSE. Does the gentleman think they ought to receive $1,500?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; I think that is too high, and they would not get it for five or six years. By that time they would be promoted to other branches of the service, city carriers or clerks in larger offices.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Are the village carriers in the classified service?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not understand that they are, but they can be covered into the classified service by the department. That should not determine their compensation. Those who perform this service are now underpaid.

This bill provides for an increase in the pay of rural carriers. A rural carrier on a standard route of 24 miles receives $1,200 per annum. This bill would increase his compensation 20 per cent, or $240 per annum, and add $24 per mile to his yearly salary for each additional mile his route may extend over 24 miles. I think the increase is justified in each case. These carriers perform a very important service.

In this connection it might be interesting to recall that Congress by the act of March 3, 1893, appropriated $10,000 to experiment with rural mail delivery, but the money was not used. Another appropriation of $20,000 was made by the act of June 16, 1894, but was not used. A third appropriation was made on June 9, 1896, of $10,000. The first experimental service was established on October 1, 1896, when three routes were started in West Virginia. The service was rapidly expanded until we now have more than 43,000 rural routes throughout the United States, for which we appropriate annually more than $53,000,000.

These carriers must provide themselves with horses and buggies or automobiles. They must buy feed for their horses or gasoline for their machines. All these supplies were secured at extraordinarily high prices during the past few years. For all their other equipment and supplies they must pay exceptionally high prices. I regard the increase of $240 per year as reasonable and just. It is fair and not disproportionate to their increased expenditures, which present war conditions cause. For this reason I voted for the amendment to increase the pay of rural carriers from 15 to 20 per cent per annum.

The bill provides an increase for city letter carriers of approximately $200 per annum, and for an increase in the salaries of railway postal clerks. I think both increases are justified and am glad to support them.

Section 2 provides for an increase in pay to assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices, departmental clerks, and post-office clerks, laborers, watchmen, printers, chauffeurs, messengers, charwomen, janitors in post offices, and per diem employees, and all other postal employees not enumerated in section 1. Where their annual compensation is less than $800 the increase is 20 per cent; where it is in excess of $800 and not more than $1,200, the increase is 15 per cent; and where it is between $1,200 and $1,800, the increase is 10 per cent. This increase ought to be extended to third-class offices. I understand that an amendment is to be offered so as to include post offices of the third class, and I shall be glad to give it my support.

In section 3 of the bill an increase in pay for offices of the fourth class is provided. Fourth-class postmasters and clerks in third-class post offices perform more service and get less compensation in proportion to the work done and the responsibility placed upon them, in my judgment, than any other employees of the Government. I am very glad, indeed, to support the amendment which will be proposed to increase the pay of employees in the third-class offices, as I am glad to support this provision of the bill for additional pay for fourth-class postmasters, giving them 100 per cent of the cancellations on the first $100 or less per quarter, instead of the first $50 or less per quarter.

Section 6 of the bill authorizes the Postmaster General to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes in the vicinity of such cities of the United States as he may select, and for this experimental purpose he is authorized to use not to exceed $300,000. This is a very important experiment, both to the residents of the cities and towns and the farmers who live in the vicinity of the routes. I predict that as in the case of the rural-route service this truck service will be greatly expanded in the near future, and will enable farmers and truck growers to supply customers regularly at a minimum cost of delivery, resulting in a greatly reduced cost of vegetables, poultry, and dairy products to consumers and a better market for truck growers and farmers. I think it is a splendid provision and am glad to give it my support. I want to invite the earnest attention of everyone to it.

Section 7 provides for the transportation of mails by aeroplanes and authorizes the Secretary of War to turn over to the Postmaster General for the use of the Postal Service such aeroplanes and automobiles, or parts thereof, as may become from time to time unsuitable or unnecessary for the purposes of the War Department. When this war is over a very large number of aeroplanes will be available for the Postal Service. The time is not far distant when nearly all the mail between the larger cities will be carried by aeroplanes. The mail will be delivered much more quickly, because of the elimination of indirect routes and the great speed of aeroplanes. Approximately but one-third of the time now required by mail trains will be needed for this new service.

Within a short time after the close of the war aeroplanes will be in general use in the mail service. This service will first connect the larger cities and gradually extend to the smaller cities. Aeroplanes passing overhead will become so common as to attract scarcely any notice.

While we are providing for experiments along these lines and for increases in salaries of other employees in the Postal Service we should not neglect to do justice to the employees in the village-delivery service. I earnestly hope that the amendment offered by me will receive favorable consideration and be adopted. I am sure it is not subject to a point of order, and the justness of it should commend itself to the Members of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard briefly on the point of order. I do not care to take more than one minute. It seems to me that the point of order is not well taken, and for this reason: I do not know that I am willing to vote for the amendment. I am inclined to think that I would be compelled to vote against it, but I do believe that it is in order on the bill. Here is a bill which not only increases the compensation to numerous classes of postal employees throughout the United States, but it changes existing law in respect to gradation of those employees. The bill extends provisions not only to city carriers but to rural free-delivery carriers, the railway post-office employees, and to a great variety. As was stated a moment ago, it aims to take care of the postal employees out in the field away from Washington. It is broad and comprehensive. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma would extend this provision to one further class, namely, to the carriers in the villages. Now, the fact that these carriers are in an experimental stage has no bearing on the question. They are employees for this department. They are drawing a regular compensation on a regular salary basis.

Mr. MOON. What is the compensation?

Mr. HASTINGS. Six hundred dollars is the maximum.

Mr. MOON. They are not all paid the same.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That would not make any difference.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is the inquiry I made of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This bill changes the grade, status, and compensation of all kinds and descriptions of post-office employees throughout the United States. This amendment adds one more class to many classes; therefore, under the rules of the House it is germane.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield? I should like to get his views on this point, if he will yield.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. COX. The bill under consideration deals exclusively with employees in the civil service. The class of employees that the gentleman seeks to bring in by his amendment are not under the civil service.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That may be an incident, but it is not the basis of this bill. The basis of this bill is to deal with classes of postal employees, and it may be argued that they are all under the civil service; but this bill is not framed to affect only those under the civil service.

My attention has also been called to the fact that some of those affected here are not under the civil service, namely, the star route carriers and a great variety of others.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that there is possibly a section of this bill under which this might be in order, but I think it is very clear that it is not in order on this section.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am quite confident that it is.

Mr. MOON. This deals exclusively with the classified service and the automatic promotions in that service.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If it is in order anywhere in the bill, I submit to the gentleman that it is in order here.

Mr. MOON. No; it is not in order here.

Mr. RANDALL. The village carriers are under the civil service, where they are employed at third-class offices which are under the civil service.

Mr. COX. I beg the gentleman's pardon. These village carriers are not under the civil service.

Mr. RANDALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have a case in my own district now where a village carrier must take the civil-service examination before he is appointed.

Mr. COX. There is no regulation providing for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes the amendment is germane, and the point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALDOW. I move to strike out the last word.

I am heartily in favor of this bill, but I favor a larger increase to those employees now receiving less than $1,800. However, this is a step in the right direction, and I hope we will be able to complete and pass this bill to-day. The 15 per cent increase and $24 per mile for each additional mile over 24 miles for the rural free-delivery carriers is a provision that is badly needed by this class of employees, and this should be amended to read $30 per mile for all routes exceeding 20 miles. While it is true all other employees of the Postal Service are deserving of increased compensation to meet the advanced cost of living, the rural carriers have the increased cost of upkeep and maintenance of their horses and vehicles to provide for in addition to their own increase in the cost of living.

I have received statements from many of the carriers of my district showing the cost of maintenance of their equipment necessary for proper and satisfactory service. One carrier from North Collins, Erie County, N. Y., spent $835 during the past year, leaving him $365, or just $1 per day to exist on. Another carrier of the town of Hamburg, Erie County, N. Y., expended all but $358.20 of his salary in the upkeep and maintenance of his equipment necessary for satisfactory service. Another carrier from the town of Gardenville, Erie County, N. Y., expended all but $483.75 for the maintenance of his equipment necessary for proper and satisfactory service. While I believe all the men in the mail service that this bill affects are entitled to added compensation, I believe the rural carrier has had the greatest burdens to bear during the past few years. I hope that part of this bill limiting this increase to 90 days after the war will be eliminated. Congress should not assume that the cost of living and maintenance of equipment will be decreased immediately after the war, and if such should be the case Congress can then enact legislation to meet the condition at that time.

I sincerely hope that Senate amendment 2718 will be adopted, for I believe the economic distribution and transportation of farm products from the farmer to the consumer is one of the most vital questions this Congress must consider.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Members of this Congress to what I consider outrageous treatment of the people of the rural sections of my district by virtue of the order of Mr. Burleson changing and rerouting almost every mail route in that section. He has not only enlarged many of the routes so that it is utterly impossible for any person to cover them in the fall, winter, or early spring, and I have received hundreds of complaints and have protested in vain to the Postmaster General. Many of my complainants inform me that their mail is delayed three, four, and five days. Some of them do not receive it at all, unless they make a special trip to their post office. But by this changing of the routes he has practically wiped towns off of the map, in so far as they may be recognized by their post-office addresses, and I believe his petty policy of economy, irrespective of the public's welfare, has been the means of creating more dissatisfaction, more confusion, in my section of the country than all the excuses he or the heads of his department can offer in explanation for the 90 per cent of inefficiency that now exists in the Post Office Department.

Mr. Chairman, I have a bill in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads asking for an investigation of the deplorable conditions as they exist in my section of the country, and I hope the committee will grant me a hearing upon the same as soon as possible. The conditions in my county have become so deplorable the board of supervisors found it necessary to pass resolutions condemning the action of the Post Office Department. [Applause.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 2, line 3, after the word "follows," strike out all the remainder of said section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"First grade, salary $1,200; second grade, salary $1,300; third grade, salary $1,400; fourth grade, salary $1,500; fifth grade, salary $1,600; sixth grade, $1,700. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade.

"That hereafter the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1, at $1,300; grade 2, at $1,400; grade 3, at $1,500; grade 4, at $1,600; grade 5, at $1,700; grade 6, at $1,800; grade 7, at $1,900; grade 8, at $2,000; grade 9, at $2,100; grade 10, at $2,200."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman's amendment that the section to which it applies has been passed and is not subject to further amendment.

Mr. DALLINGER. No; we have not passed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think so, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered raises the pay of the letter carriers, postal clerks, and railway mail clerks $200 beyond what the bill as reported provides. I desire to say that I am heartily in favor of this bill, so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough; and I have the temerity, in spite of the violent objections to this legislation on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] on the ground of extravagance, to offer an amendment of this kind.

The great trouble is that this whole matter is not looked upon from the right point of view. We are not raising the pay of anybody in any of these propositions that have come before Congress. We are simply trying to keep the income of Government employees from diminishing; that is all. [Applause.]

The Government of the United States for the last quarter of a century, because it has maintained a fixed standard of 24 grains of gold to make a dollar, has been paying its employees in a constantly depreciating currency.

The fact that every other commodity has gone up with reference to the dollar is evidence of the fact that one of the principal reasons of the so-called high cost of living in this country has been the depreciation of gold. In other words, 24 grains of gold which make up your standard dollar in this country have become less and less valuable in purchasing power as time has gone on, because on account of scientific study and the development of new machinery it has been possible to bring mines into operation that never before could be operated, thus greatly increasing the amount of gold in existence and in circulation. Even if my amendment prevails, the letter carriers, postal clerks, and railway mail clerks of this country will not be as well off as they were 20 years ago—nowhere near it. That is a fact that can not be successfully contradicted, and I trust that some time there will be statesmanship enough in the Congress of the United States to have adopted some standard that will stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar. When this is done by the adoption of some practicable form of the multiple standard, then a dollar to-day will buy as much of the necessities of life as a dollar 20 years ago or as a dollar 20 years from now, and you will have no occasion to pass such legislation as this in a feeble attempt to do partial justice to the Government employees. I trust that my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am for the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], or any other amendment that raises the pay of these postal employees higher. He states that we want to keep the wages going higher, to keep the standard up instead of letting it go lower, and that is very commendable, I believe in that, and at the same time we are doing that we want to keep the standard of wages paid to these Government employees from pulling backward the standard of the wages paid in private industries, and that is just what it does. When the Government employees receive less pay than is paid generally in works of different industries, every time an adjustment of wages is to be made the employers contend and put up the argument that the Government employees are receiving less than is asked of them as private employers. Hence they try to drive the wages down on the strength of the wages paid to Government employees. Moreover, we must not forget this, that right at this time in every part of the country there is great difficulty keeping employees in the Postal Service.

In Pennsylvania men and women are constantly quitting the service to go to something that pays better, and there is a large number of employees at this time, to my certain knowledge, in the State of Pennsylvania who have given notice that they are going to leave the service if an additional advance in wages is not given to them. I believe we ought to raise the standard of these wages higher than has been offered here to-day, and I shall vote for any advance that is offered along that line.

When the Government takes over any industry for operation during the war, the employees in those industries become, at least, semi-Government employees and have a right to expect to receive a consideration in their demands for a living wage the same as when employed by private enterprise, and if this is accorded them the same consideration should be accorded those who have been in the service in times of peace and who are still in it.

As the demands of the country grow in requirements in mail service, the burden on the shoulders of the employees increases, and this with the increased cost of living most certainly appeals in behalf of the higher pay for all these employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following language in line 1, page 2: "after the passage of this act," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "during the fiscal year 1919."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, this bill, in my opinion, has many vices in it that ought to defeat it somewhere along the line before it finally becomes a law, but in my judgment the worst vice in it is in making it permanent law. As I said a while ago, at the risk of repetition, I do not believe this House can justify itself on any ground at all in making this permanent law, while the amendment carried the other day on the legislative bill was for one year. I recognize that it is unpopular on the floor of the House these days for any man to rise here in defense of the Treasury of the United States or to say one word in defense of the hundreds, yea, the millions of men and women of the country who are called upon to pay the taxes that bear these burdens. I recognize that the man who undertakes to make that argument on the floor to-day, if he is not openly criticized by some Member, will have it said of him somewhere by some on the floor of the House that he is talking for home consumption. This war can not go on forever. If the increased cost of living is due in part, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] says, to the depreciation in the value of the gold dollar, when this war is over the purchasing power of the dollar will beyond doubt increase and this Nation will soon return to normal times, to normal conditions in the way of the cost of living, and if it does, do you not believe that we are shooting these salaries to the skies, and had we better not pass this amendment and make this proposed raise merely temporary and not fasten this tremendous amount in the way of increased salary upon the people at the close of the war? We are right on the eve of another bond issue; if the papers can be believed, we are soon to be called upon to vote another ten billions of bonds. I hear reports from all sections of the country that it is going to be difficult to float them; but this is not the last bond issue. Oh, no. Others are to follow, and I am heartily in favor of it, because we must go on. We must win this war. No turning back now, but onward we must go until victory is achieved.

And on the heels of that and with these startling facts staring us in the face, if this House ever in all of its history has run eternally wild and gone absolutely crazy and stark mad upon increase of salaries it has certainly done it here this evening, and what this bill will finally carry no man knows. In my opinion, and I base it upon some figures which I had made for me by the Post Office Department, as the bill now stands it is going to cost the country next year not less than $40,000,000. Twenty-nine million dollars was added the other day to the legislative bill in the way of increased salaries. The Nolan minimum-wage bill, soon to come on the floor for passage if it can get the right of way, carries $25,000,000 more. A bill reported out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and now on the calendar, increasing the salaries of steamboat inspectors, whose salaries now are from $2,000 to $3,500 a year, carrying $146,000 of appropriation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question only.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman think $40,000,000 estimated increase would be a larger proportionate increase than the estimated increase of the railway employees at $350,000,000——

Mr. COX. I do not know anything about that; but I am willing to let every tub stand upon its own bottom and cross every bridge when I get to it. We are going to need money next year. If this war goes on—and to me it comes nearer looking like a 10-years' war than a 2-years' war—we will need it in 1920; yes, in 1921, 1922, and 1923. Had we not better begin here to make a few deductions in these enormous appropriations and save what we can now and be prepared to pay off the staggering debt at the close of this war?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is greatly alarmed because it is proposed to make permanent the salary increases of the men in the Postal Service. He has expressed the greatest concern lest at the close of the war we should find the cost of the necessaries of life declining to the level of prices at the outbreak of the European war without in the meantime repealing the law granting the increases to men in the Postal Service.

It is refreshing to know that the gentleman from Indiana concedes, by implication at least, that the present cost of the necessaries of life justifies a temporary increase at any rate. It would have been difficult for him to have refused to concede that, for the cost of practically all of the necessaries of life has doubled during the last three years.

But I am glad to discuss the question even upon the basis of prices which existed immediately prior to the outbreak of the European war.

Ninety-five per cent of the men in the Postal Service, clerks and carriers, have not received an increase in salaries for about 10 years, and statistics show that during the period from 1902 until 1914 the average increase in the cost of living had been 40 per cent. In other words, the salaries of these men remained the same, while they were compelled to pay $1.40 for what they could buy in 1902 for $1. The deep concern of the gentleman from Indiana about the unfair advantage the postal employees will hold over the Government when prices go back to the standard existing before the war is therefore entirely without justification.

But the gentleman says that the postal employees should bear with the injustices as to compensation because of the expense of the war. That position is entirely unsound. We must first see that the employees of the Government are paid the value of their services, and then it is time to talk about bearing their share of the financial burden of the war.

After that they should and would be glad to pay taxes on the same basis as others. But to ask men to be satisfied with less than half in value of the salary originally provided for by law is indefensible. The Government as an employer should be just, especially when it is constantly trying, as it should, to compel private employers to be just. Nothing tends to make people more devoted to their Government either in peace or war than the knowledge of the fact that such government is just.

At the present time the Post Office Department earns more than its expenses, is more than self-sustaining. Members opposed to this increase assure us that it will cost more to operate the department if these increases are granted. That is quite true. There is no doubt either that the cost of operation would be greatly reduced if the men were paid only half of their present salaries, but no Member of the House has been bold enough to propose such a plan for reducing the expense of operating the department.

No, gentlemen, this increase in salaries is more than deserved. The average increase provided by the bill, according to the statements of members of the Post Office Committee, is about 16 per cent. It is clear, therefore, that even if prices should return to the standard existing before the war, these men would still be underpaid, for they would still receive 24 per cent less in value than when the last increase was granted, about 10 years ago. This fact should surely calm the fears of gentlemen who fear that the men will get more than that to which they are entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. REED] is recognized.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, several months ago the Sixty-fourth Congress of the United States went into the wage-raising business, and seemed to find it expedient and proper to increase the salaries of the railway trainmen. These increases appertain to engineers, conductors, and many other railway employees, and, as I understand it, this was not enacted as temporary legislation.

Now we are proposing to bring the salary of the railway mail clerk up more nearly to that of the engineer behind whom he travels and works in his closed car, in the most dangerous position, probably, to be found on the train, and where he is frequently the helpless victim of a wreck or collision. It is certainly meritorious legislation, and I am opposed to making it temporary legislation in respect to any of the increases proposed in this bill. [Applause.] I shall have no hesitancy in stating my position to my constituents and I am not alarmed by the warnings of some of my colleagues that this act will be characterized as a raid on the Treasury of the United States.

The raid on the Treasury has been on for some time and is approaching from many directions.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED. I regret I have not time to yield to my colleague.

Mr. RAINEY. I want to say to the gentleman that this will not be a raid on the Treasury. You have added $28,000,000 to-day, and that means a 4-cent postage for letters.

Mr. REED. The people are to-day paying a 3-cent rate on letters and 100 per cent increase on postal cards, and their complaint is that they are not getting the service after paying the increased rates. Efficient employees are leaving the Postal Service because they can get better pay in other fields. The rural service is being impaired. Hundreds are resigning, and I am reliably informed that many are now staying in for the time being because they hope to get relief from Congress this year. If they do not, they will leave this work to be done by employees less capable of satisfactory service to the people.

In my State the mines, the oil fields, and the manufacturing concerns are calling for men and offering higher salaries than these employees of the Government are getting. In contracting for the erection of munitions plants and many vast projects incident to prosecuting the war the contractors, in some way, are getting enough out of it to pay the highest wages ever known in this country. I know men, uneducated, not mechanics, not skilled in any of the building arts, getting far higher wages working on these Government projects than the average pay of the postal employees.

We all know the Government is paying for it all. Shall we call it raids on the Treasury that have set these new standards of pay and which make the increases proposed in this bill not only necessary but proper as a matter of simple justice?

Mr. Chairman, this House has already voted to increase the clerks and employees in other branches of the Government service. The work of most of these clerks is of a nature calculated to increase their efficiency in the realm of commerce and business. The stenographer, the bookkeeper, the auditing clerk, and many others are all the while becoming proficient along lines that will be most valuable to them if they desire to leave the service of the Government at some future time. They have attained prestige and experience that may be capitalized in any State in the Union.

But, Mr. Chairman, the man who spends years acquiring a knowledge of the location of residents of a city, or the box holders of a post office, or the routing of outgoing mails is the possessor of knowledge most valuable for the successful prosecution of his work as a postal employee, but of very little account in any other calling in life.

Each succeeding year, however, he becomes a more efficient servant of the people in the mail service.

The men who spend years in the Railway Mail Service have to pour over the names of counties, cities, and towns until they have thousands of places and names memorized. When they become expert they hold in their brains the geography of a Nation and the complicated transportation systems of a continent. They become experts and specialists, but it is a mental wealth that can not be used except in a limited way in any other vocation or calling. Contrasting the salaries of these employees with the salaries now paid in the industrial and commercial arenas, it is clear, to my mind, that the postal employees are not getting a square deal, and I feel that the people will approve a proper increase of these allowances, as it will mean a continuation of efficient employees in this work that touches every home in our land. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on that amendment.

Mr. MOON. We had better dispose of the amendments before the House, had we not?

Mr. LUNN. I want to speak on the Cox amendment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, is debate exhausted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LUNN. Then I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOON. That is very good, and I will meet the point by moving that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LUNN. And I will make the point to-morrow morning.

The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARAWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Capitol.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Having been requested by the Liberty Loan Committee to make several addresses in behalf of the campaign which is being waged in my district, I ask a leave of absence for two days from my duties in Congress.

Yours, very truly, F. C. HICKS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. A general leave to print has been granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I think it would greatly accommodate the membership of the House if the Speaker would be willing to predict what his probable ruling will be to-morrow as to what will be in order, whether this bill or the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. As a rule, the Chair does not like to cross a stream until he comes to it, but the Chair was asked that question privately by several Members, and he looked the rule up. The rule does not make the bill a continuing order. The House positively set to-morrow for the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the Chair will so rule if it comes up.

Mr. KEARNS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEARNS. Has there been a general leave to extend remarks?

The SPEAKER. There has on this bill.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to information concerning casualties.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of casualties in France. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 23, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required to cover expenses of the recoinage of uncurrent and lightweight gold coin on hand in the mint at Philadelphia and the several Subtreasuries (H. Doc. No. 983); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of War, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army for rent of room in the building of the American Federation of Labor, fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 984); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3332) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey certain land to the city of Faribault, Minn., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 401), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 23, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy guidance and blessing as we face the vast responsibilities of this day. Rules are in the course of preparation in this Chamber that will affect the conduct of millions of Thy people and go out under the authority of law. We pray that in dealing with these most delicate and most important duties and obligations we may seek with true and fervent hearts Thy divine guidance, and that we may realize that every step of the way is being taken under the immediate direction of Thy holy spirit. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 206).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional estimates of appropriation in the sum of $2,890 required by the Treasury Department for the service of the fiscal year 1919, office of Comptroller of the Currency; office of Surgeon General, Public Health Service, and Section of Surety Bonds, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH H. RICE V. UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 205).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the cause of Elizabeth H. Rice v. The United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have a petition from the North Dakota Bankers' Association, in the form of a resolution, requesting an amendment of the law so as to divide the payment of excess-profits taxes into four annual installments, which I move may be referred to the proper committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I also have here a resolution from the Grand Forks Trades and Labor Assembly reciting, among other things, that the courts of the United States are a most serious menace to the constitutional rights of the American people; that the power now exercised by the courts to declare laws passed by a legislative body unconstitutional was expressly denied the judiciary by the convention that framed our Federal Constitution; that the constitutional rights of the American people are not secure while an irresponsible oligarchy are permitted to exercise the powers above enumerated; that there are problems in modern industrial life that must be solved by the ordinary machinery of popular government; and that if the courts continue to hamper the people in the exercise of that sovereign power then the courts must be controlled by the people. Therefore it was resolved "that we demand that Congress shall immediately prepare and submit to the people through the proper channels an amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the election of all Federal judges with short terms of office and placing the power in the people to recall Federal judges, the only place that power should reside," and requesting me to give this resolution the consideration which it deserves.

In accordance with that request, Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and there receive the consideration which I ask for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THOMAS. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Trinidad, Las Animas County, Colo., referring to the coal situation in that State. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRINIDAD, COLO., March 22, 1918.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the National Fuel Administration put in effect March 11, 1918, an order drastically reducing the scale of maximum prices to be charged for Colorado coals; and

Whereas as a result of such order a large number of mines which could only be operated at a loss at the prices fixed March 11 have been closed down and others will be forced to discontinue or curtail operations, resulting in a reduction of the output of Colorado coal of at least 4,000,000 tons for 1918 as estimated by the operators; and

Whereas coal is one of the essentials for the winning of the war, and its production should be stimulated by the fixing of prices that will yield a reasonable profit and permit the intensive operation of all mines, a policy which has been recognized in fixing the prices for other commodities—steel, copper, wheat, etc.: Now, therefore,

The Trinidad, Las Animas County, Chamber of Commerce respectfully petitions the National Fuel Administration to reconsider its order effective March 11, 1918, and to immediately restore the scale of maximum prices effective immediately prior thereto.

W. R. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ingham County, Mich., and a petition of sundry citizens of Saginaw County, Mich., praying for an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps in the Army, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Local Branch No. 214, National Association of Letter Carriers, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for an increase in the salaries of letter carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JAMES. I present a series of resolutions adopted at a patriotic mass meeting of Kentuckians, held at Covington, Ky., on the 16th day of March, 1918, declaring their unfaltering loyalty and devotion to our country, and their unshaken confidence in the ultimate triumph of freedom and righteousness in this war. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

We, the people of Kenton County, Ky., brought together by an awakened sense of the dangers which threaten this Nation and by the earnest desire of doing what we may to avert those dangers, solemnly declare our unfaltering loyalty and devotion to our country and our unshaken confidence in the ultimate triumph of freedom and righteousness in this war.

We are deeply sensible of the magnitude of the task imposed upon this Government by the state of unpreparedness in which we were found by an enemy which was prepared at every point and for the manner in which that great task has been undertaken we feel and express a profound appreciation.

That in the face of imminent dangers we were totally unprepared for defense was a national folly, but a calamity not without its uses if we learn from it that the American people may not, with safety to their institutions, their lives, and their honor, sleep in the face of peril, be indifferent to every warning, rely upon a fancied isolation, and fatuously take to their bosoms reptiles whose purpose it is to sting and whose stings are deadly.

We know at last that this Nation has enlisted in a life and death struggle for freedom against oppression, for civilization against a barbarism which science has made only more brutal; that we are not fighting for the abstract principle of democracy alone, but are fighting in our own defense.

We owe to our heroic allies, who have protected us while we slept, aid and cooperation without measure; we know that the awakened might of the American people thrown into this fight will be of incalculable benefit to the cause of humanity, but we can no longer blind ourselves to the truth that we are fighting in defense of our freedom, our homes, our wives, and our children; and we believe it to be the duty of this Government to impress this vital truth upon all Americans who do not already know it.

In the light of the world's dearly bought knowledge of German treachery in peace and German brutality in war we hold that the safety and happiness of this and future generations demand that this war shall be relentlessly prosecuted to the end; that "peace without victory" would mean a mere truce, to be employed by a ruthless foe, secretly active, in the practice of every device of treachery and corruption.

And in the light of our knowledge of the scope of the German scheme of world supremacy we believe that it would be folly to doubt that at the end of such a truce we should be fighting for our lives against a Germany as cunning, as brutal, as mad with the lust of power as is the Germany to-day, but a Germany refreshed and strengthened through German commercial piracy and diplomatic villainy.

And we regard it as a self-evident truth that "peace without indemnities" means simply the leaving of the loot in the hands of the thief—that such a truce would mean that in a little while the defenders of the rights of mankind would be fighting again, but under the handicap of exhausted resources and unproductive territories, while brutal Germany attacked with the added power derived from stolen resources and even stolen men.

The purpose of Germany to dominate the world will be merely halted for a short while unless German power is destroyed in this war.

We believe that a free, intelligent, and brave people may well be trusted with the knowledge of all conditions of vital concern to their lives and liberties, and that an unwillingness to alarm loyal citizens or to give offense to such as are not loyal, be their proportion great or small, has at this time no place in a sound policy.

We believe that every condition which is a menace to us at home or abroad should be frankly recognized and sternly dealt with, and we are completely persuaded that when this is done the certain result will be an aroused and determined people, inspired by just indignation and undaunted in the face of known dangers, a people ready to make any sacrifice to win this war, a people which, knowing what it must do, will do it without fear or question.

Of the vital truths to which we have too long turned an indifferent ear, and to which our safety demands that we be keenly alive, the conditions existing among our so-called German-Americans are perhaps the most important.

We believe, and declare as the truth, that of our millions of citizens of German extraction many are true and loyal Americans, justly entitled to all honor and to full fellowship with American patriots.

We know that it is equally true that others have not understood or sought to understand American institutions, that they are content to live and thrive among us, caring nothing for our trials and dangers, reading German, thinking German, revering all things German, out of sympathy with us, and in this time of need helping us grudgingly or not at all, forming at all times a fruitful soil for the sowing of the infamous lies of the German propaganda, sullenly quiet now, but potentially dangerous in the event of disaster to our arms, an alien crew richly deserving at all times of social and commercial ostracism at the hands of all true Americans.

A third element is actively doing the work of Germany in America. The fact that we have shared with them without stint all the privileges of American citizenship has not prevented them from spreading the German propaganda, organizing treasonable associations, preaching sedition, and acting as spies, incendiaries, and dynamiters. Prating of freedom of speech while they speak treason, they move among us freely and do us deadly harm, while, as American citizens, they invoke the protection of our laws.

It has at last been forced upon our knowledge that, in common with the rest of the world, we have for many years been subjected to the sinister workings of an institution infinitely evil made up of the German spy system and the German propaganda.

We know that the agents and instruments of this foul scheme, unexampled in all the history of national or individual villainy, whether those agents are German ambassadors or German-Americans, are the miners and sappers, the vanguard of a brutal German soldiery.

We know that while we have been blind to the perils within our very homes, while we have welcomed all who came among us and shared with them all the blessings of our free institutions, this unspeakable iniquity, the vilest enterprise ever conceived by a perverted and criminal intelligence, has labored ceaselessly among us to compass our destruction.

And we know that it labors among us now with an ever-increasing boldness.

We feel that at this late day there is no need to describe this monstrous tissue of corruption further than to say that it is a fit instrument for the furtherance of Germany's cruel and crafty scheme of world domination; that so widespread and various are its destructive activities that its service attracts and embraces criminals and criminal organizations of every grade, while much of its hellish work is done by mere dupes and fools.

We believe that the wise regulations, established for the conservation of food and fuel, are potent and even vital instruments in the development of our defense; we pledge ourselves to the observance of those rules and urge the enactment of laws which will adequately punish those who willfully violate them.

We hold that the agent of Germany, who plots the destruction of a factory or warehouse with the purpose of destroying munitions or provisions necessary to the support of our troops or of our allies, or who plots the destruction of a ship with its cargo of innocent lives, is a thing unfit to live, and that to extend clemency to such an one simply because the plot has failed is no more wise than it would be to spare a cobra because its first stroke had missed its victim.

We believe that our safety demands the stern suppression of those, traitors and fools alike, who preach the doctrines of pacifism and nonresistance at this time when we can preserve our liberties and the honor and lives of our women and children only by fighting for them with a united determination to win and with our full and unhampered power.

We believe that we should not longer postpone a full reckoning with the dangers which assail us at home, and that to bear ourselves leniently toward sedition or treason is to invite disaster.

We have learned enough of German designs and German agents to know that generosity, kindness, and mercy find no echo in the black hearts of German spies, traitors, and murderers; we know that this rule holds good through all that evil crew from ambassadors to soapbox preachers of sedition, and that when we find them at work among us our safety demands their destruction.

We bespeak for labor now and at all times a just and generous consideration, and a consideration commensurate with the indispensable and tremendous part which honest labor must play in the development and support of our national defense.

We recognize and claim for labor the right to organize for the furtherance of its every legitimate interest, but we denounce as a traitor, deserving of death, one who, at the behest of our enemy or in the furtherance of personal and selfish designs, obstructs in any way the great and patriotic work which labor must do for our salvation.

Wherefore, in the name of the millions of loyal American citizens who believe as we believe, and in the name of the brave men whom we must sustain while they fight for our homes and our women, we call upon our Government for the enactment of laws which will recognize the truth that they who preach pacifism and nonresistance in this hour are public enemies; that each is more dangerous to our armies than a regiment of brutish Huns.

For the enactment and merciless enforcement of laws which will recognize the patent truth that they who plan or accomplish the destruction of supplies necessary for the sustaining of American citizens, American soldiers, or America's allies are murderers, striking at the heart of a great Nation, for whom the punishment of speedy death is not only just but necessary.

For the enactment and merciless enforcement of laws which, by penalties of life imprisonment at hard labor or death by hanging, will crush and destroy every form of sedition or treason and wipe out in America the last vestige of that evil thing through which arrogant and brutal Germany strives to pave the way for her armed hordes of robbers, rapists, and murderers.

For the enactment of laws which will make impossible the dissemination of German lies through the medium of German-language newspapers, magazines, and pamphlets.

For the enactment of laws which will wipe out of existence associations which openly or covertly prevent or delay the assimilation of citizens of German extraction.

For the enactment of laws which will recognize and punish adequately, as a dangerous public enemy, one who, by spreading German-hatched lies, or by other means, attempts to interfere with the operation of the conscription laws.

For laws which by drastic penalties and rigid enforcement will destroy every phase of the system by which a cunning and cruel enemy strives to hamper our defense.

We do not present this petition without reflection. We believe that at this day the great mass of the loyal citizens of these United States are awake to the dangers herein indicated; that they are ready to face and overcome them and aid whole-heartedly in the enforcement of a system of laws enacted to that end.

We confidently assert that there is a Nation-wide realization of the truth that peace-time laws, made at a time when we were ignorant of Germany's designs and of the extent and character of the German propaganda, are pitifully inadequate for our present needs.

We submit that, aside from all questions of danger to our very existence as a Nation, the continued activity among us of the bold and insolent agents of arrogant and brutal Germany is an intolerable insult to which a free people may not longer be expected to submit.

We shall win this war—the spirit which animates this greatest of free nations will not brook defeat.

We have a precious heritage to guard and we shall guard it.

Our women and our children shall not know the horrors of a German triumph, but let it not be said of us that we prolonged this war a single day or sacrificed the life of a single brave man because we permitted our power to support our soldiers and our allies to be impaired—because we hesitated at hanging those who would have stabbed our defenders in the back, and made of us the victims of German domination.

POISONING OF HORSES.

Mr. JAMES. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a newspaper account of the poisoning of 500 horses at Covington, Ky., by some German spies.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Cincinnati Post, Mar. 16, 1918.]

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

Men stood about in the open space back of the stockyards on the Chesapeake & Ohio tracks in Covington Saturday and gazed with flaming eyes as dead horses were dragged out until the ground was covered with them. It seemed the harvest of some battle field.

One said the Hunnish spy who had poisoned them should be hanged, if caught; another said he must be shot, and a third that he should be made to eat of his own poison.

But before we gave him to the law we would let him live to see his victims die. We would shackle him in the stall with the gray horse we saw dying there and make him look.

We would have him there at that moment when the horse suddenly slipped to his knees and then tried to lift himself, but fell back. And after that, when he lifted his head and looked about wide eyed, and had he been there, the killer would have sworn that the eyes seemed to accuse: "What have you done to me? What have you done to me?"

We would let him live to hear the whinnied agony—a cry that had in it some vague human quality. We would hold him there, listening, until there came upon him an overpowering desire to run away from this dying thing, and then we would hold him there longer.

Oh, we would have him stay to the end of this devilish drama that he staged; to see the horse lift himself again and again to his haunches and fall back; to see the great body heaving in the final tortures, and then to subside to deathlike calm, while the head nodded and the eyes dropped.

And when the killer was thanking his stars that this was the end of it, the head suddenly would lift again and the eyes stare and seem to say once more, "What have you done to me?"

And, after death had relieved the horse, we would hold the killer a moment longer to say to him, "Here you are. Here is the horse. Which is the beast?"

Then we would take him to the next stall, and the next, and the next, and to every stall in which a horse was dying and make him stand vigil with his victims. Thus we would let him live before we gave him to the law.

With a stout team they dragged the dead horses into the open space back of the stockyards until the place was filled with the kill.

No doubt there were in the crowd those who had refused to believe what they had heard about the Hun in Belgium and in France, simply because it was difficult to believe such things about fellow creatures who had the outward semblance of human beings.

But here was some bit of Belgium and of France spread out before their very eyes. Here was the handiwork of the Hun at our doors—the same kind of work that was practiced by the same kind of Hun who poisons wells in France and chops down fruit trees in sheer wantonness and defiles tombs and churches.

Here was the mark of the beast—right here—at home!

It is no wonder that men's eyes flamed as they beheld the spectacle. They had caught something of the moral wrath that has sustained France through four terrible years.

They have seen the work of the beast.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial, Mar. 16, 1918.]

POISON GIVEN UNITED STATES HORSES ON THE WAY TO BATTLE FRONT—NUMBER DIE IN COVINGTON.

The work of the German propaganda visited Covington Friday, when several hundred horses belonging to the United States Government were poisoned. More than 70 of the horses died during the afternoon and up to midnight and many more, it was thought, will die to-day. The internal organs of one horse were sent to the Cincinnati University last night and will be examined to-day to determine the poisons used. More than one and possibly more than two poisons were put in the water.

A report gained currency early in the evening that the poisons had not been put in the water at the corral, Sixteenth and Russell Streets, but in the reservoir, and that the poisoned water was coming through the pipes. It caused intense excitement over the city. Commissioner J. Mason Howk, to whom many inquiries by phone were made, said that to satisfy the public of the falseness of the report he will have an analysis of the water made this morning.

The consignment of 727 horses in 39 cars from Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., reached Covington Thursday night at 6 o'clock and were to be transferred to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad for shipment to Newport News, Va., thence to be sent to France.

On the arrival of the train the horses were unloaded from the cars to the stockyards at Sixteenth and Russell Streets for the purpose of feeding and watering. When the horses left Rockford, Ill., they were inspected by a Government agent and reported to be in first-class condition.

When unloaded in Covington the horses were hungry—the animals had been 56 hours on the road without feed. L. W. Webster, in charge of the stockyards for the railroad company, said that the horses were in fine condition and ate ravenously of oats and hay and had been watered.

Dr. L. H. Crisler, veterinary surgeon and also meat and milk inspector for the city of Covington, was called to the scene Friday at 1 p. m., shortly after the first horse died. He performed a post-mortem on the animal and stated that the poisoning consisted of belladonna and croton oil, evidently given in the water. A second and third autopsy revealed the same poison had been used.

Calvin S. Weakley, agent of the justice department, Cincinnati, and L. B. Forrest, of the Cincinnati food and drug laboratory, were early on the scene. Weakley questioned Lieut. Frank Lilly and the 16 soldiers in charge of the horses, and also L. W. Webster in charge of the stockyards.

So far the Government officials refuse to divulge any information secured. Chief Theodore Kluemper, of the Covington police department, sent all of the city detectives—Sandford, Parker, Higgins, Goodson, Drees, and Kinsler—to the scene to aid the Government officials in ferreting out the perpetrator of the crime.

The condition of the horses in their dying struggles was pitiable. Dr. Crisler stated that the belladonna produced a deadening of heart action and dilation of the eyes. None of the animals affected showed any sign of pulsation. The croton oil had a weakening effect on the animals. The combination, if given in large quantities, he said, would cause death within 15 minutes.

It was evident that the poisoner who placed the poison in the water was anxious to produce a terrorizing effect on human beings that might watch the death struggles of the horses when he placed just sufficient poison in the water to cause the animals to suffer for several hours before death relieved them of agony.

Dr. Crisler secured several samples of the water which the horses drank about 7 o'clock Friday morning, after they had been fed, for the purpose of analysis. He is positive of his diagnosis of the cause, but desires to establish the proportion in which the poisons were given the animals.

He is of the opinion that the amount in proportion to the quantity of water was small, as it did not produce death for seven or eight hours, while if the proportion had been larger death would have followed in a much shorter time.

It was the opinion of Dr. Crisler and those in charge of the horses that the poison had been placed in the water troughs early Friday morning, previous to the time the animals were fed. The first horse to show symptoms of being ill was a big black horse valued at $300 or more. This was shortly after 8 o'clock Friday morning.

When the news spread about the city there was a tense feeling against the perpetrator of the act, and if found he will fare badly at the hands of the loyal citizens of this community.

More horses were dying at a late hour Friday night.

GREAT THRONG AT MEETING VOICES PROTEST AGAINST POISONING OF HORSES.

A crowd estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 people attended the big patriotic mass meeting Sunday afternoon at Seventeenth and Russell Streets, Covington. The gathering was so large that hundreds of people on the outskirts could not hear the speakers.

One incident, trivial in its nature, came near causing something not on the program. While Attorney John G. O'Neal was addressing the audience he remarked that loyal citizens should not spend their good American dollars with pro-Germans or any other citizens under suspicion. A voice way over on the west side of the crowd was heard to say, "I don't know." The owner of the voice got no further.

There were cries of "Take him to the stage," "Get a rope," "Let's hang him," and "Lynch him," emanating from all sections of the audience. Chairman Blakely was quick to see the temper of the crowd and called on the audience to be patient and make no mistake, and remarked, "If the gentleman objects to anything I have said I am big enough for him to see me at any other time." This did not satisfy the crowd.

The crowd kept pushing the man toward the stage. Chairman Stephens L. Blakely stepped to the front of the stage and implored the angry citizens to be American. By this time Lieut. Dan Crout and a cordon of police had taken possession of the man, who gave his name as Richard Smith. He was known to the police as not being mentally bright. He was taken to jail and charged with disorderly conduct.

The meeting continued without further interruption. Music was furnished by the Fort Thomas Military Band and the Latonia Rifles' Band. The improvised stage was a large pile of square timbers belonging to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, within sight of the carcasses of 300 horses that have died from poison in the stockyards.

Chairman Stephens L. Blakely delivered the introductory speech after invocation by Rev. I. Cochrane Hunt. Blakely said in part: "We have gathered not for the empty ceremony of eulogizing dead beasts, victims of the Huns, but we have come to inquire as to who is guilty of this crime. We do not inquire what pro-German has done this deed, but to inquire of the American citizens of this community how long they will tolerate the presence of this beast." The crowd yelled, "No longer."

"He is a barbarian who refuses to obey the law, religion, or the rules of civilization. Place him outside the protection of the law. Shall he be permitted to read his German newspapers, preach German sermons, study German in the public schools? It is up to you to stop him. "Let us get him," yelled the crowd.

"I urge you to withdraw your patronage from all you suspect of being disloyal to this country. If they are not right, starve them by refusing to buy goods from them. Lovers of the Kaiser know who perpetrated this foul act on these dumb brutes. I am in favor of interning every alien enemy, every pro-German, in these stockyards until he coughs up his name or turns up his toes. The crowd yelled an assenting opinion.

Rev. I. Cochrane Hunt, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, was the next speaker. He said: "St. Patrick banished the snakes, let us banish the seditious snakes from this country. There is a traitorous element false as hell in this community; we have the mute evidence right here behind us. There is the uncontrovertible evidence that the Hun is here among us.

"What happened to the animals might have been done to our wives and children. The Hun will do anything. This is no time to form hasty conclusions, but the hour of our vigilance which must be eternal. I call on you to renew your consecration to the flag so that America may speed up and eternally smash Kaiserism. Let our hearts be more alert and our minds more open to the fact that traitors are among us. Loyalty must be positive in these trying times. Do justice, not injustice. Our minds must always be patriotic."

Chairman Blakely took occasion to state that there is no disposition on the part of the loyal citizens of this city to charge any man with disloyalty, but he must not place ancestry before the country.

Rev. Henry H. Webb, pastor of the First Christian Church, said: "I would like to tell you what I think about this matter, but I fear I could not hold my job after using appropriate language to describe this cowardly act. The war has come home at last. It has even come to Covington. The mute evidence here appeals to us. Our wounded boys in France appeal to us. Both are victims of the same agency. Put the Hun out of our country. I have more respect for the Kaiser than the fiend that poisoned these dumb brutes.

"Devastated cities, outraged women, and maimed children call to us. We must awake to our insecurity. This demonstration is a protest against such deeds. Let us lend every effort to our boys in France, who are fighting to protect our families and our homes."

Attorney John B. O'Neal was introduced as the militant patriot, and from the demonstration he received the crowd was with him.

O'Neal said: "Stop to think what these silent brutes were intended for in the war. The horses had been selected for the purpose of dragging our artillery over the field of France. Our defenses have been weakened that much.

"Some pro-German might scoff at holding a horse funeral. Each one of these poor brutes is worth a thousand pro-Germans. We are not holding a horse funeral—we are starting the hearse for the man who did this deed. We are holding services for our heroes at the front who are dying for us. The horse is the best friend of man and civilization, not German civilization.

"There ought to be a distinguishing term between brute and human brute. So far as I am concerned, it can be called 'German.' We have been asleep and God's mercy alone has saved us from these human beasts. Why do not we guard ourselves?

"Don't wait for some one to tell you not to trade with your enemies. Don't give your money to Germany. Patronize your American friend and patriot." At this point his speech was interrupted by a commotion in the crowd. O'Neal thought that some one had insulted the flag. He said, "What, do you want to make that dog kiss the flag? No! A thousand times no!

"Give your money and fight. If you can not fight the enemy in France, fight the Hun at home. He is putting an intolerable insult on us. We don't have to submit to it. The noblest blood among us is being spilled on the soil of France and Belgium. Fight for them and make this country a hell for the Hun."

Rev. I. C. Hunt proposed a motion, "That we memorialize Congress to intern every alien enemy citizen in this country for the period of the war." The resolution carried by a roar of yeas from the throats of 20,000 loyal citizens.

FIVE HUNDRED HORSES HAVE DIED OF POISON.

The horse death list reached 500 animals late Sunday night at the stock yards, Sixteenth and Russell Avenue, Covington. The poisoning still remains a mystery, as well as the name of the perpetrator, to the local government authorities.

Deaths among the horses slackened somewhat Sunday and the attendants hoped that some of the remaining 227 might survive the epidemic. Soldiers from Fort Thomas are closely guarding all approaches to the stock yards and none is admitted without an order from Lieut. Frank Lillie.

Lieut. Lillie still maintains that the animals were poisoned in some mysterious manner. The 16 soldiers that accompanied the horses from Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., are still on duty among the living horses.

Secret Service men are working night and day in search of some clew that might lead to the identity of plotters of the crime. So far nothing has been discovered on which warrants could be issued for the apprehension of the guilty parties.

CARCASSES DISPOSED OF.

Three hundred carcasses of the poisoned horses were taken to Cincinnati Sunday night in railroad flat cars and turned over to a desiccating concern in the West End. The remaining 200 carcasses and those of any that die later will be similarly disposed of Monday.

ARGENTINE HORSES ARE VICTIMS OF HUNS.

LONDON, March 17.

Reuters (Ltd.) learns that there is reason to believe the Germans are following practices of which they have been proven guilty elsewhere and are inoculating animals in Argentina with bacilli.

"The attention of the Argentine Government," says the agency, "has been directed by the British Government to the fact that numbers of horses and mules reaching this country from Argentina are found to be suffering from glanders, a disease said to be virtually nonexistent in Argentina.

"The chief effect of this fresh act of barbarism is likely to be felt in Argentina itself.

"Owing to the rigorous examination of all animals arriving in this country all contaminated beasts are discovered before landing."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 324) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 325) thereon.

EXHIBITS OF ARTS, SCIENCES, AND INDUSTRIES.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the 15th instant I introduced the bill (S. 4108) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and it was referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Industrial Expositions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a report which I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to make of the bill (S. 4166) to amend section 3 of an act of Congress approved February 23, 1887 (vol. 24, Stats. L., ch. 210, p. 409), entitled "An act to provide for the execution of the provisions of article 2 of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Emperor of China on the 17th day of November, 1880, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 5th day of October, 1881," and I submit a report (No. 327) thereon. I ask that the bill may be laid before the Senate and for unanimous consent to have it disposed of at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for the regular order. I have undertaken to get up a number of military bills in the last three or four days. There is no telling how much discussion this bill will induce.

Mr. STONE. If it takes one minute of discussion, I will have nothing to say. It is the unanimous report of the committee, and the passage of the bill is important in order to correct what is a clear injustice as between the two nations in the treaty. It will take no time to pass it. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall not object if unanimous consent can be given with that understanding—that if it leads to discussion it will be laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3, chapter 210, volume 24, Statutes at Large be, and hereby is, amended by striking out the second paragraph of said section 3, commencing at the word "Citizens" and ending at and with the word "court," and inserting in lieu thereof a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"Citizens of the United States offending against the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $50, or by imprisonment for a period of not more than six months nor less than 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON CHEROKEE JUDGMENT.

Mr. OWEN. I was instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 988) providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation, and I submit a report (No. 376) thereon. If it requires any discussion, I will not insist upon the matter, but I should be glad to have the bill disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask if it is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it was not objected to by any member of the committee, and has been reported favorably in the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

Mr. OWEN. If there is any objection at all, I will not press the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 10, before the word "interest," to insert the word "additional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the words "to wit," to strike out the remainder of the bill and insert:

On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment, as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the criginal principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903, and on the amount of the interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906, and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods herein above mentioned, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as herein above provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether the bill simply provides for the payment of some $27,000 interest?

Mr. OWEN. The payment of $27,000 interest due to the Cherokee Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is all, I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that motion is put, I will ask the Senator from Alabama whether this conference report ought not to go over and be printed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I see no reason why the report should go over. There are no great changes in the bill as it passed the Senate. In the alien property custodian provision the conference report brings the bill back substantially as it passed the Senate. The only exception to it is that it strikes out the original amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and in lieu thereof the House conferees proposed a suggestion, which was agreed to, providing for all the Frelinghuysen amendment provided for in the way of a public sale, but, in addition to that, providing that there should be advertisements in the newspapers; that the property should be sold where the larger portion of the property was located; and that it should not, under pains and penalties of the law, be sold to an alien enemy. That is all the change.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the reading of the conference report correctly, that, notwithstanding the provision is for public sale, the President may order the property sold otherwise? If so, I should like to know why that provision is modified to that extent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was coming to that. The only modification in that respect is that it does not leave everything to the Alien Property Custodian. The proposed change is "when the President shall determine," not "prescribe." As I understand, when we provide that the President shall "prescribe" he may make rules and regulations, but the change here is that "when the President shall determine," which will require the personal act of the President. That change has been made because there may be conditions arise in the disposition of this property where it would be impossible to sell it at public auction without it possibly going into the hands or control of alien enemies or persons who are unfriendly. The committee of conference thought that was wise and that it was within the line of the original bill as it passed the Senate, because when the alien property act originally passed the Senate there was no limitation whatever. Now, this merely gives the right to the Alien Property Custodian in an exceptional case to appeal to the President to allow a certain portion of such property to be sold not by public auction but by negotiation. Then the President must indicate in writing why he has done so. I think the situation is thoroughly guarded from the standpoint of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it specifically provided that the President shall give his reasons in writing for the exception?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is provided that he shall give his reasons in writing. It says he shall determine and state his reasons in writing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not catch the reading of the provision. However that may be, Mr. President, I do think we have fallen into a bad habit here of having an elaborate report of this kind presented to the Senate and a motion being made to proceed to its consideration before any one of us has had an opportunity to look at it and to ascertain what may be in the report. It may be exactly as the Senator from Alabama states, that there has been no essential change made in the bill which passed the Senate. If that be so, it is a most astonishing exception to the rule which has prevailed in this body, and for my part I should like the courtesy, if I may use that term, of at least having the privilege of examining the report when it is put in print. It will delay the bill only until Monday next. I apprehend that, while this is an urgent deficiency bill, the urgency is not so great that we must pass it on a certain hour of a certain day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that, of course, if he insists——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are violating the plain rule of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. In what respect?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The plain rule of the Senate is that the Senate shall vote upon the question as to whether or not it will take up the conference report. The Chair thinks that is the first thing to be determined.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my justification of the action I have taken is that I had for the moment forgotten the rule that debate was not in order until after 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was willing to let the Senator from New Hampshire make the inquiry, but the Chair is not willing to have the whole conference report discussed without it having been determined whether or not the Senate desires to take it up.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Chair is quite right on that point, and, so far as that is concerned, I am ready to vote.

On a division, Mr. UNDERWOOD's motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report goes to the calendar and will be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair has held——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I make the point of order——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment—that a Senator is entitled to call for the yeas and nays; but if he submits to having the question put on a division, and the Chair decides the question in controversy, that ends the matter for the present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Alabama before he takes his seat. I desire to ask the question because it has a bearing on one or two matters which are upon the calendar. I desire to ask whether or not the conferees retained in the Senate provision the amendment with reference to reimbursing soldiers and officers for equipments and uniforms lost on board ship?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator that that provision is retained in the bill with a few slight amendments; but the amendments do not in any way seriously affect the matter as it passed the Senate.

TIMBER FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3426) to empower the President to requisition timber and timber products for war purposes. The bill was under consideration when the unfinished business was laid before the Senate two days ago.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator has a number of military bills which he desires to have considered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are a number of them, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator willing to take up some of them first?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to delay this other matter, but I have been in process of getting some information which I should like to complete, and, if it will not disturb the program of the Senator with reference to the other bills, which, I assume, are equally important. I should like to have the Senate bill 3426 go over temporarily.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understood that the Senator was endeavoring to secure some information about it from his section of the country, and I have no objection to the bill going over temporarily.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will yield, I should like very much to ask the Senator to take up, first, Senate joint resolution 124, if he can do so, because I must leave the city on the order of my physician, and I have an amendment to offer to that measure which I wish to submit to the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to taking up that joint resolution on this condition: That measure will consume a great deal of time, because there is another amendment which is proposed to it which, I am sure, will invoke a great deal of discussion; but if the Senator, in view of the fact that he is going away, desires to submit his amendment and discuss it, I am willing to have that done, and then the measure can be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. HARDWICK. If it is possible to be done, I suggest that my proposed amendment be disposed of, and then the joint resolution can be laid aside.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to do that in order to accommodate the Senator, if the Senate is willing to do it.

Mr. HARDWICK. That will be satisfactory to me.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate joint resolution 124.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment is now pending.

Mr. GALLINGER. The joint resolution ought to be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire ask that the joint resolution be again read?

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; and the committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we are getting into a very bad habit in passing bills and joint resolutions without their having been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This joint resolution has been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then that settles it. I asked the question, but did not hear the answer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read, the committee amendments have been agreed to, and the pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. GALLINGER. That is satisfactory.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Indiana will pardon me, will the Senator permit me to offer an amendment I desire to offer before he proceeds to the discussion of his amendment?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber, and I wish to state my understanding of the situation. Senate joint resolution 124 has been called up in order to permit the Senator from Georgia to present an amendment which he desires to present, and opportunity is to be given him to do that, after which the joint resolution shall be temporarily laid aside, such other amendments as may be offered to be considered subsequently. I have an amendment which I desire to offer at the proper time, and with that understanding I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Georgia shall proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to ascertain where all these arrangements and agreements took place.

Mr. HARDWICK. It was an agreement between the Senator from Oregon in charge of the bill and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The difficulty, however, is that there is a pending amendment. If the Senator from Indiana withdraws his amendment, the Senator from Georgia may offer his amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment. He will have ample opportunity to offer it later.

Mr. NEW. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 14, after the word "act," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That all male persons, citizens of the United States or residing in the United States, who have since the 5th day of June, 1917, become 31 years of age and who have not been already actually enrolled in the military forces of the United States, shall be exempt from the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the object of the amendment I have offered is easily understood. It is to apply the law equally both ways. The joint resolution proposed by the Senator from Oregon provides an amendment to the existing law by which the young men of this country as they become 21 years of age after June 5, 1917, shall become subject to the draft law. Personally I do not see any objection to that; but it does seems to me that, if that is to be done, the converse of the proposition is equally sound; and, if we are to keep the ages as fixed by Congress when we enacted the draft law, then men who have passed their thirty-first birthday after the 5th day of June should be relieved from this service, if the age is still to be between 21 and 30, inclusive, unless they have already been actually drafted into the service. Of course, in cases where they are already enrolled in the military forces of the country and have begun their military service, I should not think of asking that the amendment apply to them; but it does seem to me if we are going to move it from the 5th day of June up and project it into the future on the young men as they become 21, that it is equally just to apply the limit the other way on men as they become 31, in the same identical method and manner. That is my view of it, and that is why I have offered this amendment, so that the Senate may determine whether or not it will do that.

Personally I voted for a larger age limit; my recollection of the record is that I supported on this floor a proposition to make the age from 21 to 40, possibly from 21 to 45, on the theory that, if this military service was to be exacted of the men of the country, it ought to be exacted equally of all men who are capable of rendering it between the ages commonly recognized by military experts as the limits in which military service can best be rendered. The Senate, however, did not take that view, nor did the other House. Acting through the conferees, they fixed an arbitrary limit of 21 years one way and 30 or up to the thirty-first birthday, the other way.

In doing so, an arbitrary date was set, to wit, the 5th day of June, 1917, by proclamation of the President, under authority of law, on which day men's ages should be reckoned so as to determine whether they would fall within the provisions of the draft law. If that arbitrary date is to be abandoned at the lower age limit, it seems to me that it ought to be abandoned at the higher age limit. If the Senate and the country want to draft men more than 30 years of age well and good, and if this law continues a number of years we will have men possibly 35 years old drafted under the provisions of the pending measure, although the law did not intend to draft them when they were over 30. If the Senate, however, wants to raise the age limit above 30 years I think it ought to do so explicitly and say exactly how far it is to raise it and what the exact age limit is to be. It is to carry out the theory of the original law and keep the proposition balanced that I have offered the amendment I suggest.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will not be adopted. There were a good many of us in the Senate who felt, as I believe the Senator himself felt, at the time the original selective-draft act was up for consideration, that the age limits ought to be from 18 to 45, inclusive.

Mr. HARDWICK. Twenty-one to forty-five, in my case.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Twenty-one to forty-five. There were many reasons why the age limits ought to have been made different at that time; but the Congress, in its wisdom, fixed the age limit between 21 and 30. If the amendment proposed by the Senator is adopted I do not know how many men will be released from the operation of the draft who have registered, who are practically fitted for military service, and who have practically arranged their affairs to serve in the Army in case of need.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, does he know how many will be added by this 21-year-old amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; something like 400,000 a year.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the assumption were true on which we enacted this legislation, that each year represented about a million—it did not turn out to be quite that much—it would be something like a million both ways, and the gains one way would at least counterbalance the losses the other way, would they not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Probably; but, Mr. President, if the reports we are getting from day to day have any semblance of truth, we will not only need men who are reaching the age of 30, but we will need men who are past 30 and reaching 45, and possibly men who are between 18 and 21.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, the figures, as nearly as they can be approximated in the department handling the draft, will be about 500,000, I think.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator refers to the number that would be released under the amendment of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; 500,000 that would become 21 years of age each year. That would be relatively true of the other proposal, except that the number would probably be somewhat smaller.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Probably. I said about 400,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Anyhow, it would pretty well balance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no question but that it would pretty nearly balance. In other words, there would be as many men passing the age of 30 as would attain the age of 21. But, Mr. President, I do not think there ought to be any excuses for men who are just passing the age of 30. As I said, the amendment proposes only to release those who have not already enrolled themselves in the military service; but, Mr. President, almost all of those who have become 30 have arranged their business affairs to serve in the Army in case of necessity, and it seems to me that there is no reason why they should not be compelled to serve.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the argument, but does not the Senator think that if we want to do that the fairest thing would be just to raise the age limit and make it 35 or 40, or whatever you want to make it, instead of doing it in this indirect way?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There would be some objection to doing that. I do not think we could change the law in this emergency, and for that reason I think it ought to stand as it is.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will not be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is one little point in this matter that I think might well be called to the attention of the Senate.

In the new questionnaire which has been arranged by the Provost Marshal General all the registrants are divided, as the Senator from Georgia knows, into classes, and in class 1 are grouped all the registrants who are unmarried and who have no dependents. Those men who happen to be 31 or 32 or 33 and who find themselves in class 1, without families and with no dependents, are just as able to serve in the Army as though they were 2 or 3 or 4 years younger.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why is not that equally true of the unmarried man, without any dependents, who is 35 or 36, as compared to a young married man with a growing family who is 27 or 28? The argument goes much further than the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The argument which I am attempting to use would apply equally well if the maximum age were 35; but it is not. It is 31. Therefore I am directing my argument to the present situation.

Mr. HARDWICK. But, if the Senator will pardon me, if that is what he wants to do, why not raise the age limit entirely, so as to get some of these people who are still fitted for military service and who are single?

Mr. WADSWORTH. When we pass beyond the age of 31 or 32 a situation might very well arise where we would have to operate too complicated a machinery in order to get men with no dependents. The Congress thought last year, and I think that judgment was correct—at least, it is correct up to date—what when we pass 31 there are so many of them that have dependents, so many of them that have families, that it is not worth the time of the Government to endeavor to sift out the few who have no domestic or industrial obligations. But that age limit having been passed and the new questionnaire having been put into force, it finds a few men of 31 and who have passed the age of 31 since June 5 last who are in class 1, with no dependents, no families, and no industrial obligations, and I contend that those men might just as well serve.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is entirely true up to 45, Mr. President, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote against the suggestion of my colleague that men passing 31 shall be exempt from draft, although I recognize the fact that ordinarily it would be reasonable. If we were to be content with the Army we now have, if we think the provision we have made for an Army is sufficient, I would agree that his suggestion is sound, for it is reasonable on the surface. But, Mr. President, I think, as speedily as possible, we should prepare to double the present Army.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, then we ought to raise the age limit much higher than it is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly we will have to do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. And, in order to do it justly and fairly, we ought to raise it by law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly we will be compelled to raise it; but that measure has not been perfected, and just how it should be perfected I am not prepared at this time to say.

I hope the Committee on Military Affairs will recognize the fact that the present provision for an Army must be doubled, and doubled just as speedily as it can be doubled. This being true, none to whom the draft now applies ought to be relieved because they reach 31 years of age. I hope, furthermore, that the Committee on Military Affairs and the Senate will realize that our provision for arms and our provision for powder and all our ordnance provisions should be at least doubled, and that drive and force and real administrative power should be put back of the organization that is to create this supply of ordnance and this increase of fighting men.

I know that in the Senate there are men with broad executive experience and administrative capacity; and I believe it to be the duty of Senators with that capacity to keep their eyes upon what is taking place and to help see that our country is speedily prepared for war under a much more vigorous and much more complete condition than anything we have up to this time contemplated in our legislation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, inasmuch as we are dealing with this question of registration, I wish to address an inquiry to the chairman of the committee, and ask if consideration has been given to the advisability and, indeed, the necessity of providing for the registration of resident aliens?

The Senate knows and the public knows that a series of treaties is in process of negotiation between the United States and the powers with which we are cobelligerent in the present war, under the terms of which it is proposed that aliens in this country who are subject to compulsory military service in their own country, without any regard to the age limits prescribed by our law, shall be made subject to the draft in this country.

For instance, take the case of Great Britain: The age limit in Great Britain is from 18 to 40, and it is proposed that British citizens residing in the United States shall be made subject to the draft between those ages; or I believe I may say without violating any confidence of a material character in regard to the treaty that the period is arbitrarily fixed in the treaty as 20 to 40 instead of 18 to 40. But will it not be necessary to provide, and has the committee considered the necessity of providing, that these men who will thus become subject to our draft shall be made to register if they are citizens of a country with which we are cobelligerent and if they are within the age limits prescribed in their own countries?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania will remember that some time during the first half of this session of Congress there was introduced what was called the McCumber resolution, which relegated the consideration of this matter to the State Department, and another resolution, which was introduced by me, providing for the registration of aliens. I think both of these resolutions passed, so that, as far as the Senate is concerned, it has already passed a resolution providing for the registration and draft of aliens. Since that time the Governments interested in the matter have been in consultation over the matter, and I believe the Foreign Relations Committee have reached a conclusion and a treaty agreement on this subject; so until that has been finally adjusted the Military Affairs Committee have not thought it advisable to take up the question of unifying the ages of those subject to the draft—that is, making the age limit in the United States conform to the age limit in Canada and in Great Britain. I should think, however, that would have to be done so that the laws will operate equally between the cobelligerents.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, adding just a word to what the Senator has said, the House of Representatives, by a very large majority, has recently passed a bill on this subject commonly known as the alien-slacker bill. It undertook to deal with this question by providing that aliens who are citizens of countries at war with Germany and her allies who claim exemption because of their alien citizenship shall be deported from this country. That bill is now pending in the Senate, and is now before the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. Does that measure provide for their registration?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. KNOX. I am not raising now the question as to whether or not they should be made subject to our draft. That will be dealt with by these treaties and by such supplementary or primary legislation as may be necessary. I am only speaking now to the question of the registration in order that the machinery by which these treaties can be put into effect may be perfected up to that point.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it does provide for registration in a very general way, by providing that they shall be subject to our draft laws, but I can very well see how the question of treaties being negotiated with these powers is involved, and, at the request of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senate Committee on Immigration has been holding up these matters until these treaties could be considered and agreed to by the Senate and put in force, so that legislation could be shaped. I think it is primarily a military matter, so far as it relates to this question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In view of the fact that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has an amendment to the joint resolution which I am sure will lead to prolonged discussion, and as it involves, in a measure, the question of universal military training, I ask that the joint resolution be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that is done, will the Senator allow me to offer a proposed amendment to the joint resolution, to have it read and printed?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read for the purpose of being printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 4, after the words "divinity schools," it is proposed to insert the words "and students who are preparing for the practice of medicine and surgery in recognized medical schools."

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee if it is the purpose in laying this measure aside to press some other bill that has been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. KIRBY. Otherwise I shall object to its being laid aside.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are quite a number of bills that I think will not require discussion and which I should like to have disposed of.

Mr. KIRBY. Has the Senator called up another one?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if it is agreeable to the chairman, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 272, Senate bill 3980. I think it will take only a very few minutes.

Mr. KIRBY. What is that?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a bill with reference to homing pigeons.

Mr. KIRBY. Is that a war bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. It has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the joint resolution will be temporarily laid aside.

INTERFERENCE WITH THE USE OF HOMING PIGEONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3980, Order of Business 272.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3980) to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it be, and it hereby is, declared to be unlawful to entrap, capture, shoot, kill, possess, or in any way detain an Antwerp, or homing pigeon, commonly called carrier pigeon, which is owned by the United States and bears a band owned and issued by the United States, having thereon the letters "U. S. A." and a serial number.

SEC. 2. That the possession or detention of any pigeon described in section 1 of this act by any person or persons in any loft, house, cage, building, or structure in the ownership or under the control of such person or persons without giving immediate notice by registered mail to the nearest military authorities, shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of this act.

SEC. 3. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in that connection I will state that this bill was referred to the department, and it has been suggested that the word "and," in the sixth line of the first page, be stricken out and the word "or" be substituted, and I offer that amendment. That is the suggestion of the Acting Secretary of War. It has been found also that these pigeons are available for the Navy as well, and a little later on I will offer another amendment on that point. I move now that the word "and," in the sixth line, be stricken out and the word "or" inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. In line 8, after the initials "U. S. A.," I move to insert "or U. S. N."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the designation "U. S. A.," in line 8, page 1, it is proposed to insert "or U. S. N."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the letter of the Secretary be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MARCH 13, 1918.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I beg to invite your attention to the following suggested modifications of the bill, Calendar No. 272, S. 3980, Report No. 296, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, introduced by Mr. FLETCHER in the Senate of the United States on February 28, 1918.

It is requested that the word "and," in the sixth line, be stricken out and the word "or" substituted, so that birds bearing club bands but owned by the Government may be protected by the bill.

It is requested that the word and letters "or U. S. N." be inserted after the letters "U. S. A.," in line 8, thus including homing pigeons belonging to the United States Navy.

Favorable consideration of these modifications by the Committee on Military Affairs is requested, with a view to their adoption, when the bill comes up for final passage in the Senate of the United States.

Very respectfully,

_____,
Acting Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMUTATION OF QUARTERS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the present emergency every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States on duty in the field, or on active duty without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere, the number of rooms prescribed by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 1169), to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by, said wife, child, or dependent parent; and in case such quarters are not available every such commissioned officer shall be paid commutation thereof at the rate authorized by law in cases where public quarters are not available; but nothing in this act shall be so construed as to reduce the allowances now authorized by law for any person in the Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has been looking after this measure, and I request him to submit such statement as he desires to make in reference to it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, this bill provides for furnishing quarters or in lieu thereof payment as commutation of quarters to officers of the Army on active service in the field. Under the law it has been the practice for many years to provide Army officers on duty at garrison posts and in permanent posts with quarters or commutation therefor in the way of a money allowance where it has been impossible to provide the quarters.

Recently a great inequality has arisen because of the fact that many officers are now in the service abroad who maintain abodes for their families upon this side of the water but by reason of the fact that they are absent from a permanent post the allowance is not granted. It is withheld under the existing Army regulations.

The whole matter has been considered by the War College and by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary addressed a letter to the Military Affairs Committee in which he advocates the granting of the allowance. I do not propose to read the whole letter. It has been printed and I presume is available for Senators. It points out the fact that the inequality is most apparent and he advocates strongly that the allowance be granted hereafter.

It is a fact, Mr. President, that at present there are almost as many officers on duty in Washington and at permanent posts in this country where quarters are provided as there are officers in the field. Those who are here are receiving their quarters or commutation therefor and those who are abroad and doing our actual fighting are not in receipt of this allowance.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Boiled down, it just means this, that the officers in the field are discriminated against as between them and the officers who are at home. The officers at home have commutation of quarters and those in the field have no such commutation of quarters. That is the whole question, is it not?

Mr. NEW. Yes, sir; that is the fact.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator has used the term "officers abroad." Is it not a fact that many of our officers within the United States at various camps and cantonments are not receiving their quarters or commutation therefor? Does this apply to them?

Mr. NEW. The commutation is not being furnished to those who are in the field. It is being withheld from them but is being paid to all the others.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The bill proposes to rectify that and to pay to our officers, for instance, at Camp Custer, Mich., the commutation they are not receiving for quarters. The bill reaches that?

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I had supposed, but I did not known, as I was confused by the term.

Mr. NEW. Unless there is a disposition to hear further on this subject I am disposed to let the bill go to a vote.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY NURSE CORPS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3693) to prescribe the personnel of the Army Nurse Corps, the qualifications for appointment and the method of appointment therein, the pay, allowances, and leave of absence of members of said corps, and the conditions under which they may be retired.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Nurse Corps (female) of the Medical Department of the Army shall hereafter be known as the Army Nurse Corps, and shall consist of one superintendent, who shall be a graduate of a hospital training school having a course of instruction of not less than two years; of as many chief nurses, nurses, and reserve nurses as may from time to time be needed and prescribed or ordered by the Secretary of War, and, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of not exceeding six assistant superintendents, and, for each army or separate military force beyond the continental limits of the United States, one director and not exceeding two assistant directors of nursing service, all of whom shall be graduates of hospital training schools and shall have passed such professional, moral, mental, and physical examinations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the superintendent shall be appointed by, and, at his discretion, be removed by, the Secretary of War; that all other members of said corps shall be appointed by, and, at his discretion, be removed by, the Surgeon General by and with the approval of the Secretary of War; but the assistant superintendents, the directors, the assistant directors, and the chief nurses shall be appointed by promotion from other members of the corps, and shall, upon being relieved from duty as such, unless removed for incompetency or misconduct, revert to the grades in the corps from which they were promoted.

SEC. 3. That the annual rate of pay of the members of said corps shall be as follows: Superintendent, $2,400; assistant superintendents and directors, $2,000; assistant directors, $1,800; chief nurses, $360 in addition to the pay of a nurse; nurses, $780 for the first period of three years' service, $840 for the second period of three years' service, $900 for the third period of three years' service, $960 for the fourth period of three years' service, and $1,020 after 12 years' service in said corps (including in all cases time of service as contract nurse); reserve nurses, when upon active duty, will receive the same pay as nurses who have served in the corps for periods corresponding to the full period of their active service; and all members of said corps, in addition to the foregoing, the sum of $10 per month when serving beyond the continental limits of the United States (excepting Porto Rico and Hawaii).

SEC. 4. That members of said Nurse Corps who shall have had active service therein of 20 years (including for the purpose of computation time of service as contract nurse) shall, upon application therefor to the Secretary of War, be placed upon a retired list, and shall thereafter receive 75 per cent of the pay, exclusive of foreign service pay, they were drawing at the time they became entitled to retirement as aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That members of said Nurse Corps shall be entitled to cumulative leave of absence with pay at the rate of 30 days for each calendar year of service in said corps, not exceeding, however, 120 days at one time, and in addition thereto sick leave not exceeding 30 days in any one calendar year in cases of illness or injury incurred in the line of duty.

SEC. 6. That members of said Nurse Corps shall receive transportation and necessary expenses when traveling under orders, and such allowances of quarters and subsistence and, during illness, such medical care as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War; and when at places where no public quarters are available, commutation in lieu thereof, and of heat and light therefor at such rates and upon such conditions as are now or shall hereafter be provided by law.

SEC. 7. That section 19 of chapter 192 of Thirty-first Statutes, page 753; chapter 50 of Thirty-seventh Statutes, page 72; that part of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 575), providing for allowances, subsistence, and medical care during illness for the Superintendent of the Nurse Corps; and that part of the act of March 23, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 249), prescribing the pay of the superintendent and members of the Nurse Corps, be, and the same are, hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY TO DEPENDENT RELATIVES OF DECEASED OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3736) to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relative of any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, immediately upon official notification of the death from wounds or disease, not the result of his own misconduct, of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Regular Army, the Quartermaster General of the Army shall cause to be paid to the widow, and if there be no widow, to the child or children, and if there be no widow or child, to any other dependent relative of such officer or enlisted man previously designated by him, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the date of his death. The Secretary of War shall establish regulations requiring each officer and enlisted man having no wife or child to designate the proper dependent relative to whom this amount shall be paid in case of his death. Said amount shall be paid from funds appropriated for the pay of the Army.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act or in other existing legislation shall be construed as making the provisions of this act applicable to officers or enlisted men of any forces or troops of the Army of the United States other than those of the Regular Army, and nothing in this act shall be construed to apply in commissioned grades to any officers except those holding permanent or provisional appointments in the Regular Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think there ought to be a slight amendment made to the bill, and I direct the attention of the Senate to the reason which suggests it.

The war insurance bill, which was passed on the 6th of October last, in its operation and effect took away the relief which was intended for some widows and dependents of officers in the Army. This bill is intended to correct the hardships that were imposed by that bill, but it does not operate between the 6th of October and the present time. In other words, the effect of the bill, unless it is amended, will only operate from the time of its enactment and for the future. Therefore, I suggest as an amendment to strike out the word "hereafter," in line 3, page 1, and in line 8, page 1, after the word "children" to insert "from and after October 6, 1917."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, strike out the word "hereafter," the second word in the bill, and after the word "children," in line 8, insert the words "from and after October 6, 1917."

Mr. KIRBY. Would it not be better to let this bill go back to the committee and have this particular provision inserted? It being a matter of some importance, and the committee not having had it in mind, I would suggest that it go back, because there is no immediate necessity for the passage of the bill. The condition can be remedied next week as well as now.

I would further suggest that I believe we ought to take up now and fight the matter out, if necessary to fight it out, both the question of the registration of those who are reaching 21 years of age and the question of commandeering the lumber necessary to build aircraft. Those are the two pressing, vital questions before the War Department, and those are the measures which ought to be passed without delay if they are to be passed. I would ask the chairman to let this bill at least go back to the committee, and so far as I am concerned I would prefer that he insist upon the passage of both the other bills to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not see any reason why we should not dispose of this measure right now.

Mr. KIRBY. The committee has not considered that feature of it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I join in the request because no Senators except members of the Military Committee have seen this bill, and I should like to have an opportunity to examine it.

I suggest to the Senator from Oregon one aspect of the measure that occurs to me at this time. I understand the war-risk insurance act provides insurance for the families of officers and enlisted men in the naval and military service who may be killed or who may die while in service. Other provisions are made for the support and maintenance of the families of those who are killed or disabled while in the military or naval service of the United States.

As I understand this bill—I have not had a chance to read it—there will be duplication. The families of those who are injured will receive benefits from this bill and also the liberal allowances provided by other measures. I ask the Senator from Oregon if under this bill in the case of a person who dies while in the employ of the War Department and who never sees active service, whether the family of such person if he carried insurance would get the insurance provided in a former law, together with the allowances provided for the support of dependents, and also benefits and gratuities carried in the pending bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has a report from Gen. Crowder on this bill, and it will answer the question which the Senator has asked. In addition to that, I call the Senator's attention to the report made on the bill, report No. 260, which includes a letter from the Secretary of War, and that answers the Senator's question. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to read the letter of Gen. Crowder.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Gen. Crowder made an analysis of the bill, as follows:

This bill provides for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relative of an officer or enlisted man in the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not a result of his own misconduct.

This bill is designed to reenact the provisions of earlier law upon this subject, except that the present act limits the payment to dependent relatives, whereas the former act permitted the payment to any designated person. The former act was repealed by section 312 of the war-risk insurance act without any debate and apparently without any specific consideration as to the propriety of so doing. In passing the war-risk insurance act attention was concentrated upon the emergency forces being raised for the present war, and the particular considerations which would dictate the allowance of this gratuity to officers and enlisted men in the Regular Army were apparently lost sight of. The theory underlying the gratuity provided by this bill and by former statutes is that the so-called six months' gratuity would provide a fund immediately available to the family upon the decease of the officer or enlisted man so as to take care of the extraordinary expenses of the period of emergency and readjustment caused by the taking off of the main support of the family, and that this gratuity would assist in the support of the dependents during the period of dependency. These benefits were rightly regarded as a part of the remuneration for service in the Regular Army where the pay is, and always has been, small as compared with the wages and salaries of civilians in positions of equal importance. Therefore, one of the unforeseen consequences of the repeal of the former law is to deprive members of the Regular Army of a most important privilege and a privilege of great value to their families. This is, in effect, a reduction of their emoluments at a time when such reduction is most disastrous. Because of the necessity of making adequate provision for nonprofessional soldiers, whose military service is temporary only, the professional men of arms ought not to be deprived of any of the allowances which have been heretofore given them and which they may have justly come to regard as their right in lieu of higher pay.

The repealing of the gratuity provision causes special hardship to the families of officers, for it amounts to the cancellation of a paid-up life insurance policy, ranging in value from $900 to $5,000. And since the compensation granted by Article III of the war-risk insurance act is in many instances less than the gratuity would have been under the gratuity law the officer's family is left in worse position than before the passage of that act, the avowed object of which was to improve his position and that of his family.

This legislation is urgently desired by the War Department.

Mr. KING. I do not quite understand the attitude of Gen. Crowder, and I suppose he speaks for the War Department and for the committee relative to this matter. I understand the war-risk insurance act provided that officers and soldiers may carry insurance for a small annual premium up to $7,500. Another law was enacted which provides certain compensation for widows and dependents of officers and soldiers. In addition to the compensation provided for the dependents, and in addition to the insurance provided by the war-risk insurance act, I understand this bill is to give what are denominated gratuities. I ask the Senator from New Jersey if the bill which heretofore has been passed does not give to the officers and to the men far greater benefits than the gratuities to which he has just referred?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand it has been the practice in the Army to give six months' pay as a gratuity to the widows of those who die of wounds or from other causes, and that the war-risk insurance act repealed that provision. But the gratuity or the insurance in many cases does not reach the amount which this gratuity would reach if they had the gratuity and not the insurance, and therefore an injustice was done the Regular Army widows by reason of the fact that that was repealed. This reserves it, I understand, in addition to the insurance, to the wives or dependent relatives of Regular Army officers and enlisted men only.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator understand that under one of the bills which was passed there was a provision made that the dependents of officers and soldiers should receive liberal monthly contributions or payments from the Federal Government? I know it was stated during the debate that the purpose of the bill was to dispense with the pension system by providing liberal and generous allowances for the support of the families of soldiers and sailors. Now, we propose to make further payments, so that such families will receive the insurance up to $7,500, generous sums for support, and additional payments, as indicated in the pending bill. The claim of the chairman of the committee was that this bill only restored the dependents of officers and soldiers to the same status as they occupied before the war; it is obvious that that contention is unsound, because the insurance bill and the law providing for compensation have greatly added to the sums that will be received by the parties referred to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand it, the dependent allowance of a widow is something like $25 a month, and this is in addition to that. It restores the practice of giving six months' pay to the widow or family of the officer or enlisted man who dies from wounds or disease.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can tell the Senator of two cases that have come to my notice recently that a measure such as is proposed, with the amendment, would relieve. Take the case of Gen. Phil Sheridan's son, Maj. Sheridan, who died a short while ago. He had not been able to save anything, and this will give his widow his pay for six months if the law dates back to October 6.

I have in mind the case of the widow of an Army officer, whose husband died a short while ago in the service, and within the last six weeks an only son, who was in the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps, died of pneumonia, a young captain, in Texas. She practically had no means at all; she was dependent upon that son. Twenty-five dollars a month will not help her very much.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, would she not receive $7,500 as an insurance policy upon the death of the husband and a like amount upon the death of the son?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not sure that she would. Dependents get it only in monthly payments; they do not get it in a lump sum.

Mr. KING. But it amounts to the full sum permitted by the law, which is $7,500.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a splendid provision, but the war-insurance act was made to meet just that condition and to take care of the dependents of those who lost their lives during the war. However, for an immediate situation such as I have described, it does not protect them at all; it does not help them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know that I should object to this at all, but as I understood the Senator, this was merely to put the dependents of officers and soldiers back in the same situation as they were before the legislation which had been enacted during this war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does.

Mr. KING. We have enacted two measures which are highly advantageous and which I think are very proper measures for dependents of deceased officers and men. Those provisions did not exist prior to the war. In view of those two provisions, the dependents of officers and soldiers are deriving far greater benefits than were obtained by the dependents of officers and soldiers prior to the enactment of the two measures to which I have just referred.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no question, Mr. President, but that the war-insurance act was a great relief for the future of the dependents of soldiers who lost their lives in the service, but it is wholly inadequate to meet the immediate situation.

Mr. WARREN. If I may add a word to what has been stated by the chairman of the committee, I will state that the officers and soldiers who were in the service before that law passed are not sufficiently covered as to their burial and ready money for their families. The men who enlisted prior to that later insurance legislation enlisted under this kind of proposed law, and they had a right to expect that their dependents would have six months' pay and their burial expenses. Their wives and the soldiers themselves expected it. They are left unprovided for. As the chairman of the committee has well said, this provides immediate cash for their burial and a little besides.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not know that I object to this sort of an amendment, but it seems to me that the committee might consider it in committee and come back here understanding it; but I do not understand it. I do not know whether this is in addition to all the insurance that is granted or whether it is for some other purpose. I do not know whether or not it reaches the man who is already insured. It may be that I would be glad to support it, but it is not imperative that it should be passed immediately. We might pass this measure just as well next week and now dispose of other matters, which, it seems to me, are necessary. I think this should go over, because the view which is now proposed has not been considered by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator from Arkansas overlooked this fact: This is the old law reenacted. That bill had been considered in the committee and had been reported from the committee and now stands on the calendar in the regular way.

Mr. KIRBY. I have understood that we have already passed the war-risk insurance bill, which repeals the old law.

Mr. WARREN. No; it has been construed that it repeals it, but it does not do so in exact terms. This, however, is a matter which was considered in the committee and reported, as I say, in the regular way and is now regularly before us.

Mr. KIRBY. As I understand, the chairman now proposes an amendment which has not been considered by the committee, and one which I do not understand. I will say frankly that I might be very glad to support the amendment; but I thought it might very well go back to the committee and be reported on Monday, and that other matters, which had been passed unanimously, which are absolutely imperative, and which demand immediate consideration, might be now considered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is merely to bring the provisions of the bill that is now on the calendar back to October 6. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My attention being diverted, I did not catch the inquiry of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] desired an explanation of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, and the Senator from Oregon being engaged for the moment I ventured to say that my understanding was that all the Senator's amendment does is to provide that the operation of the bill that is now on the calendar shall go back to and commence from October 6.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So that the families of officers and enlisted men who have died since the war-insurance act was enacted would receive this six months' pay.

Mr. KIRBY. Does that mean the men who are not insured under that act?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has nothing to do with whether or not a man is insured under the war-risk insurance act. It is simply restoring a provision of law which by a mistake was inferentially repealed in the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. KIRBY. The purpose is to grant insurance to all men who are in the Army, and it is an additional gratuity?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They had this gratuity before.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand; but they did not have any insurance before.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And they do not have to take any insurance now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KIRBY. I will make no further objection; I only made a suggestion. If other members of the committee understand it, very well. I merely thought that it might be better to have the matter go back to the committee. I did not understand it, and I do not understand it now; but that is unimportant.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I can explain it.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not ask any further information on the question. I only asked that the matter might go back to the committee, because I thought it ought properly to be first considered there.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will try to explain it anyway, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will not yield the floor unless the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that without this amendment there would be a class of officers' families, between October 6, when the law went out of force, and the date of the enactment of this proposed law, who would not be included in the provisions of the law. That would be manifestly unjust, and the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] simply puts them all in exactly the same class. In other words, on October 6 the old law was repealed, and, of course, the new legislation should date back so as to include all of those affected by that law. It seems to me it is perfectly plain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment, Mr. President. Instead of the phraseology of the amendment as I suggested it a while ago, it would clarify the situation to amend it by adding after the word "Army," in line 6, the words "from and after October 6, 1917."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the words "Regular Army," it is proposed to insert "from and after October 6, 1917," and to permit the word "hereafter" to stand in line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERS OF ARMED FORCES OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9571.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9571) to authorize the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands drafted into the service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the Philippine Scouts be, and they hereby are, made eligible to appointment as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands which have been or shall hereafter be drafted into the service of the United States; and any such officer of the Philippine Scouts so appointed as an officer in said drafted forces shall not thereby vacate his commission in the Philippine Scouts, and in case his commission in said Philippine Scouts shall terminate while holding a commission in said drafted forces as aforesaid, he shall thereupon be eligible to reappointment as an officer of said Philippine Scouts notwithstanding his retention of a commission in said drafted forces.

SEC. 2. That in computing period of service for any purpose officers of the Philippine Scouts shall be credited with all time served as commissioned officers in the drafted forces mentioned in section 1 of this act.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this bill authorizes the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands which have been or which shall hereafter be drafted into the service of the United States. The War Department considers it advisable to officer the Philippine militia drafted into the service of the United States to some extent from officers of the Philippine Scouts themselves. With that end in view the bill which has just been read was prepared by the War Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF ENLISTED MEN TO FORMER GRADES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9903) to provide for restoration to their former grades of enlisted men discharged to accept commissions, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any enlisted man of the Army of the United States who has heretofore been, or shall hereafter be, discharged to accept a commission in any component part of the Army of the United States, and who shall tender himself for enlistment within three months after the termination of his commissioned service, shall, subject to such examination for enlistment as is provided by law or regulation, be accepted and be restored to the grade held by him before being discharged to accept such commission; and in computing service for retirement and continuous-service pay he shall be credited with all time served with the forces of the United States, and his service shall be deemed continuous, notwithstanding the interruption thereof by the changes of status provided for herein.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF MILITARY SUPPLIES, MATERIALS, AND EQUIPMENT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3803.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3803) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. On page 1, line 6, I move to strike out the words "war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States," and to insert "supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war."

Mr. President, that amendment was suggested by the Secretary of War. I desire to submit the reasons which are given by the War Department for the enactment of the bill. I will not read them unless the Senate desires me to do so, but I will ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This bill authorizes the President, during the existing emergency, in his discretion, and upon such terms as he shall deem expedient, through the head of any executive department, to sell any war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States, to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, or to any foreign State or Government engaged in war against any Government with which the United States is at war.

The bill further provides that the proceeds of any such sale shall revert to the appropriation out of which the purchase of the supplies, materials, or equipment was paid.

The object of this bill is twofold: First, the War Department regards it as desirable, indeed necessary, to from time to time, sell war supplies, materials, and equipment to the allied Governments, in the same way that the allied Governments are selling war supplies, materials, and equipment to the United States. It is believed that efficient correlation can not exist between the allied Governments without the authority of law to make such sales.

The necessity for the authority proposed by this bill is also found in conditions arising under Government contracts for the production of war supplies. In making these contracts it is found necessary to authorize contractors to purchase additional machinery, and to make that machinery become the property of the Government when its use has been fulfilled. At that time, therefore, the Government must either lose the value of this property or sell it. It has been found by the different branches of the War Department that it would result in economy to be able to insert in its contracts for the manufacture of war supplies a clause by which the contractor agrees to purchase such machinery after it has served the Government use, and to take it at an agreed price, dependent upon the extent of its use at the time it is turned over by the Government to the contractor. The War Department believes that a large saving could be made to the Government if the President were given the powers which this bill authorizes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "any," it is proposed to strike out the words "war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States," and to insert "supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, and upon such terms as he shall deem expedient, through the head of any executive department, to sell any supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war, to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, or to any foreign State or Government engaged in war against any Government with which the United States is at war; and any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale shall immediately become available as part of any existing appropriation for the support of that department, corps, or bureau which furnished the war supplies, materials, or equipment so sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war."

TEMPORARY PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3801.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3801) to amend section 8 of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 8 of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Vacancies in the grades of the Regular Army resulting from the appointment of officers thereof to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for, shall be filled by temporary promotions and appointments in the manner prescribed by section 114 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, except that such promotions and appointments may be made by the President alone when such vacancies are in grades not above that of colonel; and officers appointed under the provisions of this act to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall not vacate their permanent commissions or be prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing in the Regular Army."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DETAILS OF OFFICERS TO EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 3528.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3528) to suspend for the period of the present emergency sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and they hereby are, suspended for and during the period of the present emergency, but for such period only, and that upon the termination of said emergency said suspension shall cease and terminate and said sections shall thereupon be and become reinstated and of the same force and effect as if this suspension had not been made.

SEC. 2. That during the present emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail such number of officers of the Army of the United States, either active or retired, not above the grade of colonel, as may be necessary for duty as professors and assistant professors of military science and tactics at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained; but the total number of active officers so detailed at educational institutions shall not exceed 1,000, and no officer shall be so detailed who has not had at least one year's commissioned service in the Army of the United States. Retired officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel so detailed shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grade, and retired officers above the grade of major so detailed shall receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under like detail.

SEC. 3. That during the present emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail for duty at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are matained such number of enlisted men, either active or retired, of the Army of the United States as he may deem necessary, but the active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall have had at least one year's active service, and the total number of such active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall not exceed 3,000, and shall be additional in their respective grades to those otherwise authorized for the Army of the United States. While detailed under the provisions of this section retired noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States shall receive active pay and allowances.

SEC. 4. That during the present emergency such arms, tentage, and equipment as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary for proper military training shall be supplied by the Government to schools and colleges other than those provided for in section 47 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, having a course of military training prescribed by the Secretary of War, and having not less than 100 physically fit male students above the age of 14 years, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized during the present emergency to detail commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States to said schools and colleges, detailing not less than one such officer or noncommissioned officer to each 500 students under military instruction; but no officer or noncommissioned officer shall be so detailed who has not had at least one year's active service in the Army of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, let me state, very briefly, the purpose of this bill. It is to suspend for the period of the present emergency sections 45, 46, and 56 of the national defense act. These sections of the national defense act provided for detail of officers of the Army as professors of military science and tactics at certain educational institutions where units of Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained and provided for the supply of arms, tentage, and equipment to certain schools and colleges having a course in military training prescribed by the Secretary of War. The present bill is offered as a war-time emergency, to extend the scope of the peace-time provisions by allowing a detail of a greater number of officers to these institutions and by also allowing a detail thereto of officers of the Army of the United States instead of confining the detail to officers of the Regular Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the word "emergency" is rather an indefinite word. Would it not be better to say "for the period of the present war"? We all understand what it means, of course. I suppose it means the present war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator proposes an amendment of that kind, I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say that I am not sure that the bill uses the word "emergency."

Mr. GALLINGER. The title does, and I assumed the bill did, too.

Mr. THOMAS. The bill does, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is both in the body and in the title.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, to substitute the word "war" for the word "emergency" wherever it occurs in the body of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The title should be made to conform to that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. That can be done later.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President during the existing war to sell war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States."

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that Senate bill 3778 be indefinitely postponed, because the same measure has already passed both branches of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3778) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DESECRATION OF THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 121, with reference to desecration of the flag of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 121) to prevent the desecration of the flag of the United States, and to provide punishment therefor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to hear that bill read. I am very heartily in favor of it if it is in the terms that I think it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall place or cause to be placed any word, figure, mark, picture, or design upon any flag, standard, or ensign of the United States, or who shall expose or cause to be exposed to public view any such flag, standard, or ensign upon which shall have been placed any word, figure, mark, picture, or design, or to which shall be attached, appended, affixed, or annexed any word, figure, mark, picture, or design, or any advertisement of any nature, or who shall expose to public view, manufacture, sell, or expose for sale, give away, or have in possession for sale or to give away, or for use for any purpose any article of merchandise, or anything for carrying or transporting merchandise, upon which shall have been placed a representation of any such flag, standard, or ensign, to advertise, call attention to, decorate, mark, or distinguish, for the purpose of sale, barter, or trade, the article or thing upon which so placed, or who shall publicly or privately mutilate, deface, defile, or defy, trample upon, or cast contempt, either by words or act, upon any such flag, standard, or ensign, shall be fined not more than $500 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 2. That the words "flag," "standard," or "ensign" as used in this act shall include any picture or representation thereof, made of or represented on any substance and of any size, evidently purporting to be of said flag, standard, or ensign, and any representation of any such flag, standard, or ensign, or of any part thereof, upon which shall be shown the colors, the stars, or the stripes, or any combination thereof, of any such flag, standard, or ensign, which the person seeing the same, without deliberation, may believe to represent such flag, standard, or ensign, or part thereof.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not apply to any newspaper, periodical, book, pamphlet, circular, certificate, diploma, warrant, commission, or appointment to office, ornamental picture, badges, or stationery for use in correspondence, on any of which shall be printed, painted, or placed on any such flag, ensign, or standard, disconnected from any advertisement for the purpose of sale, barter, or trade; nor shall it apply to any act permitted by the Army or Navy Regulations of the United States; nor shall it apply to any flag, standard, or ensign belonging to a Grand Army Post, a camp of the Legion of Spanish War Veterans, or which is the property or is used in the service of the United States or of any State or Territory, upon which shall be placed the names of battles or the name and number of any organization lawfully entitled to the use thereof; nor shall it apply to any patriotic organization or society; nor shall it apply to any patriotic demonstration or decorations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the exceptions seem to be pretty numerous, and perhaps they cover everything that ought to be included. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if the provisions of the bill would prohibit the use of the names of political candidates attached to the bottom of the flag, which is the custom at the present time; or would these exceptions allow that to be done?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not sure about that, Mr. President. It probably would not preclude the use of the flag there.

Mr. GALLINGER. It probably would not? I am not very particular about it. It is a custom that we have followed. They do not cover the flag in any way, but are simply attached to the bottom of the flag and do no harm.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The district attorney of Oregon, who is a very vigilant prosecutor, said that there was no way to punish men for desecration of the flag in some particulars wherein it was being desecrated by men who are disloyal to the Government, and he was very anxious that this bill should be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in profound sympathy with the purpose of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it excludes every valid use of the flag, but it precludes and prevents the use of it by those who want to desecrate it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I imagine there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, like the Senator from New Hampshire, I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the bill. I believe that it is the duty of Congress, by appropriate and intelligent legislation, to secure the national emblem from desecration, or from any willful exhibition of disrespect toward it or for it; but the first section of the bill is drawn in such general terms that I am afraid a great many unconscious violations of it will be followed by rather severe penal provisions.

The element of willfulness or intent is essential to the commission of all crimes, and in the absence of such intent the penal statutes of the country are innocuous. This bill does not use the word "willful," or anything synonymous with it, in the recitals of the first section. I can easily understand how a child, in a spirit of playfulness, on some holiday or during the games which they indulge in, might, without any intention whatever and in the most innocent way imaginable, bring itself within the provisions of this bill. Indeed, I can see how persons of mature age might do the same thing. I think, therefore, that to safeguard all people who are innocent of any willful or criminal intent such matters as I have referred to should be exempted from the application of the penal provisions of the bill.

I suggest, therefore, that on line 3, page 1, between the words "shall" and "place," there be inserted the words "willfully or knowingly"; also the same amendment, on line 5, between the words "shall" and "expose." Then, immediately after the word "expose," on line 11, I move to insert the same words; also on page 2, line 7, after the word "privately."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Oregon a verbal amendment in section 2, line 15, on page 2? As the bill reads, we have the words "evidently purporting to be of said flag." Of course, it would involve a repetition of the words "picture or representation," but I think, for the purpose of clearness in the bill, the words "to be" should be followed by the words "a picture or representation," so as to read: "purporting to be a picture or representation of said flag."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF MILITARY STORES AND SUPPLIES.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if agreeable to the chairman of the committee, I move that the Senate take up Senate bill 3982.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3982) to suspend certain restrictions on the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 1133, United States Revised Statutes, and of section 9 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as restricts the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies and the work of construction and repair to officers of the Quartermaster Corps, be, and the same is hereby, suspended for the period of the existing emergency.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill on line 11, so as to read "the period of the present war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 11 it is proposed to strike out the words "existing emergency" and insert "present war."

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, while I have no objection to striking out "emergency" and inserting "war," we commenced in the very beginning to say "emergency," and it seems to me it ought to obtain throughout the whole legislation, as it might include a little time after the war. That has been the program throughout. I have no objection to its being called "war," but I should like to have the Senator from Florida mention briefly the necessity of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will state that this has particular reference to the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies, and therefore I do not believe any fault can be found with the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, because these purchases and this distribution will have to take place during the present war.

The reason of it is stated by the department to the effect that it has been found that some of the functions being performed by the Quartermaster Corps in the way of the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies and in works of construction and repair can be performed under existing conditions more efficiently by other branches of the War Department. This is particularly true in works of construction. It is believed that this work can be more efficiently and expeditiously performed in many instances by the Engineer Corps. It is plainly evident that under the pressure brought about by war preparations it is unwise to require that all this work be performed by a particular corps or department. To allow some latitude and discretion must necessarily make for efficiency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF ENLISTED MEN TRAVELING ON DUTY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3691.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3691) to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men of the Army traveling on duty under competent orders, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter under such regulations and within such maximum rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War enlisted men of the Army may be reimbursed for actual expenses of travel, including subsistence and lodging, incurred while traveling under competent orders and not embraced in the movement of troops, or that they may be paid a flat per diem therefor in lieu of such reimbursement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been necessarily absent from the Chamber for a little while, and I will venture to ask the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, if he has called up the bill that I spoke to him about on yesterday?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The bill providing for the commutation of quarters?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That has been passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad of that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This completes all the bills that were reported out of the committee except probably three that will entail a good deal of discussion, and I will ask that they go over for the present. I shall await an opportunity to bring them up. This is all I desire to impose upon the Senate this morning.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following conference report:

The report was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 8696.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. ASHURST. I, of course, yield; but I want to make as rapid progress with the pending bill as possible. I will yield for a few moments.

Mr. PHELAN. I wish to bring up the bill (S. 2910) providing for an additional judge for the northern district of California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado objects.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Surveying and allotting Indian reservations (reimbursable)," on page 2, line 9, after the words "Indian lands," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey or allotment of Indians lands, $50,000, to be repaid proportionally out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Irrigation on Indian reservations (reimbursable)," on page 4, line 23, after the word "One," to strike out "supervising engineer" and insert "superintendent of irrigation," so as to make the clause read:

One superintendent of irrigation competent to pass upon water rights, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Suppressing liquor traffic," on page 5, line 21, after "$150,000," to insert:

Provided, That the sale of anhalonium, or peyote, to an Indian, or its introduction into the Indian country, shall be, and is hereby, declared to be a violation of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506), and punishable in accordance with the penalties provided for therein: Provided further, That possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the country where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be an offense and punished in accordance with the provisions of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506).

So as to make the clause read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $150,000: Provided, That the sale of anhalonium, or peyote, to an Indian, etc.

Mr. ASHURST. There are two members of the committee who happen to be necessarily absent, and I ask that this amendment be passed over for the present. The members are on the way; they are coming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Relieving distress," etc., on page 6, after line 13, to strike out:

Mr. STERLING. I have not had time to compare the amendment proposed by the committee with the House provision under the same head. I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain the essential differences, if he will, between the House provision and the committee amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the interrogatory of the Senator from South Dakota, let me call his attention to page 6, commencing with the word "Provided," in line 18. That proviso is stricken from the bill, so there will not be any authorization for new construction. The committee were of the opinion that at this particular time it is not expedient to provide for any new buildings except where it is a matter of urgency. That, I believe, without a more careful perusal, constitutes the main change of the text, except that there are some changes in amounts. Some have been reduced, I believe, a very small amount, and some have been increased, in accordance with the estimates of the department. Those constitute the changes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Support of Indian schools," on page 9, line 4, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$1,600,000" and insert "$1,700,000," so as to read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for, for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 11, on page 10.

Mr. CURTIS. There is a committee amendment on page 9, in line 23, to which I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee. The sum of $400,000 was to be reduced to $350,000 in the appropriation for construction, lease, purchase, repair, and so forth, of school and agency buildings. That item ought to be reduced to $350,000.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator is correct about that. In other words, "$400,000" should be changed to "$350,000." Does the Senator move that amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. That was the amendment agreed to by the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. That is my recollection of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 23, strike out "$400,000" and insert "$350,000," so as to read:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $350,000: Provided—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I would kindly ask to have that go over for the present. Some of these items which were agreed upon in the committee would possibly reduce the amount to $350,000, but I merely wish to have an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the Senator from North Dakota that the assistant commissioner agreed that an item in the bill was increased $100,000. There should be a reduction in that item of $50,000 and another item should be reduced to $50,000. I will state to the Senator if there is any difficulty about it I shall bring the matter to the attention of the conferees and attempt to have it restored, but I am satisfied I am right and I would like to have the amendment agreed to at this time.

Mr. GRONNA. With that statement, I have no objection to agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Per capita cost," on page 11, line 7, after the word "unless," to strike out "the attendance in any school shall be less than 100 pupils, in which case the Secretary of the Interior may authorize a per capita expenditure of not to exceed $225: Provided, That the total amount appropriated for the support of such school shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That the number of pupils in any school entitled to the per capita allowance hereby provided for shall be determined by taking the average attendance for the entire fiscal year and not any fractional part thereof: Provided further, That the foregoing shall also apply to expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918," and insert "by reason of epidemic, accident, or other sufficient cause, the enrollment is so reduced or cost of maintenance so high that a larger expenditure is absolutely necessary, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may allow a larger per capita expenditure of not to exceed $225: Provided, That the total amount appropriated for the support of such school shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That the number of pupils in any school entitled to the per capita allowance hereby provided for shall be determined by taking the average enrollment for the entire school year and not any fractional part thereof: Provided further, That the foregoing shall also apply to expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918," so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter, except for pay of superintendents and for transportation of goods and supplies and transportation of pupils, not more than $200 shall be expended from appropriations made in this act, or any other act, for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any Indian school unless, by reason of epidemic, accident, or other sufficient cause, the enrollment is so reduced or cost of maintenance so high that a larger expenditure is absolutely necessary, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may allow a larger per capita expenditure of not to exceed $225: Provided, That the total amount appropriated for the support of such school shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That the number of pupils in any school entitled to the per capita allowance hereby provided for shall be determined by taking the average enrollment for the entire school year and not any fractional part thereof: Provided further, That the foregoing shall also apply to expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $475,000, of which sum at least $75,000 may be used for the employment of field matrons: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

Provided, also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, physicians, and stockmen provided for in this act shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "General expenses of Indian Service," on page 15, line 24, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That not to exceed $15,000 of this amount shall be used for continuing the work of the Competency Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma" and insert "That not to exceed $5,000 of this amount shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Industry among Indians (reimbursable)," on page 17, line 1, after the word "crops," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to read:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting.

Mr. ASHURST. Before passing entirely from page 32 I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the numerals in line 1 and the numerals also in line 11.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offered an amendment to that this morning, which was ordered to be printed, and which I would ask to have now considered, reducing the appropriation to $175,000. I need not explain it, for I understand it to be satisfactory to the chairman of the committee and to the Office of Indian Affairs.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no doubt it is satisfactory, but I did not hear the Senator's statement as to the amount.

Mr. KELLOGG. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly; I have no objection to it whatever.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the chairman of the committee that after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior and with Mr. Meritt, in the Indian Office, by Representative STEENERSON, Representative KNUTSON, from Minnesota, and myself, it was agreed that the appropriation might be reduced to $175,000.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question, if I may. Did he have any assurance from the department that there would be any reduction in this expenditure next year? There are only something over 11,000 Indians on the reservation, and I understand about 3,000 of them might be placed in the incompetent class. It seems to me that $185,000 is a very large expenditure unless there are some conditions up there at this time which justify it.

Mr. KELLOGG. In answer to the Senator from Kansas I will be very glad to explain it. This appropriation was stricken from the bill in the House. It was reported to the House at $185,000, and, on the motion of Representative MILLER of Minnesota, the entire appropriation was stricken from the bill. It came to my attention from the gentleman representing the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota that this appropriation was in violation of the treaty and the statute of Congress and should not be taken from the principal fund.

I have another amendment which I will offer, which bears upon this question. I took the matter up with the gentleman representing the Minnesota Chippewas and asked for a detailed statement of the appropriation. After an examination of this statement with him and a delegation of Chippewas, I took up the matter with the Indian Office. The Secretary of the Interior and Mr. Meritt stated that if the appropriation could be maintained during the present session of Congress at $175,000, an investigation would be made of the expenditure of this money and all the details surrounding the appropriation, with a view of reducing the appropriation or cutting it out entirely if the court should hold it to be illegal.

After the best examination I could make of the subject, I concluded, after conference with Members of the House, that perhaps it would be best for the present year not to strike out the entire amount.

While I am explaining this amendment I will also go further. I move also to insert, after line 19, on page 32, the following:

That any case now pending in any court created under authority of Congress, or that may hereafter be brought in any such court, to test the validity of the expenditure of any of the trust funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall be advanced upon the docket of any such court and upon the dockets of the appellate courts to the earliest practicable hearing.

When I prepared that amendment a case involving the legality of this appropriation from the principal fund of the Chippewa Indians was pending in the courts of the District of Columbia. Several cases have been brought on for hearing, but it seemed impossible to get a hearing before the appropriation was all spent. The law officers of the Interior Department opposed the advancement of the cases. The chairman of the committee said that, if it were proper to offer such an amendment to the bill, he was perfectly willing that it should be done; and I will say to the chairman and to the Senate that such provisions are frequently placed in legislation; in the antitrust act and in other acts cases arising under them are required to be given preference by the court, and to be advanced. It is merely, I might say, advisory; the court is not compelled to set aside all other business and to advance these cases. I have, however, the assurance of the Secretary of the Interior that this litigation will be advanced; and the department is now considering another amendment to send the whole subject to the Court of Claims, where an appeal can be immediately taken to the Supreme Court and thus secure a decision of this much-mooted question.

I should like to explain very briefly to the chairman of the committee the point made by the counsel for the Chippewa Indians. Under the treaty and under the statute of Congress, in 1889 a large amount of Indian lands was ceded to the United States and sold. Section 7 of the law provides as follows—and I will ask that this be inserted in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands in conformity with the provisions of this act shall, after deducting all the expenses of making the census, of obtaining the cession and relinquishment, of making the removal and allotments, and of completing the surveys and appraisals in this act provided, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually, for the period of 50 years after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in manner following: One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of 50 years, except in cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use, and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians, and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of 50 years, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians in their midst and for their benefit; and at the expiration of the said 50 years the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living, in cash, in equal shares: Provided, That Congress may, in its discretion, from time to time, during the said period of 50 years, appropriate, for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, a portion of said principal sum, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof.

Mr. KELLOGG. I merely desire to say that under that statute this fund was made a trust fund—which shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually for the period of 50 years, after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in the manner following: One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of 50 years, except in cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use, and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians, and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of 50 years, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians in their midst and for their benefit; and at the expiration of the said 50 years the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living in cash in equal shares: Provided, That Congress may, in its discretion, from time to time during the said period of 50 years, appropriate, for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, a portion of said principal fund, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof.

Now, it appears that for years appropriations have been made from this principal sum for general purposes among the Chippewa Indians—for the maintenance of schools and roads and for the maintenance of the Indian agencies and various employees—as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is more familiar with this subject than I am, has stated. My attention was not called to the matter until within the last few weeks.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I think that the delegation of Chippewa Indians which called on me expressed their opinion and their opposition of this appropriation of $185,000, largely because it was not used for their benefit; that it was not used for educational purposes, but was used more for paying general expenses and paying the officers appointed, of course, by the Indian Office. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is correct. I will say that the delegation, with their counsel, called on me several times, and together we went over every detail of this appropriation for expenditures during the last Congress. They claim that this money is not expended for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support, but for expenses which accrue by reason of the administration of Indian affairs not only in Minnesota but elsewhere. I think most of it is expended for the administration of the Indian Office and Indian agencies in Minnesota.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I desire to say that on page 13 of the committee report on this bill will be found a very succinct and brief, yet complete, statement of the moneys on hand. From that it will be seen that the amount of the principal sum on deposit in the Treasury on June 30, 1917, was approximately $5,605,000, 5 per cent of which would be $280,025, whereas the appropriation asked for is only $185,000, or $95,250 less than the maximum amount which could be appropriated under the law, assuming that that is the law. So, if the Senator's amendment should prevail, we would be simply appropriating $105,250 less than the maximum amount we could appropriate. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. The chairman of the committee is correct about that. I am simply making this explanation in order to bring the matter before the Senate and the committee. It is true that 5 per cent of the principal of the trust fund would amount to more than this appropriation, but that is 5 per cent per annum, and unless the fund were increased the 5 per cent per annum, of course, would take it all in 20 years.

The Indians claim that it was not the intention of Congress nor the understanding of the Chippewa Indians, or their understanding of this negotiation, that the principal fund of this trust should be used for the ordinary expenses of the Indian officers in Minnesota or elsewhere. Of course, that is a legal question which they are entitled to present to the courts and to have a decision upon, but it would seem as though by providing the manner in which this fund should be expended, for schools and other purposes in the State, that Congress did not intend that the balance of this trust fund should be spent for maintaining the Indian officers.

I am not expressing any opinion as to what the court will ultimately hold, but I will say that the committee of Indians and their counsel, after having it fully explained to them, were willing that for the present year this appropriation should be continued at $175,000. I do not speak for all the Indians, of course. It seemed to me at the time, and it does now, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, that this appropriation for maintaining the Indian officers, with that number of Indians in Minnesota, is excessive. However, for the present year, with the understanding that this is to be fully investigated and to be considered before another appropriation bill comes before the Senate, I am willing that the appropriation shall stand at $175,000. I ask, however, the consent of the chairman of the committee to the second amendment which I offer, which provides for the advancement of any case involving the construction of the treaty and of the statute.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, speaking simply individually, and for no other person, I will say that I have no objection whatever to the amendment striking out the numerals "$185,000" and inserting "$175,000"; but I should like to have the Senator's second amendment read after the first shall have been disposed of, because I did not fully catch its purport.

Mr. KELLOGG. Before the amendment is read, let me say one further word to the chairman of the committee. He will notice that the last proviso on page 32 refers to this litigation, as follows:

Provided further, That should the courts hold that the expenditure of Chippewa tribal funds for the purposes herein named is unauthorized, any amount expended of the sum appropriated by this act shall be reimbursed to the said Chippewa tribal funds from any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

It seems to me proper that at this place there should be a provision in the bill that the cases should be advanced and that there should be a hearing at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ASHURST. I simply asked for information. The Senator from Minnesota is a very able, experienced, and profound lawyer, but it seems rather unusual to me in legislation to ask any court to advance a case. I have no opposition to make to it whatever; it may be unusual, but I see no objection to it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it is not very unusual. As I said before, such provisions have been placed in the laws in relation to many other subjects.

Mr. ASHURST. I can see no objection to it at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the chairman of the committee that the probability is that the Indian Office will agree on a separate bill, which will send this whole subject to the Court of Claims, and this may not be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment will be reconsidered, and the first amendment submitted by the Senator will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$185,000" and to insert "$175,000," and in line 11, on the same page, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$185,000" and to insert "$175,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 19, it is proposed to insert a new proviso, as follows:

Provided, That any case now pending in any court created under authority of Congress, or that may hereafter be brought in any such court to test the validity of the expenditure of any of the trust funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, shall be advanced upon the docket of any such court and upon the dockets of the appellate courts to the earliest practicable hearing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the chairman of the committee will permit me, I desire to say that, so far as the first amendment is concerned, the reduction of the appropriation was not satisfactory to the committee of Chippewa Indians and their representative. They protested that no appropriation should be made out of their principal fund, and that in any event the appropriation was excessive. But in view of all the circumstances and the assurances of the Interior Department, and even though it appealed to me as excessive, they were willing for the current year that the appropriation should stand at $175,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall take advantage of this pleasing interlude, which involves the reduction instead of the increase of an appropriation, to call the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment to the appropriation on page 25, beginning with line 17 and ending with line 21. Its purpose is to purchase lands for homeless Indians in California, and the sum of $20,000 is appropriated for that purpose.

The somewhat peculiar character of this appropriation caught my eye, Mr. President, during the first session of the first Congress of which I was a Member. I was then told that it was a sort of standing appropriation; that it was one which had been renewed from time to time until it became a fixed feature of the Indian appropriation bill. Since then we have steadfastly and steadily appropriated money for the purchase of land for homeless Indians in California. The more money we appropriate for homeless Indians in California the more homeless the Indians become.

I think the statement was made, either last year or the year before, that nearly all the homeless Indians had been provided with homes and that it would not be necessary to appropriate gratuities from the Treasury to purchase further homes for more homeless Indians; but, unfortunately, these homeless Indians seem to be like the chinch bug and the gypsy moth and the other insects which so picturesquely appear upon the pages of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and, as a consequence, we must continue these appropriations.

I am not going to object to this appropriation nor to any other. I have discovered, from a somewhat hopeless experience, that objections, sometimes criticisms, of various items in these bills have no tendency whatever except to assure their passage; but I will suggest to the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill the ultimate consideration of a change in the phraseology when the bill comes before the Senate for final passage. Instead of reading "for the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California," I would vary the monotony of this appropriation by changing it so as to read, "For the purchase of homeless Indians for lands in California." [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would make a pitiable spectacle of myself if I attempted in anyway to measure powers of sarcasm and ridicule with my distinguished friend from Colorado. I expected his speech; it sounded natural; I enjoyed it, and it does not grow weary by reiteration. But seriously, Mr. President, so far from objecting to the Senator's statement, I welcome it. He is always on guard as a true, sincere, and sometimes an effective watchdog of the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS. Never effective.

Mr. ASHURST. In order that the country and the Senate may know, as they have a right to know, just why this appropriation appears here it is my duty, and my right no less, to give very briefly the reasons for the item.

The Senator, of course, will observe that it is not a Senate committee amendment. Another branch of Congress sends this text to us. The Senate committee has not varied or altered it in any particular; and in order that we may know what consideration moved another branch of Congress to adopt the provision and moved the committee of the Senate to agree to the item, I will read from page 139 of the House hearings, being a statement of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, made to the House Committee on Indian Affairs, respecting this item, as follows:

It is conservatively estimated that there are at least 2,700 homeless Indians in California for whom no land has been provided. Through various appropriations by Congress homes have thus far been provided for about 4,771 of these Indians, covering an area of 8,422 acres, for which aid the Indians are deeply appreciative. As there are many of these Indians still without homes and who should receive assistance from the Government, the sum asked for, viz, $20,000, will enable additional options on land to be taken with a view to ultimately closing further purchases and otherwise extending them needed relief. These Indians are scattered throughout many counties of the State of California, and the work of providing homes is slow, inasmuch as much travel is required by the agent detailed for the purpose of finding suitable sites and entering into negotiations with intending sellers.

Now, Mr. President, in order that I may not be called upon to repeat this statement, I will take time enough to say that every observing man must know—and certainly the distinguished Senator from Colorado, who is one of the ablest Members of the Senate, must know—that the Indian is a child of nature. He, like other people, must have land upon which to live. I will not recount—it would be wearisome to the Senate to do so—the struggles which have taken place between the white man on the one hand and the Indian on the other, as a result of which the Indian, who believed he had a vast domain of land to which he could retreat and retire, yielded up his possessions, sometimes by treaty and sometimes overcome by force; but the simple fact remains that the white line is drawing closer and closer about him, and the Indian is retiring from year to year into a smaller domain.

It is my own opinion, I wish to state for the record, that the various Indian reservations in the United States are large enough. I do not believe that there is a single Indian reservation in the United States that should be enlarged; and I am opposed to the policy which the Interior Department has adopted here and there to increase the size of Indian reservations; but it nevertheless is true that in the State of California and in the State of Nevada, and I think it applies possibly in the State of Oregon—I do know it is true as to California and Nevada—that for 40 or 50 years there have been wandering bands of Indians, objects of pity, objects of charity, many of whom have never lifted their hands against the Government in any way, but have been the friends of the Federal Government. Surely, Mr. President, a great Government, if it is not going to be beneficent, ought to be just enough to appropriate this small sum to buy homes for the homeless Indians who wander about.

I wish to say as to this item, viewing it as I do, that, although it may appear extravagant, it may appear that the lands have not been purchased rapidly enough, Congress is making no mistake in purchasing these lands for homeless Indians. The time will soon arrive when, if we do not purchase the lands now, they will cost three or four times as much as they cost now, and we might not be able to get them at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ASHURST. I was about to yield the floor, but I shall be glad to answer a question.

Mr. KING. Are these Indians members of any tribe?

Mr. ASHURST. Some of them are. I do not recall the names of the tribes; but they wander about with a few head of cattle and are in the nature of trespassers on the public domain and on private lands. They have no place as to which they can say, "Here is my land," and it seems to me wise and just to give them 10 acres each which they may call home and which they can not alienate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I heard the Senator say that Indians were roaming about over the public domain. Why would it not be well to allot them lands already belonging to the Government and obviate the necessity of purchasing additional lands?

Mr. ASHURST. I may have misspoken myself in that respect, although they do wander somewhat over the public domain; but when it comes to allotting Indians land upon the public domain, the white man is keen and ingenious, the white man is land hungry—not gold hungry, but land hungry—and the Indian in seeking a piece of land is always at a disadvantage when he has to contend with the white man.

Mr. GORE. The Indian has lost his appetite for land, has he?

Mr. ASHURST. He never had an appetite for land. He gave his land away for a song; he gave Manhattan Island away for $24 worth of beads.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I am somewhat familiar with some of these so-called roaming bands of Indians, and my experience has been that they are members of some tribe to which a large tract of land has been assigned, but they refuse to take allotments upon their own lands, or, if allotments are given them, they refuse to live upon their allotments. They barter them away if there is no restriction upon their power to alienate or abandon the same and lead a nomadic life, preferring to wander over the public domain and between settlements, rather than settling down and making homes or engaging in agricultural pursuits. It seems to me if these Indians belong to the class to which I have just referred, and belong to some tribe or tribes which have had allotments on reservations, that we ought not to make provision for the purchase of homes for them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield to the Senator from Kansas in a moment. I appreciate that there is a vast deal in what the Senator from Utah says; but, respecting the particular case in point, let me say that over 4,000 of these Indians have taken the lands purchased for them and are living on them, thus reducing the number of Indians that wander, and, as the Senator says, lead nomadic lives, to the disturbance of the cattle and sheep men who have legitimate rights there and who should not be disturbed.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I simply wish to answer the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. These homeless Indians in California have not been allotted lands. They were in that region when the territory was acquired by this country from Mexico. When holders of the old Spanish land grants took possession the Indians were driven off and lived on the public domain, and they have been going from place to place ever since. In the last five or six years the department has been buying small tracts for them.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Are there not a number of reservations in California to which these Indians might be assigned and upon which they might receive allotments?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not. In the first place, it would be necessary to have an agreement with the Indian tribes in California in order that these homeless Indians might be adopted into the tribes; and in the second place, I doubt if there are any reservations in that State of sufficient size to make allotments to these Indians. The Government is purchasing land for them wherever it can do so at a reasonable price, and is putting the Indians on small tracts, and those that have been so placed on small allotments, as I am advised by the department, are doing very well.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator himself made any investigation to determine whether or not the purchases of land in California upon which the Indians have been placed are still retained by the Indians and whether they are developing them?

Mr. CURTIS. The Indians can not sell the land which is now being purchased for them. It is held in trust by the Government. The allotments are in small tracts, and the Indians are working them for their gardens and little crop patches, which they are taking care of as best they can. Many of the Indians have become self-supporting by reason of these purchases for them. They are the remnants of various tribes of California.

Mr. KING. Mr. President I wish to give notice to the chairman of the committee that unless the information is more satisfactory than that furnished, and I confess Senators have said a great deal in defense of the appropriation, I shall move to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. In further justification of the provision I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the statement of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs on page 139 of the hearings before the House committee, which has been read into the RECORD by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 33, after line 3, to insert:

> The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used in the construction of a suitable school building at the town of White Earth: Provided, That the State school district in which the town of White Earth is located contributes a like amount to be used in the construction of a building, the total cost of which shall not exceed $8,000, the said appropriation to remain available until expended: Provided further, That when said building is completed it shall be turned over to the local school authorities of the said town of White Earth and shall thereafter be operated and maintained by them, and Indian children shall at all times be admitted to said school on the same conditions as white children.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the committee amendment, on page 33, line 6, after the word "necessary," there seems to be a hiatus; and I move to insert after the word "necessary" the words "of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota." It will not be a complete sentence otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 33, line 6, after the words "as may be necessary," it is proposed to insert the words "of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota."

Mr. ASHURST. It was the intention to appropriate this money out of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, but that appears to have been omitted.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is that out of the principal fund?

Mr. ASHURST. Out of the principal fund, amounting to some $5,000,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. My understanding from the Indian Office is that $175,000 is all that was going to be appropriated out of the tribal funds. If it is proposed to cut down the amount in one item and add to it in another, I must object to the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. This item, may I say to the Senator from Minnesota, was drafted by the Interior Department, or some one for the department, and the committee's understanding was that there was no objection, even on the part of the Indians, to this sum being appropriated. That is my understanding; but if the Senator wishes the item to go over until he can investigate it, I have no objection.

Mr. KELLOGG. My attention had not been called to that particular item, and I can not say that the chairman is not correct; but if he will allow it to go over until Monday I will look into it.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will go over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 17, to insert:

MISSISSIPPI.

SEC. 9. For the relief of distress among the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, and for the purpose of their civilization and education, including the purchase of land, to be expended under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, $150,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that all of the items relating to Montana go over until Monday, to be considered the first thing when the bill is taken up for consideration on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are certain other amendments that have gone over. Does the Senator desire to request that the Montana amendments be considered in advance of those?

Mr. MYERS. No; I will ask that they go over till Monday, to be considered following those that have already gone over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks that the amendments relating to Montana go over until Monday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 37, line 12, to change the number of the section from 10 to 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nevada," on page 27, line 22, to change the number of the section from 11 to 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 11, to strike out:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for procuring home and farm sites and providing agricultural equipment and instruction for nonreservation Indians in Nevada, and the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of land and water rights for the Washoe Tribe of Indians in said State and for their support and civilization, contained in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 143), are hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1919, for the purchase of agricultural equipment, building material, and other supplies necessary for said Indians in utilizing the land purchased for them, and also for the expense of locating the Indians upon such land, including pay of employees where necessary.

And insert:

That the unexpended balance of approximately $11,996.13 of the appropriation of $15,000 for procuring home and farm sites and providing agricultural equipment and instruction for nonreservation Indians in Nevada, and the unexpended balance of approximately $7,611.23 of the appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of land and water rights for the Washoe Tribe of Indians in said State and for their support and civilization, contained in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 143), are hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for the purchase of agricultural equipment, building material, and other supplies necessary for said Indians in utilizing the land purchased for them, and also for the expense of locating the Indians upon such land, including pay of employees where necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," on page 39, line 20, to change the number of the section from 12 to 13, and in line 22, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$85,500; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for completing addition to mess hall, $5,000; in all, $98,500" and insert "$92,250; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for completing addition to mess hall, $5,000; in all, $105,250," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 13. For support and education of 450 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $92,250; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for completing addition to mess hall, $5,000; in all, $105,250.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 3, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$76,250; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all, $85,850," and insert "$82,250; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all, $91,850," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $82,250; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all $91,850.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona what is the reason for the increases the Senate has made in this bill? It seems to me the appropriations made by the House were very generous, and I should like some explanation as to the reasons for the increases.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the increases here are largely by reason of the increased per capita cost. That is to say, assume that a year ago—and I think I am giving the figures exactly—in an Indian school where there were over 400 pupils, about $200 per capita was required to maintain those Indians. Owing to the tremendously increased cost of staples, food, and clothing, the committee has proceeded upon the hypothesis, and in accordance with the estimates of the department, that the highest per capita cost now should be $225. In other words, $200 per capita would not support the Indians in a school of that kind. I repeat, the high cost of staples, food, and clothing has necessitated the committee multiplying the number of Indians by $225 instead of $200 in the case of the larger schools, not the smaller ones.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 21, after the word "highway," to insert:

Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 of the sum appropriated for the building of said road by the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stats. L., pp. 969–981), may be used for payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1917 in excess of the appropriation made for that year in the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L., pp. 123–144).

So as to make the clause read:

For continuing work on the Indian highway extending from the Mesa Verde National Park to Gallup, N. Mex., on the Navajo and San Juan Reservations, $25,000; said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians: Provided, That such sums shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times and places as he may deem proper, and in the employment of Indian labor as far as possible for the construction of said highway: Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 of the sum appropriated for the building of said road by the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., pp. 969–981), may be used for payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1917 in excess of the appropriation made for that year in the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L., pp. 123–144).

Mr. ASHURST. On page 40, following the parenthesis on line 25, and before the word "may," I move to insert the words "to be made immediately available."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 18, after the word "necessary," to strike out "for" and insert "to complete the," so as to make the clause read:

For amount necessary to complete the construction of a steel bridge across the San Juan River in San Juan County, State of New Mexico, at the best and most available location west or southwest and near to the town of Farmington, in said county, in addition to the $25,000 appropriated for the purpose by the act approved February 20, 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 926), $4,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to be immediately available: Provided, That said additional sum shall be reimbursed from tribal funds as required by the said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 4, to insert:

For one-half the cost of constructing a wagon road between Tularosa, Otero County, N. Mex., and the west line of the Mescalero Indian Reservation in said State, in conformity with plans approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $16,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That before any part of this appropriation is expended the said County of Otero shall contribute an equal sum for use in the construction of said road, furnish a competent engineer satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior to supervise the work and agree to maintain the road in good condition, and the cost of all equipment, supplies, and labor, except as herein provided, to be paid by a disbursing agent of the United States in equal proportions from the appropriation made herein and the fund contributed by the county and any unexpended balance of said contributed fund to be returned to the County of Otero upon the completion of the road.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I was not present when the committee acted upon this item. I want to call the attention of the chairman to an objection which I see to the proviso.

The appropriation is one which undoubtedly should be made. The road is used practically entirely by the Indians and for their benefit, and it is the only road to which they have access for the hauling of all their supplies of every kind and character to a railroad. They can not use any other road. This is used for that purpose. There are various other roads, all of which were constructed and are maintained at the cost of the State or county, which the Indians use; but this one road is to their railroad point. The agent in charge of the Indians at Mescalero understood the circumstances very fully. He reported to the department—I have a copy of his letter—with the statement that the county should not be compelled to pay one cent of this cost; that as the Indians used this road the Government should construct it. It has been constructed once or twice—it is in a mountainous country—at heavy cost by the people.

The appropriation is $16,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay one-half the cost of the road, upon the basis of a total cost of $32,000; but the proviso is that the balance of it shall be paid by the county of Otero, the county in which the road is situated.

In the first place, it is impossible for the county of Otero to pay it, because of our State law. There is no provision by which the county of Otero can raise this money, at least at any time in the near future, and in my judgment not until the State legislature shall so provide. I will say to the chairman of the committee that the counties and the State are cooperating in New Mexico in all their road work, and the counties are turning over to the State the disbursement of all their moneys, so that there will be necessarily some adjustment, which could be very much more readily made by the Secretary of the Interior. If the matter is left as contained in the body of the appropriation, without the proviso, he will certainly do that.

I want to call attention further to the fact that we are using now in the county of Otero, through the State, the convicts for the construction of State roads. The support of the convicts, of course, is provided for by State appropriations or by the county, or by both acting together; but we do not pay for convict work the full wages which the ordinary laborer would draw. In my judgment, speaking of my personal knowledge of the road, it is possible that it can be constructed in this way for much less than the total amount of $32,000. If the Secretary of the Interior is allowed the necessary latitude to draw his plans to cooperate with either the State authorities or the county authorities, or both, while funds can not be readily devoted in cash to this work, the convict labor can be arranged for and the proportionate part of the State and county—that is, 50 per cent of the entire cost of the construction—can be provided for in exactly this way, and will be so provided for. Under the wording of the proviso, however, I am afraid that the entire appropriation would be defeated, because under the law I do not think it would be possible for the county to comply with the requirements.

For that reason, Mr. President, I move that the proviso, commencing on line 11, down to and including line 21, be stricken from the bill, and that the matter be left to the Secretary to arrange as to how this $16,000, one-half the total cost of the road, shall be employed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down I desire to ask him a question. Is this road entirely on a Government reservation? I am not opposing the amendment, but I understand that some parts of it are built on private ground.

Mr. FALL. It is an extension of a Government road. Some parts of it are built upon private ground and some parts of it are built upon public ground. As a matter of fact, the Senator, of course, can not exactly understand the situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. FALL. Allow me to explain it to the Senator, and he can then possibly catch a glimpse, at least, of the situation.

We are expending in New Mexico now very many hundreds of thousands of dollars more than we feel that we are able to expend for the construction of public roads. We are cooperating with the counties in extending those roads and in building feeders to those roads all over the entire State; and I will say very frankly to the Senator that for every acre of private land served by such roads as we are constructing there are 1,000 acres of land of the Government of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. The reason why I ask the question is that I was told that the Government was not building any roads or building any bridges on land not on the reservations. Following the Senator's amendment is an amendment referring to my State, where the Senate committee has stricken out an item put in by the House for building a bridge. The county there has appropriated $200,000 for building roads. They come to the Indian reservation itself, and there is the river, and we can not get across the river. The House has put in a small appropriation there to build a bridge on the Indian reservation, and therefore I say we are spending some money on lands that are not on Government reservations.

Mr. FALL. The situation with reference to this appropriation is this: The agency is situated in a canyon in the White Mountains. It is a deep canyon. There is only room for one road for the greater portion of the distance. The road extends from the Mescalero Agency—not the Indian reserve, but from the Mescalero Agency—to the station of Tularosa, on the El Paso & Southwestern or Rock Island road. A portion of the road itself is on the reservation. A portion of it is upon public ground. The greater portion of it is upon the public domain of the United States. There is a bridge to be constructed. The river rises upon the reserve. The bridge happens to be just off the line of the reserve, but unless it is constructed by some one the Indians can not get the fuel which they must have to burn, nor can they get any supplies whatsoever through the agency. This bridge is for the benefit of the Indians and the road is for the benefit of the Indians. The people out there propose to pay one-half of the cost in some way satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, either by offering private funds, private labor, or convict labor, or making up the total amount of $16,000 in cash. I simply ask that the Secretary of the Interior be allowed to use his discretion as to how the payment of those funds shall be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I only want to ask that my amendment shall be treated like the Senator's when we come to it. I am for it.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator has an amendment which is as just as this is, he will have my support for that or for any other such amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so.

Mr. FALL. And if this were not a just measure in my judgment I would not be heard, sir, uttering one word in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico moves to strike out the proviso, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 10, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Provided, That before any part of this appropriation is expended the said county of Otero shall contribute an equal sum for use in the construction of said road, furnish a competent engineer satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior to supervise the work and agree to maintain the road in good condition, and the cost of all equipment, supplies, and labor, except as herein provided, to be paid by a disbursing agent of the United States in equal proportions from the appropriation made herein and the fund contributed by the county and any unexpended balance of said contributed fund to be returned to the county of Otero upon the completion of the road.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, if I understand the Senator's amendment, he does not propose to alter the language beginning on line 5, page 42.

Mr. FALL. Not at all. I simply desire to leave this one-half to be provided for in some way satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, by the county or by the State or by private individuals.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, since other amendments somewhat analogous to this will follow, I wish to take just a moment or two to say that the time has arrived when the Senate must lay down a line of policy.

Ever since I have been a member of the Indian Affairs Committee and certainly since I have been the chairman thereof it has been the policy of the committee to make no appropriation for a bridge or a road off an Indian reservation. The committee, I think, has, with remarkable rigidity, adhered to that rule. I have no objection whatever if the Senate wishes to take a new course and build a road here and a bridge there off a reservation; and I wish to say right here that if ever Congress would be justified in appropriating money to build a road off a reservation it would be this identical road, because the testimony before the committee showed conclusively that the Indians had a vast amount of property, and that that was the only way they could reach their property; that was the only way they could reach the reservation with their supplies; and surely, upon the grounds of justice and expediency, the appropriation should be granted.

I ask Senators to remember, however, these few and poor words of mine, and I hope they will be underscored or emphasized in the RECORD—that I do not wish this appropriation to be called a precedent. I wish it understood most emphatically that because we do appropriate this money it shall not in any way in the future be looked to as a precedent, but it shall be looked to rather as a case that is separate and alone and not to be paralleled by any other case that has been called to our attention.

I am very heartily in favor of the amendment, with the understanding that the Indian Affairs Committee is not going to enter upon the broad and very expensive feat of building roads to reach reservations. With that understanding, I am glad to vote for the amendment, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that is hardly customary, is it?

Mr. OWEN. I think these local funds ought to be locally deposited. I do not think they ought to be sent abroad, or to other States, where it is a local matter, growing out of local development.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose it has been done in the past, but I have not known any particular objection to be made to it. I simply thought this was the beginning of a new theory of depositing public funds.

Mr. OWEN. I think the general practice is to deposit the funds where they arise, but I should like to have it specified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, line 13, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on page 53, line 11, I move to strike out the word "and" after the word "loaning," and to insert the words "investing or," so that it will read:

Applications for the removal of restrictions and loaning, investing, or depositing of Indian funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, line 11, after the word "restrictions," it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert a comma, and after the word "loaning" to strike out the word "and" and insert the words "investing or."

Mr. OWEN. I ask that this amendment may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will go over, at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 21, to insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear, consider, and adjudicate the following matters of J. F. McMurray, as assignee of the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians, or either of them, for professional services rendered, for said nations in the case of "The Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations v. The United States and the Chickasaw Freedmen," under act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," and for expenses incurred under sections 31, 32, and 33 of the same act of Congress and for payment of two unpaid Chickasaw warrants issued by tribal authorities under act of legislature of the Chickasaw Nation approved by the governor of the Chickasaw Nation on September 20, 1899, and afterwards by the President of the United States; and to render judgment therefor in such amount or amounts as may be found to be due thereon, together with interest from the date of such services or payments at the legal rate of interest prevailing at the time and place of such transactions; which judgment, if any, against said nations, or either of them, shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States out of the funds of said nations as their interests may appear: Provided, That as to any such claims so sued upon the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or either of them, shall be permitted to interpose all proper defenses by way of counterclaim or set-off against either the assignors or the assignee of said claim, all statutes of limitations against said set-offs or counterclaims being hereby waived, and all amounts found due to said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, under the above provision, shall bear interest at the legal rate: Provided further, That any amount found to be owing, calculated upon a fair and equitable basis, by the said J. F. McMurray to the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations upon coal-mining leases held by him may be offset against any judgment that may be rendered in his favor upon such claims: Provided further, That if any of such leases are found not to be underlaid with merchantable coal and all of said leases upon which royalties are not paid within 30 days after the final settlement of these matters, the same shall be canceled; and notice of filing of such suits by the said J. F. McMurray shall be served upon the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and said nations shall be represented therein by attorneys for said nations, respectively, and by the Attorney General of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to adjust, by mutual agreement with the interested parties herein, under the terms hereof and within 60 days after its approval by the President of the United States, any or all of the matters covered by the above provisions, and should such agreement be made by the Secretary of the Interior he is hereby authorized and directed to make requisition upon the Treasurer of the United States for the payment of the same out of any funds of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians as their interests may appear, and the Treasurer shall pay the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oregon," on page 66, line 6, to change the number of the section from "18" to "19."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 12, after the word "crops," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$500,000"; and in line 17, after the word "reimburse," to insert "within five years from the date of this act," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Klamath Tribe of Indians in Oregon, and to aid them in building homes, the culture of fruits, grain, and other crops, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum may be used for the purchase of such animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to enable the Klamath Indians to become self-supporting, to be reimbursed, within five years from the date of this act, from the funds accruing to the credit of said tribes in the Treasury of the United States from the sale of timber and unallotted lands on the Klamath Reservation, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Pennsylvania," on page 67, line 24, to change the number of the section from "19" to "20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "South Dakota," on page 68, line 4, to change the number of the section from "20" to "21."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 22, after "$3,000," to strike out "additional appropriation for new school building, $15,000; in all, $80,000" and insert "in all, $65,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 275 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Rapid City, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $57,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for irrigation, drainage, and improving school farm, to remain available until expended, $3,000; in all, $65,000.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I trust that amendment will not be agreed to. This, as it will be noted, is an additional appropriation for a new school building, $15,000. The committee have seen fit to strike that out, but this additional appropriation, and it is not a large one, is for the purpose of making effectual an appropriation made two years ago for the purpose of erecting a school building at Rapid City. At the time that appropriation of $30,000 was made it was then felt that it was hardly sufficient, but nevertheless the appropriation was limited to that amount.

In pursuance of the appropriation suitable plans for a school building were prepared and bids were invited. As a result of the bidding, $33,900 was the lowest bid, which was $3.900 over and above the appropriation. I say that was the lowest bid. Really, Mr. President, as I am informed $37,000 rather than $33,900 was the lowest acceptable bid. It was found, therefore, that no contract could be let, and the matter of building has been in abeyance from that time to this.

This is the situation in regard to school-building accommodations at Rapid City. There is, I think, a total enrollment of about 325 pupils at that school. The average enrollment is around 260, with an average attendance of about 190, or a little in excess of 190 pupils. The facilities for accommodating this large number of pupils consists of one building of four rooms, which is the school building proper, and the boys' dormitory, in which there is a kitchen and a dining room.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that the inspectors sent out from the Indian Office, as well as the local health authorities, recommended the removal of this kitchen and dining room a good while ago for sanitary reasons.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I should in courtesy to the Senator explain why that amendment appears. The committee took up the question as to these various buildings and in view of certain exigencies that I need not pause to describe which are upon our country at this time it was deemed wise to make no appropriation whatever for new school buildings. The committee adhered to that rule. They have applied that rule in Arizona, and they have applied that rule in all the other States. But I see that the Senator's statement takes this item out of the general rule somewhat, and, although the language does state that it is an additional appropriation for a new school building, it is not a new building but is the continuation of the construction of an old building. That fact was not before me at least as a member of the committee. I am speaking only for myself. I do not, and I could not if I wanted to do so, bind any member of the committee. I have no objection to this amendment being disagreed to in view of that state of facts, but it must be understood that the committee is not going to recommend the construction of new buildings at this time.

Mr. STERLING. I want to correct the Senator in one respect. I deem it fair that I should. It is an additional appropriation for a new school building, but as I stated in the outset it is to make effectual and usable an appropriation of $30,000 made two years ago, and which was found altogether inadequate. That is the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 14, to strike out:

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools among the Sioux Indians, including the erection and repairs of school buildings, $200,000, in accordance with the provisions of article 5 of the agreement made and entered into September 26, 1876, and ratified February 28, 1877 (19 Stats., p. 254).

And insert:

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools among the Sioux Indians, including the erection and repairs of school buildings, $200,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, in accordance with the provisions of article 5 of the agreement made and entered into September 26, 1876, and ratified February 28, 1877 (19 Stats., p. 254): Provided, That the unexpended balance of the sum of $300,000 appropriated by section 21 of the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 988), for acquiring, constructing, or enlargement and equipment of school buildings on the Crow Creek, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Standing Rock, Yankton, Sisseton, Lower Brule, and Cheyenne River Reservations is hereby made available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 6, to insert:

TEXAS.

SEC. 22. For the relief, civilization, and education of the Alabama and Coushatta Indians located in Polk County, Tex., including the purchase of land and the construction of necessary buildings, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000; for the purchase of land and equipment for said Indians, to be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States, and under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may direct, $150,000; in all, $175,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," on page 71, line 19, to change the number of section from "21" to "23."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 17, to insert:

The sum of $12,690, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the public schools in the Uintah and Duchesne County school districts, Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Before leaving the Utah items I offer the following amendment, which the committee inadvertently failed to have printed in the bill, but the chairman of the committee will bear me out in stating that the action of the committee as found on page 223 of the hearings shows that the committee agreed to the amendment. I do not think the chairman has any objection whatever to it.

Mr. ASHURST. I am familiar with that item. I have tried to lay the blame on the clerk, and I can not, because he is not guilty. I have tried to lay the blame on the printer, and I can not, because he is not guilty. I have to assume the blame myself. It was an inadvertence. The amendment was adopted by the committee, and it was left out by inadvertence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be submitted as a committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 21, insert:

For the construction of an interstate wagon road or highway through the Shivwits Indian Reservation, Utah, $5,000; for the construction of a steel bridge and approaches across the Santa Clara River on the Shivwits Indian Reservation, $10,000; in all, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," on page 73, line 23, to change the number of the section from "22" to "24."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 22, after the word "reservation," to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to read:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $250,000 to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that this amendment may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wisconsin," on page 77, line 6, to change the number of the section from "24" to "25."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 15, after the word "employees," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$10,000"; so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, Wis., including pay of employees, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 80, line 21, to change the number of the section from "24" to "26."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 15, to strike out:

For continuation of investigations, beginning of construction and incidental operations on a project for the irrigation of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $100,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 4, to change the number of the section from 25 to 27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 23, to insert:

SEC. 28. That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to withdraw from the United States Treasury and segregate the common, or community, funds of any Indian tribe which are, or may hereafter be, held in trust by the United States, and which are susceptible of segregation, so as to credit an equal share to each and every recognized member of the tribe except those whose pro rata shares have already been withdrawn under existing law, and to deposit the funds so segregated in banks to be selected by him, subject to withdrawal for payment to the individual owners or expenditure for their benefit under the regulations governing the use of other individual Indian moneys. The said commissioner is also authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to withdraw from the Treasury and deposit in banks to the credit of the respective tribes, such common, or community, trust funds as are not susceptible of segregation as aforesaid and on which the United States is not obligated by law to pay interest at higher rates than can be procured from the banks: Provided, That no tribal or individual Indian money shall be deposited in any bank until the bank shall have agreed to pay interest thereon at a reasonable rate and shall have furnished an acceptable bond or collateral security therefor: And provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes in the State of Oklahoma: And provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, if he deems it advisable and for the best interest of the Indians, may invest the trust funds of any tribe or individual Indian in United States Government bonds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 29. For support of Indian day, boarding, and industrial schools during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, in addition to the general and specific appropriations made for that purpose in the act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., pp. 969–993), the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to prevent the closing of said schools or the creation of deficiencies in appropriations because of the increased cost of supplies, to be immediately available: Provided, That the operation of the act of September 7, 1916 (35 Stat. L., p. 741), limiting annual expenditures for support and education of pupils in Indian schools to $200 per capita, is hereby suspended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. KING. Is this a new appropriation found in section 29?

Mr. ASHURST. It will be recalled that such an emergency arose that the House of Representatives included this item of $250,000 in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill and it passed the Senate; and it was understood that this should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that section 29, found on page 84, ought to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That is entirely correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Entirely, because the item is in the general deficiency bill and has been agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. That is substantially what I said.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. ASHURST. I said that section 29, which appropriates $250,000, should be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if he intends to proceed further with the bill this evening?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I merely wish to recur for a moment to several small items. There is one on page 81 relating to the State of Wyoming, commencing at line 16 and going down to and including line 22. What was done with that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg pardon of the Chair and of the Senate, but I was diverted when the Secretary was reading that item, and I ask unanimous consent to recur to it. I am sure there are Senators who want to be heard on it. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to introduce an amendment to come in at line 15, on page 81. I ask that the amendment be read and that it be allowed to go over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, in lieu of lines 16 to 22, inclusive, proposed to be stricken out, insert:

For continuation of investigations, beginning of construction, and incidental operations on a project for the irrigation of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $100,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and divided equitably between the Indian land and public and private land irrigated by such project, and that the charge as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and that the charges as fixed for private and public land irrigated under such project shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of payment of construction and maintenance charges as provided by the reclamation law and amendments thereto.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the chairman what was done with the provision on page 5 relating to peyote? Did that go over?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that has gone over. Some Senators happened to be temporarily out of the Chamber when it was reached, and it was passed over.

Mr. GRONNA. Unless it is understood and desired to have it go over until Monday I am ready to discuss it now.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, I have no objection to remaining longer in session, but I think it quite obvious that there would be no quorum here. It may be a contested item.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to letting it go over until Monday if it is desired.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that it may go over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. OWEN. My attention was distracted when the amendment on page 83 was acted on. I desire to propose a certain amendment to that section, and I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, for the purpose of offering an amendment to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I move to strike out the words beginning with "And provided further" in line 24 to the end of the amendment on page 84.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 83 strike out the following words:

And provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, if he deems it advisable and for the best interests of the Indians, may invest the trust funds of any tribe or individual Indian in United States Government bonds.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment, but I feel that I should state why this whole item was put in. There is $11,000,000 of Indian funds in the Treasury of the United States to-day not drawing a cent of interest. This item was prepared by me, and agreed to by the committee, so that the Indian Office could place this money in banks or, if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs saw fit and thought it was for the best interest, he might buy liberty bonds with the $11,000,000. In addition to this $11,000,000 belonging to tribes that draws no interest there is some thirty-odd million dollars of individual funds drawing less interest than 4 per cent, and the item was put in allowing the commissioner, if he thought best, to invest either of these funds in liberty bonds.

Mr. OWEN. I can meet the point the Senator from Kansas desires to reach by moving an amendment to insert that proviso after the word "therefor" in line 22, so as to exclude the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CURTIS. I may state that the Senator from Oklahoma desires to exclude the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that, because all their tribal funds are drawing interest.

Mr. OWEN. They are all bearing interest. The funds referred to by the Senator from Kansas would not be affected by the transfer I propose. I therefore move to transfer that proviso and to insert in line 24, after the words "Civilized Tribes," the words "or the Osage Tribe of Indians."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, line 24, after the words "Civilized Tribes," insert "or the Osage Tribe of Indians," and transfer the proviso at the end of the page, so it will come in line 22, after the word "therefor."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. On page 67 two amendments were proposed by the committee in reference to the Oregon items, one in line 12, regarding the numerals, and the other in line 17. I simply ask for information, were those amendments agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. If no other Senator wishes to offer an amendment and no other Senator wishes to discuss the bill, I shall move an adjournment.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

Mr. ASHURST. I withhold the motion for the present.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to make a point of order on the amendment on page 63, beginning with line 11, down to line 21, which would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exercise the duties of chief of the Five Civilized Tribes. I will have to ask for a reconsideration of that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over.

Mr. OWEN. It went over on my suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it went over until Monday. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is interested in the same item. I do not know whether he desires to have it stricken out or not.

Mr. OWEN. He is going to raise a point of order against it, I understand, and that is what I desire to do myself. I have no objection to its going over until Monday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the following amendment. If there is any debate about it, I will be willing to have it go over, but I spoke to the chairman of the committee about it, and I think he understands it.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of the tribal funds of the Yakima Indians in the State of Washington not otherwise appropriated, to be charged to the tribal account, the sum of $2,000 to be used by and under the direction of the Yakima Tribal Council for expense in presenting Indian matters to the Government officials in Washington City, or in the employment of attorneys to assist them in securing information relative to their tribal rights and property.

Mr. ASHURST. I am very familiar with the amendment. Personally I have no objection to it. The item should come in where the items relative to the State of Washington appear.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it relates to the Yakima Tribe in the State of Washington. They have a number of disputed rights, particularly in regard to water rights, which it is perfectly legitimate, in my judgment, for the Indian tribal council to inform themselves about and be represented in. Of course it will take some money to do that, and this appropriation is confined to the tribal fund and payable out of the tribal fund.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the chairman if the amendment which was adopted by the committee this morning relating to the per capita payment of the Menominee Indians has been adopted?

Mr. ASHURST. No; that has not been adopted. It was not a committee amendment, and therefore it has not been agreed to. I hope the Senator will bring it up Monday morning.

Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 25, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 23, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everliving God our Heavenly Father, from whom cometh all wisdom, power, and goodness, help us with high resolves and consecrated hearts to go forward, day by day, in the grand eternal march of existence, to larger and nobler attainments, as individuals and as a people, under the spiritual leadership of the Lord Jesus Christ; for thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN HAWAII.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2380, an act granting to the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii additional powers relative to elections and qualifications of electors, which was referred to the Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives, be taken from that committee and re-referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, what bill is it?

Mr. RAKER. This is the companion bill to the one which the House transferred last week.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. The purpose of the bill is to give the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii the right to pass a law giving women the right to vote.

Mr. CANNON. Is it for consideration now?

Mr. RAKER. No; this bill passed the Senate. The House transferred the House bill a few days ago from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on Woman Suffrage. This is simply a request to transfer this companion bill, which has been passed by the Senate, to that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. FAIRFIELD, at Gettysburg on February 22, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein a patriotic address delivered by Mr. FAIRFIELD at Gettysburg. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to do so—was not that address inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS?

Mr. FESS. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROFITEERING IN RENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter here written by one of the profiteers, Guy S. Zepp, a contractor in the city of Washington, which casts reflections upon the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and, in fact, upon every member of that committee. I have answered the letter, showing that the man is entirely wrong. I think it would be well to have this letter read to the House, but I do not wish to take up the time of the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to put it in the RECORD?

Mr. CARY. Yes; for the benefit of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter about profiteering.

Mr. CARY. With my reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. With his reply thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have been regaled of late quite often with these letters on profiteering. I think the matter should be deferred until the next District day. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith for printing under the rule a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

STANDARD WEIGHTS OF FLOUR, MEAL, ETC.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced a bill (H. R. 10957) to establish the standard of weights and measures for flours, meals, and commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. I think it should properly have been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and I ask unanimous consent to have it so referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to re-refer the bill H. R. 10957, which fixes the weight of flour and meal, from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Is there objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture respecting this?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have not; but I introduced the bill myself, and it refers to the fixing of standard weights and measures of these commodities, and should properly go to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will not the gentleman be willing to wait until Mr. LEVER, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, is present?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3689. An act authorizing the Postmaster General to cancel or readjust the screen-wagon contract of H. H. Hogan, at Kansas City, Mo.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 117, amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

H. L. GODWIN,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman make a statement in respect to this?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the Senate receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agreed to adopt the resolution as it passed the House.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, this is signed by all of the conferees?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. It is signed by two and the other I could not get, because he was out of the city.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand that one of the conferees did not have any notice of the conference and knew nothing about it.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. His office was called up twice, but he was away, his secretary told me, attending the funeral of the late Representative CAPSTICK in New Jersey. The Senate withdrew its disagreement to the House amendment. There could not have been any controversy.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute's time in order to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. What is it about?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, I can explain to the gentleman in one minute. During the past week I have had referred to me by Members of this House I presume at least 100 letters concerning the bill H. R. 2878.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There seems to be some sort of a propaganda going around about this bill of which I have no knowledge. The bill is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TILSON] to regulate and control the manufacture, sale, and use of weights and measures and of weighing and measuring devices. These letters all read about the same, and I will read one paragraph from this letter:

We are advised there is now pending before Congress a resolution for the withdrawal of H. R. 2878 from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in order to permit action upon it.

I wish to say to the House that the author of this bill has made no request to have the bill considered and the committee has not considered the bill, and so far as I know there has not been a resolution introduced in the House asking to have the bill withdrawn from the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that in reference to the metric system?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is the bill so called the gentleman referred to; yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Unanimous Consent Calendar day, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," approved February 23, 1917.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am authorized by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] who reported this bill to say that this matter has been covered in the urgent deficiency bill just agreed to in conference and to object to it and to move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to lay this bill on the table for the reason stated.

The motion was agreed to.

MEDALS OR DECORATIONS FROM FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2796) to permit American citizens to wear medals or decorations received from certain foreign countries on entering the military or naval service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill by title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, there is objection to the bill. I spoke to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], from the Committee on Military Affairs, some days ago, and he stated that the committee did not intend to push the bill, so I will ask that it be passed over until he comes in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to pass over this bill without prejudice.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the character of the objection to this legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. The objection is that the Navy Department wrote me a letter objecting to it, so far as that department was concerned, on the ground that our men should not receive medals from other countries; that they should look to their own country and their own service for the medals. I had an official letter from the Secretary of the Navy on the matter, and I spoke to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] about it, and he said, having given it further consideration after he reported it, that he was inclined to the same opinion; that he did not intend to push the bill or to have it passed.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there objection from the War Department?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know about the War Department. I am not advised.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing this bill over without prejudice?

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand it, the gentleman wants to pass it over temporarily until the gentleman from Nebraska can come in.

The SPEAKER. That is all right.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object to the bill being kept on the calendar, but I do not want it taken up again during the day, and unless it can be passed over until some other day I shall object.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Tennessee say?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be placed at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the bill be passed without prejudice and put at the foot of the calendar. Is there any objection to that? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MEDALS OF HONOR AND DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE MEDALS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1720) to provide for the award of medals of honor and distinguished-service medals.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a most important bill, and I do not think it should be considered by unanimous consent, and therefore I object.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman withhold the objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope there will not be any objection to this bill. This is a matter that relates to our own soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think some such bill should be passed, but there is a committee amendment to the bill which is very objectionable, and unless some understanding can be had in regard to that particular feature of the bill I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that the bill ought not to be considered at this time. This amendment would open all the military records of the past to search with a view to granting these new medals for alleged acts of gallantry or merit in all the years that have passed. In that respect it changes very profoundly the character of the bill as the Senate passed it. It is a matter of such importance that it ought not to be considered now unless there can be an understanding in regard to that particular section.

I do not see any member of the Military Committee here prepared to make a statement with regard to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice and take its place at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the bill be passed by without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GEORGIA EXPERIMENT STATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 231) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, and the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, the appropriation for the Georgia Experiment Station of the State of Georgia, under act of March 4, 1917, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to the board of trustees of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of the State of Georgia, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported by title.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WISE] who has charge of this resolution. I shall not object to the resolution provided the gentleman offers an amendment, which I think he is prepared to offer, making it clear what appropriations are to be paid to this college.

Mr. WISE. I have an amendment of that kind.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has such an amendment, and there are two other amendments to which I desire to call the gentleman's attention. On page 5, line 3, the word "hereafter" is used. That word is entirely superfluous, because that particular part of the resolution refers to the payment of a specific appropriation. There is no necessity for using the word "hereafter" in that connection. Without that word both the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury are directed to make this payment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. So that is entirely superfluous.

Now, in line 8, the word "all" is used. The objection to the use of that word is this, that while it is the intent and purpose to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to pay future appropriations to this particular institution, it is not intended, I assume, to direct him by congressional action to pay them to this institution if conditions should change in the institution whereby it failed some time in the future, some failure not now existing in connection with the present situation, to do its duty in the expenditures of these funds. The bill is just as strong without the use of the word "all," except that it does not project the congressional direction to the end of time and without regard to new conditions that might arise. And let me suggest to the gentleman that some time in the future the Georgia Legislature might create a new condition if they desired to have the fund transferred, in which case the word "all" would stand as a bar to doing that. I assume the gentleman does not care to go that far.

Mr. WISE. No. I will state to the gentleman I did not construe this as the gentleman does. However, I have no objection to that amendment. The gentleman will notice that this appropriation is to be made in accordance with the act of the General Assembly of Georgia, which directs the appropriation to a certain institution.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. WISE. Now, if the general assembly should amend that act, I do not think the word "all" would make any difference.

Mr. MONDELL. Still the word "all" in an act of Congress would stand as a bar as to a change of law by the Georgia Legislature, and, further, it would compel the Secretary to pay the money to this institution, although it failed to properly expend the funds. If the gentleman will accept these amendments, I shall not object.

Mr. WISE. I have no objection to striking out the word "all."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the directors of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations have taken action in opposition to this bill. They predicate their opposition to it on fundamental grounds that are vital in the expenditure of Government funds for the use of experiment stations in the respective States. They claim that it is vital, if the agricultural interests of this country are going to have the benefits from the utilization of the various funds that Congress appropriates under the Morrill Act, under the Hatch Act, under the Adams Act, under the Smith-Lever Act, that there should be some concentration of those funds in one agency in each State. They think that it is a pure waste of Government funds to allow this money to be appropriated for the benefit of this isolated experiment station, as it is proposed in this case, where that experiment station receives no appropriation from the State to support its activities and where it does not receive any educational benefit or direction from the said institution. This is an isolated case, one that has never been before presented to the attention of the House.

At the time of the passage of the Hatch Act, as I recall, in 1887, there were experiment stations located in three States independent of support from agricultural colleges. But it has been the purpose of all the legislation since then that the appropriations that have been made by Congress should be at the disposal of some central authority in the State. This seeks to except that and allow these funds to go to an experiment station which receives substantially no support from the State whatsoever.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if it is his purpose to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the Secretary of Agriculture is strongly opposed to this bill, the representatives of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations are unitedly in opposition to it, and opposed to the policy as establishing a precedent, and under those circumstances I feel obliged to object——

Mr. CRISP. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that for 29 years the Government has continued to pay the money allotted to Georgia under the Hatch Act to this institution, and that the Committee on Agriculture has unanimously recommended that this bill pass; that this bill does not cost the Government one cent, and that the present Secretary of Agriculture for three years has paid this money to this institution, and that all Secretaries for 29 years have paid it, up to this year? This bill simply requires that he shall continue to pay the money allotted Georgia to this institution, as it has been paid for 29 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman's statement that this has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Agriculture, I may say that in talking to one prominent member of that committee he stated it was not his intention to favor, as this law does, for all time, the use of the appropriation of the Federal money to this experiment station, but it should only go temporarily, until the State of Georgia by its legislation could rectify the condition. I have no objection to allowing this fund to go temporarily to the State, but when the Secretary of Agriculture and the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations take the united stand that this is against the best interests of agriculture in this country—and I may say parenthetically that I have given more than usual attention to this bill, because——

Mr. CRISP. I admit that the gentleman is an authority on agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman may be sarcastic, but when the representatives of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations come to me and present their case I assume it is my duty to give them a hearing, and I have done so, because I want to do no injustice to the State of Georgia. I can say that I have no objection to this money being appropriated temporarily for the use of this station. The only money that is appropriated for its use is by Congress, which would constitute such a precedent that I am constrained to object.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold the objection, allowing the gentleman from Michigan, who is a member of the committee, to make a statement.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, and referred by the committee to a subcommittee of which I became a member, and I know something about it.

The act of Congress under which this money is payable to the States provides among other things that an annual appropriation shall be made to experiment stations organized in a certain way at the time that the act was passed. The station in Georgia was not organized until a little later, a little more than a year later, as I remember, but each Secretary of Agriculture, from the time the station was organized in Georgia until this very year, has recognized it as the proper institution in Georgia to receive the money, and out of annual appropriations the allotment was made to this institution in Georgia during these years—29 years in all. It seemed to our committee that this institution, meeting all the requirements of the law and having been recognized so long, ought to continue to be recognized.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says that the Secretary of Agriculture is strongly opposed to this act. The Secretary of Agriculture was twice asked, once by the Committee on Agriculture as a whole and later by the subcommittee of that committee, to communicate with it and to state his reasons, because we respect him and his opinions; and if one will read what the Secretary has said in both of his communications he will find that there is absolutely nothing in the Secretary's statement in support of the gentleman's objection except that the institution does not strictly come within the provisions of the law, because it was organized, as I say, about a year after the law was passed. Peruse the statement made by the Secretary and peruse his report, his communication to the committee and to the subcommittee, and you will find nothing, except what I have stated, to justify the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the Secretary of Agriculture is opposed to this bill.

Now, in my judgment, as a member of the committee and as a member of the subcommittee, this institution in Georgia justifies and, during the years past, has justified the payment of the money to it by the Secretary of Agriculture, and it seems to me the statute of limitations runs against the proposition that the money ought now to be withheld. There is no question as to the character of the institution. There is no question but that the money has been properly used. There is a difference of opinion in Georgia, which has arisen lately, some jealousy between the heads of the different institutions in that State, and the head of one of the institutions that has not been receiving any of this money thinks his institution ought to receive it; or, at least, his feeling against the institution at present receiving it is such that he would be willing to deprive that institution of the benefit of the money.

In my judgment the bill is right. Perhaps it would be better if the word "hereafter" were stricken out. Perhaps it would be better and safer if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] were followed, to strike out the word "all." But this year's money ought to be paid to that institution in Georgia, and the statements of the gentleman from Wisconsin are not borne out by the facts as they have been brought to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture and as I believe they exist. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objects to the measure on the ground that it establishes a dangerous precedent.

Well, it was contemplated at the time of the passage of the Morrill and Hatch Acts and realized when these other acts were passed that conditions might arise when it would be necessary for Congress to designate specifically the institution which was for the time at least to receive the funds. Such a condition has arisen in Georgia. The only objection to the legislation as reported is that, without striking out the word "hereafter" and the word "all," it might be held to fix for all time the appropriations in this institution, without regard to changing conditions there, either through the act of the Georgia Legislature or by reason of the failure of the institution in future to comply with the law. But with the amendment I have suggested we are following out the spirit of the Hatch Act in designating, where there is a difficulty of this kind and a misunderstanding, the institution that is to receive the money, so long as it complies with the provisions of the act and——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; in just a moment. So long as the moneys are properly expended.

Now, if you will strike out the word "hereafter" and the word "all," it simply provides that last year's appropriation shall be paid to that institution and future appropriations shall be paid—future appropriations, so long, of course, as the institution qualifies and continues to qualify under the acts—and there is no doubt about the moneys having been properly spent and about the institution having done good work.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the governor of Georgia had a conference with the Secretary of Agriculture here at Washington, at which representatives of the State of Georgia were present, and it was agreed between the governor of Georgia and the Secretary of Agriculture that a bill giving temporary relief should be introduced, so that the State of Georgia might take action whereby this fund would be, as in other States, distributed through the State college of agriculture or the State university?

The bill as presented in that form was not, although it had the full approval of the governor of the State, accepted by the local representatives of the State of Georgia. Furthermore, if the gentleman will permit, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], it seems indeed strange that in reporting the bill in this form no reference whatsoever is made in the report to the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture, nor is any reference made in that report to the letter in which he objected to the bill in its present form.

I said in the beginning that I have no objection to the State of Georgia getting this money temporarily, until the State of Georgia can correct its laws whereby this fund can be utilized, as in other States, through one central agency.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman refers to the consultation of the representatives of Georgia where the Secretary was present. I happened to be one of them. The gentleman is in error when he says they agreed upon a resolution to take care of this institution temporarily. The first proposition we indicate is to pay this money to the State university, a purely literary institution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not the proposition to have this money go to the central institution and have that institution use it in connection with its other agricultural activities?

Mr. WISE. For 29 years it has been paid in accordance with the laws of Georgia.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the Morrill Act, in the Hatch Act, and in the Lever Act it was provided that the money should go to one central body in the State, to be used and coordinated in agricultural pursuits, whereas, if this bill passes, this money goes to this experiment station, as it has gone for 29 years past, an institution for the support of which not one cent has been appropriated by the State of Georgia.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman is in error about that. In this very case the Morrill fund goes to the State university.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite aware of that.

Mr. WISE. Originally the Secretary of Agriculture insisted that this should go to the State university; but later, when he was informed that they had a State agricultural college, which is under an entirely separate and distinct board of trustees, he changed his view and said that the funds might go to the State agricultural college.

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly, he wants it to go to some central institution which has support from the State and not to an institution like this experiment station, which has no support from the State.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman is in error about that. It does have some support from the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much?

Mr. WISE. The gentleman said it had none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, well, a trifling amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment? Will the gentleman consent if the word "hereafter" is stricken out, so that it will apply only to this year?

Mr. STAFFORD. I stated to the gentleman in my initial remarks that I have no objection whatsoever to this money being allotted to this experiment station for this year, until the State of Georgia can provide for its future distribution, so as to conform to the way these appropriations are distributed in other States.

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman will permit me, right there I should like to state that if you confine this to the present appropriation, which expires on June 30 with the fiscal year, the General Assembly of Georgia does not meet until the latter part of June. The appropriation, that has already passed this House and the Senate and is now, or soon will be, in conference, provides for the next fiscal year. It is a matter of impossibility to get men who are qualified to run this institution to take the place with the fact staring them in the face that there is no appropriation and no act of the general assembly which will take care of the situation, because they will not quit places which they are qualified to fill and go down there and take the position on an uncertainty. This resolution undertakes to provide for that by making the next appropriation available.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will go further, because it was my original intention, as indicated by my statement, not to object to a remedial measure authorizing the payment of these funds to this experiment station until the Georgia Legislature can act, so as to correct the conditions and conform to the conditions in other States. That is the position of the Secretary of Agriculture. That position has the support of Gov. Dorsey, of your State. I am not unreasonable when I take this position.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman says it has the support of Gov. Dorsey. Gov. Dorsey was up here trying to get this money, and he did agree to things that ordinarily probably he would not agree to, except for the emergency that exists. Now, with the amendment that the gentleman from Wyoming suggests it seems to me it ought to meet the criticism of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought perhaps gentlemen had patched up a compromise. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PUBLIC QUARTERS FOR OFFICERS OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3406) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to determine where and when there are no public quarters available for officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PAYMENT OF GUN POINTERS AND GUN CAPTAINS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3445) to authorize the payment of gun pointers and gun captains while temporarily absent from their regular stations, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the period of the present war any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who has qualified, or who may hereafter qualify, as a gun pointer or gun captain, and who has been, or may hereafter be, detailed as gun pointer or gun captain for a gun of the class for which qualified, shall be entitled to the additional pay now or hereafter provided for such qualification and detail while temporarily absent by proper authority from the place where ordinarily required to perform duty under such detail, or while performing temporary duty which is not connected with such detail as gun pointer or gun captain.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDIANHEAD RAILROAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6982) to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Navy to enter into and contract for the construction of a line of railway from a point in the District of Columbia to Indianhead, Md.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I do not desire to question the advisability of the construction of this railroad. Neither do I wish in any way to obstruct the building of the road, because it may be necessary; but I do very seriously object to the way in which this bill is drawn. Originally it was drawn to read:

To build a line of railway from the point at or in the vicinity of Bennings, D. C., to Indianhead, Md.

That language has been changed to read:

To build a line of railway from a point in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia to Indianhead, Md.

That would permit a steam railway to be constructed from any point in the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia in the past has undergone similar experiences, and in doing so has found itself compelled to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars. Where a fill is made in building a railroad in front of one or more residences those residences are brought below grade. Then Congress is called upon to pay damages for having left the houses down in a hole, and damages are awarded. In other instances the railroad makes a cut and leaves houses away up in the air, and damages are awarded on that account. As I see it, the plan to construct this railroad without any beginning point being named, except that it is to be somewhere in the District of Columbia, is most objectionable indeed.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. The purpose was to authorize it from the navy yard. I have no objection to an amendment that would specify the navy yard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think the bill ought to state plainly where it is to start and the route it is to pursue, because there, again, the question of grade crossings comes in. Many people are killed here every year by objectionable grade crossings, and I think this bill ought to make proper provision regarding such crossings.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. What company is this that it is proposed to incorporate to build this railroad? It says some company.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My answer is that as the bill does not state I do not know. Why the name of the railroad company is not put in the bill I do not know.

Mr. ROBBINS. Why is it they do not designate the terminals?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will have to ask somebody other than myself. I have not the information.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs may have the information, but I have not.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will turn to page 2 of the report he will find there set out a letter in which it is stated that the Washington-Newport News Short Line is the company that is proposing to construct the railroad. The idea was to build it by Indianhead to Newport News, Va., but the Government is only specially interested, and is intensely interested, to have the road as far as Indianhead. This simply guarantees the right of so much freight for six years after the road is constructed and in operation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What effect does this have on the power which Secretary McAdoo now has under the act nationalizing the railroads during the war?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think anything.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I saw the other day in a newspaper that he had prohibited any railroad company from making any extension or improvement involving an expenditure of more than $25,000, or something to that effect.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not seen anything of that kind. I do not think this would affect the matter at all. This is intended for transportation between the Indianhead proving grounds and powder factory and the gun factory.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why was this authority given to some private railroad corporation rather than in express terms, if it is necessary at all, to the Director General of Railroads?

Mr. PADGETT. This railroad company was proposing to build the railroad, and I understand it has largely secured the rights of way and is prepared to begin the construction at once. The other would be a question of Government ownership, and the Government would have to pay the expenses. This does not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is an additional objection. I would say that under the proposed plan the United States is to furnish the money with which to build this railroad.

Mr. PADGETT. I beg to differ with the gentleman; it is not at all. The Government does not furnish any money to build the railroad, not one cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill provides that "the Secretary of the Navy is to advance to the said company a sum not exceeding $360,000, in 12 semiannual payments of $30,000 each, and to accept for that amount transportation warrants from said railroad company for a like amount, to be redeemed by charges from the transportation of freight for the Navy or the Navy Department."

Mr. PADGETT. And if the gentleman will read further he will find that it is after the road has been completed and is in operation. It does not make a single payment until the road is completed and in operation, and then it is estimated that the Government freight would be more than $100,000 a year for a year or two, and this is simply giving a guaranty for six years of $60,000 in freight, which would be less than the Government freight actually would be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It seems to me that there is no real difference between the way I see the bill and the way the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] sees it, and that is the Government is to pay for the road and then it is to take it up in freight.

Mr. PADGETT. They have to build the railroad before we furnish a dollar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But at last the Government will have furnished the amount of money with which it has been built, and it is to get warrants with which to pay freight for stuff to be shipped over the railroad. If the Government is to go into a proposition by which it is to accept freight warrants for money advanced, and thereby pay for the building of the railroad, the Government ought to own it.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me say to the gentleman that the construction of the railroad is estimated from here to Indianhead to cost $1,000,000, in round numbers, and they expect to carry it on to Newport News; but the Government is especially interested to see that it gets to Indianhead, the powder factory, and the proving grounds. This bill provides only that he shall enter into a contract agreeing to take freight for six years to the amount of $60,000 a year, payable in half-yearly payments of $30,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And it does so whether they use that amount or not.

Mr. PADGETT. After the road is in operation and when we know the freight will be more than $60,000 a year. The only thing is that it gives an assurance that they will have freight from a responsible shipper amounting to $60,000 a year, and that would be 6 per cent upon their bonded indebtedness.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The proposition of the gentleman is to subsidize this railroad in advance, by agreeing to pay so much money a year, whether it ships that much freight over it or not. I will say to the gentleman that until some provision has been made in the bill designating the point from which it shall start, and authorizing the route over which it shall be constructed, and making provision for the payment of damages done to property by which it will pass, I shall object and continue to object.

I would suggest to the gentleman that a new bill be written, stating where the railroad is to start and setting out the route that it is to travel, and then providing for the payment of such damages as may be done to abutting property.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is not the gentleman arguing from the standpoint that the Government is especially interested in this road, when in fact it is not intended to have——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. For the sake of argument I will concede that, but I do not concede it really.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman also understands that the practical value of this road is within the Government's jurisdiction and lies in the fact that we will get a railroad from here to Newport News eventually?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That, of course, is part of the scheme.

Mr. BRITTEN. What difference does it make where the railroad starts from and where it runs to, just so it goes down here to Indianhead and gives the Government first-class railroad facilities, which it does not have now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would the gentleman like to see it start out here in front of the Capitol?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman knows that is not likely.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Of course I know that; but this bill gives it the right to start from some other point equally as objectionable. That is one of the objections to the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement that the gentleman intends to object, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object to that, and shall continue to object until a bill embodying the suggestions I have just made be brought in.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask that it be passed to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

AMENDING SECTION 1570, REVISED STATUTES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3130) to amend section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand from the report on this bill it seeks to allow the Secretary of the Navy to assign marines on our battleships——

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. To act as firemen.

Mr. PADGETT. No; under present practice and past practice time out of mind marines serve on battleships and other ships alongside of a naval bluejacket. There is a law in existence allowing the payment of 33 cents a day extra to seamen and landsmen, men who are in the Navy, when they are down in the engine room; but there is no provision for allowing that pay to the marines, and, as a matter of fact, marines do serve and have been serving in that capacity.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am aware the purpose of the bill was to pay an additional allowance of 33 cents, that is now paid to seamen while they are performing the work of firemen, to these marines; but nothing was said in the report to show whether there was existing law that allowed the Secretary of the Navy to assign the marines for that character of service.

Mr. PADGETT. They are doing it and have been doing it for years and years, just along with the others. It is not often the marines do it, but they do do it from time to time, and this is simply to put the marines on the same basis as the others for the same work.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Does this apply simply to those men in the merchant service?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it applies to the whole Navy.

Mr. FOSS. To the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSS. Whenever we have men on these merchant ships?

Mr. PADGETT. Whenever they are doing that work.

Mr. FOSS. Whenever they are doing that work?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1570. Every seaman, landsman, or marine who performs the duty of a fireman on board any vessel of war shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as seaman, landsman, or marine, a compensation at the rate of 33 cents a day for the time he is employed as fireman."

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAY OF RETIRED CHIEF WARRANT OFFICERS ON ACTIVE DUTY.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this same provision is carried in the general appropriation bill which the gentleman has reported from his committee, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Of course the gentleman will recognize that on the appropriation bill it would be subject to the point of order as legislation upon an appropriation bill, and if it passes here I shall strike it out of the appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman prefer to have it passed independently?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; I would prefer that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman make a brief statement as to the purpose of this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. In the act of August 29, 1916, there was legislation, as shown in the report, providing for the promotion of warrant and chief warrant officers after 6 and 12 years' service in that grade.

These are petty officers that come from the enlisted personnel and occupy a position between the enlisted personnel, the privates or seamen, and the commissioned officers. In interpreting that act the accounting officers of the Treasury held that when a retired officer was reassigned to duty, before he gets the benefit of the act he must have served, after the 29th of August, a time sufficient, added to the time he has served before the 29th of August, to make up the 6 or 12 years. That was not the purpose or the intention, and this legislation is intended to correct that interpretation, so that if he resigns before the 29th that law applies. If he resigned on the 30th, it did not apply under their interpretation, because they held that, being in the service on the 29th and retiring afterwards, he did not have to make up that additional time; but if he had retired on the 28th he would have to serve after the 29th to make up the six years. And this legislation is to correct that interpretation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty.

Be it enacted, etc., That any retired chief warrant officer who has been on active duty since August 29, 1916, or who may hereafter perform active duty, and whose record is creditable, shall, during such time as he has been or may hereafter be on active duty, and from the time his service on the active list after date of commission, plus his service on active duty while on the retired list, is equal to six years, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy; and shall, during such time as he has been, or may hereafter be, on active duty, and from the time such total service is equal to 12 years, receive the pay and allowances that are now, or may hereafter be, allowed a lieutenant, United States Navy.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any retired warrant officer who has performed or may hereafter perform active duty, and whose record is creditable, shall, during such time as he has been or may hereafter be on active duty, and from the time his service on the active list after date of warrant, plus his service on active duty while on the retired list, is equal to 12 years, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy; and shall, during such time as he has been or may hereafter be on active duty, and from the time such total service is equal to 18 years, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant, United States Navy."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman state what increase the amendment of the House committee will make in the pay?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not make any increase, as I understand it, under existing law. It only applies as to the interpretation, correcting the interpretation that had been made heretofore by the accounting officers of the Treasury in interpreting the act of August 29, 1916.

Mr. WALSH. But section 2, which has been included by the Committee on Naval Affairs, provides for an increase in pay, does it not, over that of existing law?

Mr. PADGETT. You will notice that section 1 applies to retired chief warrant officers. That is one rank. The second section applies to any retired warrant officer, which is the next lower rank, and embraces the warrant officers as well as the chief warrant officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language as found in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of date of January 25, which shows that the section to which the gentleman from Massachusetts is now directing attention does increase the salaries of those carried in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. The only increase is in the last provision there, where the chief warrant officer has served 18 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Massachusetts is directing his inquiry as to whether there was any increase of salary under existing law provided by the committee amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. It makes that new grade of from 12 to 18 years.

Mr. WALSH. Now, what increase is provided by that?

Mr. PADGETT. It would give the increase of the pay from a lieutenant junior grade to a lieutenant, if he had served that additional six years in the grade.

Mr. WALSH. Well, can the gentleman give me any idea or estimate in dollars and cents as to what that increase would be for this warrant officer?

Mr. PADGETT. My recollection is that a lieutenant of the junior grade—although I do not remember; it is set out in the pay tables—is in the neighborhood of $2,100 or $2,200. And a lieutenant would run up to about $2,500, if I remember the figures correctly. I have not looked at them.

Mr. WALSH. That is the pay without the allowances?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. There are some allowances in addition.

Mr. WALSH. In addition to that?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands drafted into the service of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9903. An act to provide for restoration to their former grades of enlisted men discharged to accept commissions, and for other purposes.

MANNER OF REPORTING CASUALTIES.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes to make a statement as to the manner of reporting casualties. This is a letter from a constituent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. The letter is from Mr. Gustavus E. Miller, who says:

CHICAGO, March 16, 1918.

Congressman WILLIAM E. MASON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to enter a protest against the present method of reporting casualties from the front, and as reason for my complaint give this concrete instance:

I have a son now in France, Sergt. Royal E. Miller, and by the inclosed newspaper clipping you will note reported as killed "Sergt. Leroy W. Miller." I have up to this time, 8.30 a. m. of the day the paper was published, had at least a dozen anxious personal inquiries and numerous telephone calls from friends asking whether it was my son. Two of these were from his aunts, whose families are very much upset and worried about him, and my wife.

I heartily agree with the contention that some method more definite should be initiated whereby identification would be more positive, and I, as one of your constituents, and for those who are in the same position, ask you to use your influence to obtain a change in the present almost cruel method of reporting casualties.

Very truly, yours,

GUSTAVUS E. MILLER,
1211 Addison Street.

The answer to this, as a rule, is that they telegraph to the parents when one of our soldiers is killed or wounded, but that does not cover this particular sort of a case. You will see in the list of casualties frequently almost the same name, and it is almost an absolute impossibility for them to tell. It will not do to say that they telegraph the parents. They can not telegraph the parents who have children having the same military title, like sergeant or lieutenant, and names almost similar, and in some instances exactly the same. I am simply asking that this go into the RECORD for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that their present method is not satisfactory to the people. If they would simply insert after "Sergt. Leroy W. Miller" the words giving company and regiment and address it would be of benefit. It would save great anxiety and suspense which our people suffer.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman aware that another distinguished legislative body has passed a resolution of inquiry to the department upon the very point that he is making now?

Mr. MASON. Yes. I saw by the paper that the resolution was pending or that an act was pending directing that it be done. And I call attention to this simply to show that the present course of the department is not sufficient, for it does not give notice to the parents whose sons have names identically the same and sometimes occupying the same rank. I expect the present method to be changed, and unless it is I will offer a law to change it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AGE LIMIT OF NOMINEES TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3402) to fix the age limit for candidates for admission to the United States Naval Academy.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry. Frankly, I do not personally like the idea of making the date fixed on July 1. That has the advantage of being mathematically accurate, and so on, but it seems to me it would be infinitely better to fix the date as of the time they take the examination. Would the gentleman consider an amendment to that effect?

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that under existing law nominations by Members of Congress—that is, Members of the Senate and of the House—that is the law, 20 years as of the date of the time of the examination; but that is of a varying date. Sometimes it is held in February, sometimes in March, and sometimes in April, and a few years ago it was held in June.

Now, under the law authorizing the nominations of young men from the Navy the date is the date of admission, 20 years—admission to the academy—which may be a still later date. This was selected as July 1 simply as a fixed date to make it definite, so that it will be known when the person would be too old and when he would be too young, and not vary from one date to another. For instance, here are two examinations that are held. There is an examination held, we will say, in February, and a man is 20 years old in February, just the day before the examination. He can not get in. But there is another examination that is held for another fellow that takes the examination in April, and he was 20 years old the next day in April. He can get in when the other man is shut out, and yet the time was two months later. This does not apply to the present year. It does not change the date. It only begins next year, and allows a definite date, so that you will know who will be too old to enter.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As I understand from the report and from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, the trouble has arisen because men who are to take the examination and secure entrance from the enlisted personnel are laboring under a law which provides that they shall not be over 20 years when they enter the academy, which is a disadvantage to them as compared with those who are operating under a law which says they can enter the academy provided they are only 20 when they take the examination.

Mr. PADGETT. But the examination is ahead of the entrance, and it gives a longer time than for nominees of Members of Congress.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Entrance at the academy is not a uniform date. It varies from year to year, and often in the same year.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly it does.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. For instance, a man can take the examination in February——

Mr. PADGETT. And they enter on different dates, usually in July. But here may come three or four men that enter and take the oath on the 5th day of July, you will say. Here comes some next day, on the 6th, and some on the 10th, and others on the 15th, and some may not enter and take the oath until August.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Of course, the idea is to make it certain that the young man will not have too great an age when he graduates. That is the reason for it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and it removes the necessity for a great deal of correspondence in the department, explaining the time when one gets too old, and why this one was of a certain date, and that one was of a certain date, and others of a certain date. This fixes a definite time and does no injustice to anybody.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think it does an injustice, but it really reduces the opportunity.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman will say "yes" in a moment. The time now open to every young man in the country extends up until he is 20, when he takes the examination. Any young man who is not more than 19 years and 364 days old when he takes the examination is entitled to the privilege of doing so.

Mr. PADGETT. He can still go in on the 1st of July, whereas he would be shut off from the examination in February.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That kind of a boy never could take the examination. Only that boy could take the examination who would be 19 years and 364 days old on the 1st day of July, so that you have restricted the opportunity of the young man to that extent.

Mr. PADGETT. It says the 1st day of July of the year in which he enters. He may be 20 years in February. But it extends his time to enter until the 1st day of July.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It seems to me that the idea is to fix and make it certain that the young man shall have only such and such an age when he graduates. This has no reference at all to when he enters the academy. It fixes an arbitrary date of July 1, without reference to when he enters or graduates.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the gentleman correct as to the eligibility depending on the time when he takes the examination? The bill provides that he shall be eligible to admission to the academy until he is 20 years of age, and he is admitted about the middle of June.

Mr. PADGETT. No. The law with reference to nominees of Members of Congress says 20 years at the time of the date of taking the examination, and with respect to nominees from the service it shall be at the date of entry.

Mr. ALEXANDER. All the regulations I have ever seen expressly state that they shall be eligible until they arrive at the age of 20 years, on the date of admission, but——

Mr. PADGETT. They do not say that. The gentleman has overlooked the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not that mean this, and this only, that hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy shall be not less than 16 nor more than 20 years of age on July 1 of the calendar year in which they enter?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That makes it perfectly plain.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate the importance of this, realizing that it enlarges the opportunities of boys, and I have an instance of my own. This year I appointed two boys to the Naval Academy. They were 20 years of age in March. I was told that they must take their examinations in February or else they could not take them at all.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. They had to hasten with their work and take the examination in February in order to be admitted this year. If this act passes, as I think it ought to, they could have taken their examinations in April instead of in February.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. So this enlarges the opportunity of a boy and does not take away from anybody the opportunity that he has.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take issue with the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. PADGETT] and also of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], that a person who is 20 years of age in February of next year, shortly after the time the examinations are held, can enter the academy if this bill passes. He will not be eligible.

Mr. PADGETT. I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. This law is restrictive in its character. It provides that the person must be under the age of 20 on July 1 of the year that he enters the academy, while under existing law he may be past his twentieth birthday on July 1 of the year he enters the academy. He only has to be under 20 at the time he takes his examination. Many of us have had instances of candidates who have been obliged to take the February examination in order to qualify, because they would have attained the age of 20 after the February and before the April examination.

While I am in sympathy with the purpose of this bill, which, according to the report, is to permit the enlisted personnel to be admitted into the academy, and also for the further reason, advanced by the chairman of the committee, in order to have definiteness and to save the department from making a great many replies to inquiries, I think many of us would be plagued if this law passed in its present form, because it would exclude many candidates whom we have in mind, and to whom we have offered the nomination, who would not be 20 at the time of the February examination but who would be 20 between February and July 1. We ought to protect those candidates, of whom there may be several—boys who have been preparing, perhaps, for years in anticipation of the requirements of the existing law—so that they may be able to take the examination next year, because they will not have reached the age of 20 at the time of the February examination, but if this law passes they will be barred.

Mr. PADGETT. This does not apply to this year at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know; but I am talking about next year. It does not apply to this year. The April examinations for this year will be held within a month. There must be instances, which many Members of the House have in mind, of candidates who will become 20 years of age before July 1 next year, who will not reach that age before the February or April examinations. I do not think any member of the Naval Affairs Committee wants to prevent these young men from taking that examination.

Mr. PADGETT. The very purpose of this bill is to admit those men up to the 1st of July.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the bill says—

That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be between the ages of 16 and 20 years on July 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the academy.

Those candidates who become 20 years of age after the February examination and before July 1 would not be eligible to appointment under that language. They would be 20 years before July 1, and therefore would be excluded.

Mr. PADGETT. It would let them in. The very purpose of it is to extend the time, so that the man who becomes 20 years of age before the examination can have up until July 1 to get in.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language I read says he can not be 20 years of age on July 1 of the year in which he enters the academy.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. Suppose a candidate becomes 20 years of age on the 1st of May next year, can he then enter?

Mr. PADGETT. He can enter, and can enter up until the 1st day of July.

Mr. HASTINGS. On the 1st of July he would be over 20 years of age.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say that it would not interfere at all with this young man's entrance. It would extend the time.

Mr. MONDELL. A young man whom I know will take his examination in April. He becomes 20 on the 1st of May of this year. He can now enter the Academy, because his examination comes a few days before his birthday.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. But if this bill were a law, he would be 20 before the 1st of July, and he could not enter the Academy.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee have evidently meant well. They have intended to extend the time, but as a matter of fact they have limited it.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the gentleman is mistaken in his interpretation.

Mr. MONDELL. The way to extend the time would be to make it the 1st of January instead of the 1st of July. Then you would get back of the examinations, and all those who were less than 20 at the time of the examinations could enter.

Mr. PADGETT. If you should make it apply to January 1, 1918, you would cut them out. That is, the boy who did not become 20 until May, 1918, would be cut out.

Mr. MONDELL. January of the year that he enters the Academy.

Mr. PADGETT. If he became 20 by that time he would be cut out. It would cut out the boy who became 20 in May.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's bill certainly restricts the time.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it enlarges it. It has been gone over by the department, and that is their construction.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the language. At first I thought the gentleman was right, but now I think not. The bill provides—

That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be between the ages of 16 and 20 years on July 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the Academy.

They must be between the ages of 16 and 20 up to the 1st day of July. If a boy is 20 years old on the 30th day of June he is not eligible.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. If he is of age on the 1st of May——

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman means 20 years of age.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. The act says he must be between the ages of 16 and 20 years of age on the 1st of July. Now, if he is 20 years of age on the 1st of May, is he between the ages of 16 and 20 on the 1st of July?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; he is not.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, to pass over this bill, and I will get an official interpretation of this language to satisfy Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks to pass over the bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISPOSITION OF EFFECTS OF DECEASED PERSONS IN NAVAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 3129, an act to provide for the disposition of the effects of deceased persons in the naval service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the last proviso:

Provided further, That claims may be presented hereunder at any time within five years after such moneys or proceeds have been so deposited in the Treasury, and, when supported by competent proof in any case after such deposit in the Treasury, shall be certified to Congress for consideration.

Mr. PADGETT. In other words, it requires for Congress the right to pass on taking the money out of the Treasury and not allowing it to be paid out of the Treasury on the warrant of a subordinate officer.

Mr. STAFFORD. One pest that we suffer here from time to time is in the consideration of private claims of this character.

Mr. PADGETT. The proviso is now existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe it would be well if we could dispense with some of the private bills and have them referred to the Court of Claims. I have drafted an amendment, although I do not wish to press it, but I am going to ask, if the gentleman will permit me, to read the amendment, so that the gentleman may consider it and have the bill passed over without prejudice. The purpose of the amendment is to have all these claims submitted directly to the Court of Claims and have a report by the court to Congress, and then have the claims paid without any formal action by Congress, except to appropriate the money. My amendment is as follows:

Strike out the last proviso and insert the following:

"Provided further, That at any time within five years after such moneys or proceeds have been so deposited in the Treasury any heir at law of such deceased person within two degrees of relationship, or of any next of kin on behalf of such relatives, may present a claim for such principal amount so deposited in the Treasury, and upon proper proof submitted to the Secretary of the Navy shall be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication, and the amount found due by said court shall be certified to Congress for payment."

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin makes a mistake in limiting it to two degrees. That would be too close. I think, as provided here, that his next of kin ought to get it. Congress is not confiscating it; Congress is not taking it. The only change we make under existing law is this.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to have Congress troubled with little claims presented in the form of private bills. They will be small in amount, and why not allow the Secretary of the Navy to refer them to the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims find the facts and certify the judgment to Congress, and then we pass the necessary appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think there is any objection to referring them to the Court of Claims, but I do object to limiting it to within two degrees.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not a stickler for two degrees, but my thought was that I did not want claim agents, when they learn that some person had some effects that were sold by the Navy Department and the money turned over to the Treasury, to go scurrying around over the country to find distant relatives and say to them, "If you will allow me 50 per cent of the amount, I will recover it for you."

Mr. PADGETT. I think that would be a worse policy to pursue than to leave it as it is now. The Secretary of the Navy takes it up and certifies to Congress that this sailor left such effects and that they were sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury because they did not know the next of kin. But they know it now, and it belongs to A, B, C, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it would require a private bill.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is put into the sundry civil bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is in error in that. Will the gentleman let the matter go over until we can ascertain whether under existing law when the Secretary of the Navy certifies a matter of that kind it is included in usual course in one of the appropriation bills?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Possibly the gentleman's attention has not been called to the fact that these certified claims ordinarily go on the sundry civil bill and are accepted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was making an inquiry whether they took that course.

Mr. PADGETT. They do.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the practice.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that is the case, there is no need of the amendment that I have proposed.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a better practice than to allow attorneys to build up a practice of that kind in the Court of Claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree with the gentleman, but I was under the impression from reading the bill that it would require a private bill, and I wished to relieve Congress of that trouble. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Speaker, I will not press my amendment or oppose the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all moneys, articles of value, papers, keepsakes, and other similar effects belonging to deceased persons in the naval service, not claimed by their legal heirs or next of kin, shall be deposited in safe custody, and if any such moneys, articles of value, papers, keepsakes, or other similar effects so deposited have been, or shall hereafter be, unclaimed for a period of two years from the date of the death of such person, such articles and effects shall be sold and the proceeds thereof, together with the moneys above mentioned, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Navy pension fund: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to make diligent inquiry in every instance after the death of such person to ascertain the whereabouts of his heirs or next of kin, and to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions: Provided further, That claims may be presented hereunder at any time within five years after such moneys or proceeds have been so deposited in the Treasury, and, when supported by competent proof in any case after such deposit in the Treasury, shall be certified to Congress for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMLIN). The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COURSE OF INSTRUCTION AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3401) to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion in connection with this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not think that what I have to suggest could be incorporated in the bill, but I desire to call attention to it now in order that it may address itself to the authorities at Annapolis. I shall give the details of the case to which my attention has just been called. The authorities at Annapolis may correct the abuse, if their attention is attracted to it in this way, if, indeed, it be an abuse, or correct the apparent injustice, if that is what it should be termed. I nominated recently a very bright young man, Mr. C. D. Garvin, of Harrison, Ark., as a candidate for the Naval Academy at Annapolis. His parents sent him to Marion, Ala., for instruction, at considerable expense. I understand that four is the basis upon which these nominees are graded.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Two and a half passes. That is equivalent to 62½ per cent.

Mr. TILLMAN. This young man, on the difficult subjects of geometry and algebra, made almost the requisite number, 4; but he failed to pass on English, obtaining only 1.9. By permission of the academic board he was allowed to take another examination in April. This examination which he took was in February. I called up the Bureau of Navigation and asked if he might not be excused from taking the examination again on geometry and algebra and those subjects on which he passed, but I was told he could not be allowed that privilege. Only two months will have elapsed between the first examination and the next one. In institutions of learning generally, on final examinations, where a student passes a creditable examination and fails on one or two subjects, he is allowed or required to take a further examination only on those subjects. It occurred to me that it is a hardship upon this young man who made excellent grades, passing on all subjects save one, and failing only on this one, English, to be compelled to go back again to Marion, which he is doing, and prepare again for examination on all these subjects. Why should he not be allowed to take the examination on English alone?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. That is a question that is arranged by the academic board.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand so, but I thought perhaps it might be proper to direct attention to it here.

Mr. PADGETT. It would not be germane on this bill, and under the existing law these questions are governed by the academic board.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am of the opinion that the gentleman is correct; but does it not occur to the gentleman that it would be fair to require this young man, only two months after his first examination, to pass only on the subject of English, upon which he failed?

Mr. PADGETT. I confess to the gentleman that I can not understand it. I had a case of that kind once myself.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Has the gentleman requested the academic board at Annapolis to grant another examination?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, I have obtained that concession and have appointed him again, but what I am complaining of is that he must again pass on these same subjects that he passed on just two months ago. Does it not occur to the gentleman from Illinois that such requirement is unfair to the young man?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I think the academic board might well permit a reexamination on English alone.

Mr. TILLMAN. But they have declined to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think the gentleman will have much trouble when it comes to the ultimate fact.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker; I desire to state that I have had a case so similar to the one stated by the gentleman from Arkansas that it sounded like my own.

Mr. PADGETT. I had one myself just like it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Except in this. Instead of the young man passing 1.9 my boy was 2 in English, and my case has this other feature: The boy enlisted in the service a year ago and has not had opportunity since his appointment, of course, to make preparation that a boy outside the service could make for taking an examination.

Mr. PADGETT. If he had applied, he could have gotten a 90-day furlough.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think they have been very generous in giving him what furlough he asked for.

Mr. PADGETT. They give 90 days' furlough for the purpose of preparing for these examinations.

Mr. CRAMTON. Their regulations are not always binding as to the 2½ per cent minimum, and it seems to me at this time, when we are all anxious not to have any vacancies at the academy, they might very well, if a man stands up well in mathematical subjects, be a little lenient in the matter of English.

Mr. PADGETT. I think in cases of that kind English and subjects of that kind that are continuing subjects in the course of study the board always allows a reexamination.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask a question. I notice that the bill has been amended by striking out the words "during the continuance of the present war" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "until August 1, 1921."

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that was done at the suggestion of the superintendent and also of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and for this reason, as explained in the report: The duration of the war is an uncertain thing. It may end any time or it may not. They have no definite standard to which to work. They do not know whether to prepare the studies of these young men for a three or a four year course. It is dependent on that uncertain duration, and if a definite time is fixed they can then launch their studies and their plans and courses of instruction to make it a three-year course during a definite time.

Mr. FOSS. I think it is very unfortunate we have to reduce the length of the course at Annapolis to three years. It should be four years, but, of course, the war has made that necessary——

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. But there is no intention, as I understand it, on the part of the department to reduce the course permanently?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy and our committee, I think, are as heartily opposed to that as the gentleman is, but we recognized the emergency that was existing at this time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to suggest to my colleague from Illinois that it is not the intention of the authorities at Annapolis or the Navy Department to eliminate anything from the studies. The studies will be made more intensive and the vacation time will be very largely eliminated, so that what is usually accomplished in four years will now be accomplished under this intensive system in three years.

Mr. PADGETT. To some extent.

Mr. BRITTEN. To a very large degree.

Mr. PADGETT. To a large degree; yes.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman of course there is a natural desire——

Mr. PADGETT. There is no purpose to make the three years permanent, and I do not think it ought to be. I think ie ought to be four years.

Mr. FOSS. I hope we will stick to that. I know there is a natural desire on the part of young men to get commissions early, and perhaps many of them would like to reduce the course. We used to have a six-year course at the Naval Academy—four years at the Naval Academy and two years at sea—before the midshipman graduated received his commission. Then, we cut out the two-year sea course, until now we have got it down to a four-year course.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is changed. At one time, where the gentleman mentions about it being six years, there were two years in the school, two years at sea, and then two years back in the school, and then graduation, and lately it was changed to four years in the school and two years at sea and graduation was upon the four years' course in school.

Mr. FOSS. The commission, however, was not given until the end of the six years—until after the extra two years at sea.

Mr. PADGETT. The commission, but not the graduation. There is no purpose to make this permanent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, during the continuance of the present war, to reduce temporarily, in his discretion, the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy from four to three years and to graduate classes which have completed such reduced courses of instruction.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 3 and 4, strike out "during the continuance of the present war" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "until August 1, 1921."
Line 4, strike out the word "temporarily."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO DROP FROM THE ROLLS CERTAIN NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS OFFICERS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3404) to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it for granted that the committee has considered the danger that would arise under this sort of legislation in time of war to drop from the roll a man who was taken prisoner and that was lost sight of and was unable to communicate his whereabouts. Do such occasions arise occasionally?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it is intended for war purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. But there are prisoners of war.

Mr. PADGETT. There is a war going on, but I do not think the gentleman would find any abuse of it along that line.

Mr. MONDELL. How is that?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think there would be any abuse of the statute along that line.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that they would have no intention of abusing it.

Mr. PADGETT. Under existing law that same language exists. Section 1229 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows——

Mr. MONDELL. With regard to the land forces?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; in regard to the land forces, and this just makes it the same in reference to the Navy. The first part of it is this: Under existing law if a man is absent and loses service because of sickness brought on by his own misconduct—officer or enlisted man—they do not receive their pay for the time that they lose on account of sickness brought on by their own misconduct; but if his misconduct produces an injury that incapacitates him and he loses his time, the accounting officers of the Treasury have held that he does not lose his pay; that there is a difference between injury and sickness, and a fellow who by his misconduct injured himself physically and was absent from duty would continue to get his pay, while if the same misconduct simply made him sick he would not get his pay, and this is just inserting the word "injury," so as to make it apply both to injury and sickness alike.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to drop from the rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps any officer thereof who is absent from duty without leave for a period of three months or more, or who, having been found guilty by the civil authorities of any offense, is finally sentenced to confinement in a State or Federal penitentiary: Provided, That no officer so dropped shall be eligible for reappointment.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment."

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC QUARTERS FOR OFFICERS OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who objected to the first bill I called up (H. R. 3406) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to determine with reference to quarters, if he will not withdraw the objection. It is just simply the same legislation that now gives the authority to the Secretary of War. Conditions arise where it is very important that the Secretary should have that authority to determine that question for the efficiency of the service, and I would like to ask the gentleman if he is not willing to withdraw his objection and let us return to that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to return to the bill (S. 3406), and that the same may be considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to withdraw my objection at the present time. This matter will come up again within a week or 10 days.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if it went off the calendar or is at the foot of the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It went off the calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask the gentleman if he will object to its going to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I will not object to its going to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask that the order striking the bill from the calendar be rescinded and that the bill be restored to the calendar, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the order striking the bill from the calendar be rescinded, and that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the bill. I have no doubt that it is an excellent measure, and I certainly will not object to it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] seems to think that there are some objections to it; but I should have to object to this request, because it is a bad practice. Gentlemen are likely to leave the Hall with the understanding that a bill has been stricken from the calendar, and then later during the same session some one makes this request for different action, and then if that is granted the Member who objected would be surprised to learn that in his absence the bill was again placed on the calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I will not renew the request to-day for its consideration. Let it go over until the next calendar day.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the House acting on these bills one at a time, that is notice to all then present as to the status of a measure during that day of consideration. I do not think it is wise or good practice to change that situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The customary practice, as the gentleman knows, is that where a bill is objected to and the request is made that it take its place at the foot of the calendar, it is not to be again considered the same day.

Mr. PADGETT. It will not be considered the same day.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the request is made to consider it the same day, that request is to pass it over temporarily. This request is to retain it on the calendar under existing practice, not to be considered to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill has not heretofore been stricken from the calendar?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. In that event it can be restored to the calendar, and the very object which the gentleman desires by his request can be accomplished in another way.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is better practice, because otherwise gentlemen may leave the Chamber with the idea that the status of a bill has been established by their objection, only later on to learn that another arrangement has been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

ISSUE OF BONDS, SEWARD, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9832) to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000 for the purpose of constructing dikes, flumes, and other works to confine the waters of Lowell Creek for the protection of said town.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge whether there is any present bonded indebtedness of the city of Seward?

Mr. SULZER. There is not any present bonded indebtedness, and none can be authorized except by act of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am aware of that. I was wondering if we had previously made any authorization to the city of Seward.

Mr. SULZER. Not to Seward, but there was one made to Valdez a few years ago which was not availed of, and one to the city of Juneau for school purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. One further inquiry about the bill. The interest rate is 8 per cent—that is, not to exceed 8 per cent—and I wish to inquire if that figure is absolutely necessary in order to float the bonds of this municipality?

Mr. SULZER. The money is expected to be provided by the citizens of Seward themselves, and they feel it wise to have the rate not to exceed 8 per cent, to be left to the judgment of the city council.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the prevailing rate of interest at Seward on first-class mortgage loans?

Mr. SULZER. Well, I think it is probably between 8 and 10 per cent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9832) to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000 for the purpose of constructing dikes, flumes, and other works to confine the waters of Lowell Creek for the protection of said town.

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000 for the purpose of constructing dikes, flumes, and other protection to confine the waters of Lowell Creek, and to keep said waters from running over and upon the town of Seward.

Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the town of Seward, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Seward whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. Thirty days' notice of any such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said town before the day fixed for such election.

The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as near as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon the condition that a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of issuing said bonds.

The bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 8 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and shall not be sold for less than their par value with accrued interest, and shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 20 years from date thereof: Provided, however, That the common council of said town of Seward may reserve the right to pay off such bonds in their numerical order at the rate of $5,000 thereof per annum from and after the expiration of five years from their date. Principal and interest shall be payable in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer, or at such bank in the city of New York, in the State of New York, or such place as may be designated by the common council of the town of Seward, the place of payment to be mentioned in the bonds: And provided further, That each and every bond shall have the written signature of the mayor and clerk of said town of Seward and also bear the seal of said town.

No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose other than specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed under the limitations hereinbefore imposed and under the order and direction of said common council, from time to time, as the same may be required for the purposes aforesaid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, may I make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. What is the assessed value of the property of the city of Seward, Alaska, on which bonds could be issued?

Mr. HOUSTON. We have not the assessed value of the property, but it has no bond issue at present.

Mr. NORTON. This would exceed the 2 per cent limit allowed by the law?

Mr. SULZER. It would not exceed it; but I will say to the gentleman that the 2 per cent at the present time hardly covers the annual expenses of the city. There is no way in which they could acquire a sufficient amount of money to bring about this improvement under the 2 per cent taxation. They have been expending several thousand dollars per annum for some length of time in the endeavor to control this stream, which last fall destroyed about $25,000 worth of property in the city, but they are unable to expend a sufficient amount of money to properly control the stream, and that is the reason why they ask for the privilege of floating these bonds, to raise the money to properly construct the dikes and other works necessary to protect the city.

Mr. NORTON. Under the charter granted to the Territory of Alaska is a municipality permitted to issue bonds?

Mr. SULZER. No.

Mr. NORTON. No bonds at all?

Mr. SULZER. No bonds whatever.

Mr. NORTON. Does this bill provide that taxes shall be levied for refunding this amount, as is usual in the refunding of bonds?

Mr. SULZER. No. It does not provide for that, because taxation is limited by the organic act to 2 per cent.

Mr. NORTON. There is no provision, then, in legislation for the refunding of these bonds?

Mr. SULZER. Well, they can be repaid out of taxation. The bonds extend for a period of 20 years, and during that period of time the money can be obtained to pay them.

Mr. NORTON. Well, it is usual in the States, when bonds are issued, for provision to be made at the same time for their payment, by the levy of a tax over a series of years to create a repayment fund.

Mr. SULZER. Well, I will say to the gentleman that this bill is practically identical with former bills of this kind that have been passed by Congress authorizing the city of Valdez to construct a dike and the city of Juneau to construct a school building and issue bonds for $75,000. That was passed by the last Congress. I do not think there is any danger that the money will not be provided at the proper time to repay these bonds.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the chairman of the committee that it seems to me that in legislation of this kind it is very wise to provide the method for the repayment of the bonds by a tax levy.

Mr. HOUSTON. That would depend upon the credit of the municipality. If they can float these bonds there will be no trouble on the score the gentleman speaks of, because it is expected that by the increase in value and improvement of property resulting by reason of this act they will be able to raise money by 2 per cent taxation to meet this indebtedness.

Mr. NORTON. To create a fund to pay it?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; to create a fund to pay it. The same thing was done in the case of the two municipalities mentioned by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is a small matter, relatively, but it involves an important question, to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman. Could the $25,000 be raised in the vicinity of Seward, Alaska?

Mr. HOUSTON. Do you mean could these bonds be floated among parties there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is so expected by the friends and advocates of the measure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I observe that the principal and interest is to be paid in lawful money at the office of the town treasurer, or at such bank in the city of New York, in the State of New York, or such place as may be designated by the common council of the town of Seward. For what reason is "New York" inserted there?

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, perhaps they have their banking account there and it would be more convenient for them to do it there. I am not able to give a detailed reason for their doing that. They might, perhaps, get the capital from New York, and for that reason it would be more convenient to liquidate the bonds at that point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only question that might stand in the way of the passage of the bill, I assume, would be whether or not there is a good reason for issuing the bonds. That is to be determined by the people of Seward themselves?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question of floating bonds is rather an important one at this particular time, and if I were in charge of this bill I would endeavor to have it passed as quickly as possible if there was any expectation of floating those bonds outside of the vicinity of Seward, for this reason: The war-finance corporation bill, which is now in conference, provides for the organization of a capital issues committee, which would have a tremendous influence in the sale of bonds such as these. That matter was under discussion during the consideration of the war-finance corporation bill. But bonds of this kind would not be floated ordinarily in the city of New York, I assume, without the approval of the capital issues committee. If the bonds could be floated in the vicinity of Seward, or elsewhere up in Alaska, or at Spokane, Wash., where the people are more familiar with Seward than are the people in the East, probably there would be no difficulty. The Constitution would protect their right to issue the bonds. But if the capital issues committee were to disapprove this issue as not being contributory to the purposes of the war it is not likely that the bonds could be floated in the East, notwithstanding the interest rate might be as high as 8 per cent.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. I do not think there is any doubt but that these bonds could be floated right in the city of Seward. That is the opinion we have received from representatives from the city of Seward, including members of the city council, who drew the bill and advocated its passage. We are anxious to have it enacted, not only for the reason the gentleman cites, but also for the reason that there is an election to be held, and that will take a considerable time, and it is desirable to get the matter under way as soon as possible before next fall for fear of a repetition of the disaster which took place in the town of Seward last fall.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to the bill. I approve of it, but I suggest that it ought to be passed speedily, because if it is not passed before the war-insurance corporation bill goes into effect you will have difficulty in floating the bonds unless they can be floated somewhere in the vicinity of Seward and without rehandling.

Mr. SULZER. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOUSTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

TOWN SITE ON FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4910) to authorize the establishment of a town site on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMLIN). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May we have the bill read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside and reserve for town-site purposes such tracts of lands within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho, as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause the same to be surveyed into suitable lots and blocks and to dedicate the streets and alleys thereof to public uses; and he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any one town site; and patents shall issue for the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other public purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes on condition that Indian children shall be permitted to attend the public schools of such towns under the same conditions as white children.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to cause the lots within such town sites as may be established hereunder to be appraised and disposed of under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and the net proceeds derived therefrom shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation and may be paid to them per capita or expended for their benefit as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests: Provided, however, That any lands disposed of hereunder shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire if this is the usual and ordinary way of opening up lands for settlement in that country?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is, when they are Indian lands.

Mr. WALSH. They authorize the establishment of a town site?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes. The general law applying to town sites on public lands does not apply to Indian reservations.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following committee amendments were read, considered, and agreed to:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "such tracts" and insert the words "a tract."

Strike out the word "lands" and insert the word "land."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "anyone" and insert the word "such."

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "towns" and insert the word "town."

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "sites" and insert the word "site."

Page 2, after the word "and," in line 11, insert the words "any and all expenses in connection with the survey, appraisement, and sale of such town site shall be reimbursed from the sales of town lots, and."

Page 2, line 16, after the word "and," strike out the words "may be paid to them per capita or expended for their benefit as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests" and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be subject to appropriation by Congress for their benefit."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the report that there is an amendment to the title. Has the title been amended?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is no amendment to the title.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the title reads as it does in the calendar there ought to be an amendment to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be in order to offer an amendment to the title.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It should be amended so as to read "site" instead of "sites."

Mr. STAFFORD. The title is entirely proper, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The report says that the title is to be amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the calendar seems to be wrong, and that the bill is correct as to the title.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the title has been corrected, but I ask unanimous consent that it be corrected so as to read as it is on the print of the bill that we have been considering, which refers to just one town site.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the title be amended to conform to the text of the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the title of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no necessity for that. The title of the bill as reported is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Perhaps the original bill was not correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho that the title be amended to conform to the text of the bill?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9960) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; we have a great number of bills on the calendar to-day for consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a very important bill. I think the gentleman ought to give us time to discuss it, at least.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PREFERENCE RIGHT OF ENTRY BY CAREY ACT ENTRYMEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5559) to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the objecting stage been passed? I understood there was no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announced that there was no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then before the bill is reported it will have to be considered either in the House or in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] will make an explanation of this bill, will he not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in cases where Carey Act projects upon the public lands are not consummated by the States holding same and the lands segregated are restored to the public domain the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, under such general rules and regulations as he may establish, to accord a preference right of entry under the homestead laws for not exceeding 60 days after such restoration to settlers and entrymen who have in good faith entered or purchased such lands from the States and who have established actual residence upon the lands or made substantial and permanent improvements thereupon.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior, when restoring to the public domain lands that have been segregated to a State under section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, and the acts and resolutions amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, commonly called the Carey Act, is authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may establish, to allow for not exceeding 90 days to any qualified person a preference right of entry under applicable land laws of any of such lands to which such person had initiated a claim under the State laws, and upon which such person had established actual bona fide residence, or had made substantial and permanent improvements.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As I understand the bill from the reading, it gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to give a preference for a period of 90 days to certain persons. I assume that those persons are within the State where the land is?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; they have to be living on the ground itself, or to have put substantial and permanent improvements on their claims. That is the only condition upon which they would get a preference right under this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some of us do not follow the land-law bills as closely as we might, but from a casual reading it occurred to me that the resident of a State being on the ground, and being more familiar with it than a man outside with equal rights, would always have the preference.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the situation: The Carey Act is a law under which the State enters into an agreement with the Federal Government to reclaim certain desert lands. After they are thoroughly reclaimed and the State has made proof of that fact to the Federal Government, the Federal Government transfers the lands to the State and then the State transfers them to the person who reclaims them. But there have been cases where the project of reclaiming desert lands has failed—where the project was of such magnitude and the difficulties so great that the State has been unable to make proof of the reclamation, and in the meantime the settlers have gone on to the land under agreement with the State for this work, made settlement, and put in improvements in some cases of very considerable value. They are there, homestead settlers, with more or less valuable improvements. Now, the project having failed, the Secretary of the Interior restores it to the public domain.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where everybody has a chance to come in.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; under the general law. The purpose of the bill is to give the right to the hardy pioneer who was there and had settled with a view of reclaiming, who had made the improvement—give him the right, if he is a qualified homestead settler, to remain on the land on which he is living and which he has improved, rather than to allow some one else, a stranger to the country and the project and the enterprise, to come in and take the land with the improvements that this man has made. No bill ever was presented to Congress more thoroughly justified than this.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The preference is to be given to the man already on the land and who has made improvements?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And who on the start would have 90 days over any newcomer?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If Congress does not enact some law of this kind, any stranger or newcomer who can get on a faster horse and beats the rightful owner to the land office or to a United States commissioner can beat him out of his land, his home, and his property. There is no protection of the settler in the present law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I realize that a bona fide settler has some equity there, but it seems to me that where such conditions do not prevail an outsider from any State should be placed in an equal position and have equal rights with the man on the ground.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true as to all the land not actually occupied under the Carey Act where the settler has made improvements. Here is a peculiar situation, and if the gentleman will follow me he will see how unfair the land laws or rulings in some cases are. If this was an ordinary piece of public domain, if it had not been under the Carey Act, any settler who was on the land at the time it became subject to homestead settlement would have 90 days period to file—and, as a matter of fact, he would have six months. But in view of the fact that this settler who may have been there five years and put thousands of dollars into it was a settler when the lands were withdrawn, the fact that he is on the ground with all rights and preferences would give him no preference right at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He would lose all he put in?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But if you start out fresh, every citizen would have a chance to take up that land.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that is true of all the land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The preference is for 90 days only and in favor only of the man on the ground who has made improvements. If it was disposed of, he would lose all that he has put into the claim.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is it exactly. This bill simply gives the bona fide settler, the rightful occupant of the land, a chance to file on his claim under the United States land laws and protect his property rights as against jumpers—people who have no right to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I think the bill ought to have a new title. I think it ought to be entitled "To induce States to fail in their obligations under the Carey Act, and to put back on the Federal Government the burden assumed under the Carey Act."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That induces me to ask another question. How far are public moneys expended in the transaction?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not a dollar in the world. This bill can not possibly cost the Government anything.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The Government gets 25 cents an acre for each acre entered. The money goes to the Federal Government and not from the Federal Government to the State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then there is nothing to justify the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Absolutely not. The gentleman from Kentucky assumes that everything undertaken out there ought to be carried through no matter how physically impossible it may be.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The fact that some of these Carey Act projects fail does not necessarily mean bad faith. It usually means that the project is bigger than was figured on, or that the promoters could not get the money to finance it, or that the necessary water is insufficient or impossible to obtain. There are many unavoidable reasons why they fail and leave the people high and dry. I am simply trying by this bill to relieve those unfortunates as much as I can. We want to give them a right at least to file on and hold that dry land if they want to and are willing to go ahead and comply with the United States public-land law and get title to the land under the homestead law or whatever law may be applicable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does it grow out of irrigation concessions or anything of that kind?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; this condition arises out of a failure, for various reasons, by the promoters of the enterprise to comply with the agreement they make with the State, and when the project is abandoned, or collapses, the Secretary of the Interior declares it forfeited and cancels all the rights of the State and the promoters and declares the land open for public entry under the public-land laws just as if it never had been in a Carey Act project and anybody can go and file on it. But I want to prevent anybody from filling on any settler's claim if he wants to hold onto it himself

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to one concrete case, which will perhaps illustrate a good many. Here is a tract of land which was withdrawn under the Carey Act and the State has undertaken its reclamation. The preliminary surveys, water tests, and so on seemed to indicate that, say, 40,000 acres could be reclaimed. The entrymen were permitted to go upon the land in the area withdrawn and make entry. Possibly that land could be fairly successfully farmed by dry farming, though the highest use of the land is not thus obtained. After the reclamation project has been fairly worked out it has developed that instead of having enough water to reclaim 40,000 acres of land there is enough merely to reclaim 30,000 acres of land, and here we have 10,000 acres that is somewhat improved, that is being farmed under the dry-farming method, a very hard method of farming, and to which the State is not able to give patent to the settlers. What are we going to do with these settlers? They can not be taken in under the project for there is not enough water. This is a bill that simply furnishes them relief so that they may acquire title under some land law and continue as dry farmers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If they do not qualify in 90 days, what happens?

Mr. FRENCH. Then that is their fault, and the responsibility, so far as the Government is concerned, is at an end. If they do not qualify, then they lose their rights to make prior entry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They may be ousted after 90 days?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. Of the 10,000 acres I suggested, part of it will have been entered upon because it is expected that land could be reclaimed. Part of it possibly has not been entered upon at all, because it was quite obvious to the public that it would not be reclaimed, though it is within the withdrawal. This bill takes care of both propositions. It takes care of those lands that have settlers upon them and those lands where there are no settlers, giving the right merely to the settlers, where there are settlers, to have 90 days within which they may act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want the gentleman to know, and I want all these gentlemen from the West to know, that these settlers have my sympathy. I believe they ought to be given every assistance possible. They have a hard enough time to get along, but they ought to be given no special advantage over newcomers who have a right to go in on the land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman had the time to read the petition, it would very fully explain it to him.

Mr. FRENCH. May I suggest this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that he be given one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that the settlers who are on these lands that this amendment will assist with a preference right are possibly from the gentleman's own State and from the other States. They went there at a time when they had an opportunity to enter. They are not necessarily settlers from the State within which the project is located. They have come from the four corners of the country and have settled on this land, and now, having expended money and labor and time in making improvements for necessary buildings, and so on, it seems they should have the right of a few days within which to make a prior entry when we make the lands available for entry under some other law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I may be in error, but it seems to me very simple—what is proposed here. As long as these men's rights are dependent on the carrying out of the terms of the Carey Act, just that long they will be pushing the various States and private companies to carry out the obligation they entered into when they got the land under the Carey law. The very moment they are given a preferential right to that land by the passage of this act, then the failure of the State to go along with the project does not necessarily concern them. I make the prophecy now that you will have any number of instances of pressure brought on the Federal Government for the undertaking of irrigation projects by the Federal Government where the States and private companies have fallen down as a result of the legislation to be enacted here to-day.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FRENCH. The settler first of all wants to have his land reclaimed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course he does. What I am concerned in is occasionally making people carry out their obligations and not always turning back to the Federal Government to relieve them when they make a bad bargain.

Mr. FRENCH. But here there is nothing turned back to the Federal Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but they are turning back to the Federal Government. You may be quite sure that the bill would not be so strongly advocated if it were turning something back to the Federal Government. They are turning back.

Mr. FRENCH. There is no responsibility turned back to the Federal Government. The lands that can be reclaimed have been reclaimed by the State, and the lands that can not be brought under the ditch are lands that will be affected by this law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the future will prove which of us is correct.

Mr. NORTON. In reference to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky that nothing would be turned back, take a case of this kind: Take a quarter of section of land that a man has filed upon. If he is permitted under the Carey Act to acquire title to it from the Government he would have to comply with the provisions of the Carey Act in having that land reclaimed, would he not?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. If this act were passed that land could be turned back to the Federal Government as not coming under the provisions of the Carey Act, and then the settler upon the land could immediately acquire complete title to the land under the homestead law. There would not be such rigid restriction as under the Carey Act. That is the point.

Mr. FRENCH. What I tried to make clear was this, that the advantage to the settler comes in having his land reclaimed. There is a vast difference between the value of land under dry-farm conditions and land that is under irrigation conditions, and the settler under the Carey Act has poor years until it is reclaimed.

Mr. NORTON. But is it not true the settler is very much interested in acquiring title in fee to the land?

Mr. FRENCH. He would very much prefer to have it with the water.

Mr. SHERLEY. He will get water after he gets this bill through; at least, he will come to Uncle Sam and try to get water. That is the meat of the coconut.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Do we understand that the gentleman from Kentucky is opposed to the reclamation of the arid land of the West?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman. No; I am not opposed to the reclamation of public lands; but I am opposed to inducing people to go out West under false pretenses of reclaiming land that ought not to be reclaimed, and then, when men assume burdens, have them come back here, as they have repeatedly, at the expense of the Public Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It seems to have been intimated——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not intimating.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That the settlers are not assuming any responsibility.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am stating a fact.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Absolutely not.

Mr. SHERLEY. In my judgment, the effect of this bill is to take away the incentive on the part of these settlers to force the State and private companies under the Carey Act to carry out the burdens they there assumed.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But there are some things which it is impossible to accomplish. If the water is not there, how can they undertake to reclaim the land? And when the land is not reclaimed it must go back to the Federal domain, under the Carey Act.

Mr. SHERLEY. Things are possible in two senses. They are economically possible and they are physically possible. There are a number of things that are not economically possible and therefore are not being done by State or private interests, and they are physically possible, and then they are brought on this floor to be done at the expense of the Public Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman from Kentucky know that on one irrigation project in Idaho we raised last year over $5,000,000 worth of produce, which is in excess of the entire cost of the reclamation of that project, and yet he stands up here and opposes every piece of legislation——

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman does not.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho (continuing). Proposed to reclaim the arid lands of the West.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not do anything of the kind, and nobody knows better than the gentleman, but I do not lose my head under the spell of a name. I do not under the guise of irrigation think you are going to create an El Dorado. I saw some of the irrigation projects that ought never to have been created.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is quite true——

Mr. SHERLEY. And I know there is $70,000,000 of debt to the Federal Government as a result of some of the irrigation projects. I insist the burden is upon the gentleman when he undertakes to get into the Treasury rather than upon us who resist the efforts to get into the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman want to abandon the whole irrigation plan?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not, but I want the gentleman to show cause in each instance, and it seems to be resented on this floor when anybody rises to inquire touching the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is certainly resented when it appears any Member is so prejudiced against the development of the arid lands and apparently disinclined to be informed as to the facts in regard to these matters.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let the facts determine whether it is a matter of prejudice or a matter of judgment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Just a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. I thought the gentleman had finished.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky—I know he is very busy and does not have time to study these reports. I have attached to this report a petition signed by 103 men who have been living on one of these projects for about 10 years, and the promoters have not been able to finance it. They have not been able to get sufficient water; they have not and probably can not complete it. It has not yet been forfeited or canceled, but the chances are that it will be if something is not done soon, and I am trying to protect those disappointed and unfortunate people on that project in their property rights.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will simply answer the gentleman by saying a petition of 103 men does not prove anything.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It very clearly shows their actual condition on that land. It is not their fault that nothing has been done for 10 years. They have already lost enough, and the community has lost enough, without permitting some strangers to confiscate these settlers' homes and property rights.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course; but the condition of a person is not a necessary reason for coming here. I have more people in one ward of my town than a good many sections in these Western States, and I could get a petition of thousands of men if they thought they could get special legislation by the signing of a petition.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My dear sir, if we had not in the past been able to secure a more liberal policy toward the development of the West than the gentleman indicates, we would not to-day have as many in the 16 Western States as he has in one precinct of his home city. Congress in former years persued a policy of trying to build up the West and develop a new country, and that is the way the West was developed, but there is much need and much room for a great deal more development.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am willing to build it up, but I do not want the price to become too high.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We are not asking Uncle Sam for one dollar. We merely ask fair treatment. When people put in many of the best years of their lives and the hardest possible work and untold privations, disappointments, and hardships trying to get a home, I have always done the best I could to help them and to prevent anyone from beating them out of their property rights, and that is exactly what this bill does. It is so plainly and eminently fair and just that I can not understand how anyone can oppose it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think this debate illustrates as well as anything we have heard here in a long time how some misunderstanding and lack of full information in regard to a matter may mislead men. What is the situation? Of all the fair pieces of legislation that have ever been brought before the Congress concerning the public lands, this is perhaps as fair as any ever presented. All that western territory that would be affected by a bill like this has for the last 50 years and more been subject to homestead settlement and entry. Any man at any time, a citizen of the United States or who had declared his intention to become one, could go upon any tract of this land, enter it, and secure title under the homestead law. But in certain locations hardy pioneers, in order to do a little better than simply settle the lands under the homestead law without their being reclaimed, made an effort to reclaim them under the Carey Act. In some cases that effort was not successful. Now, if the lands had never been embraced in the Carey Act segregation, these men would have a prior right to make a homestead entry, but the land having been withdrawn the man settled upon it did not acquire any preferential right. The stranger, the wayfarer, might step into his shoes and into his house and declare himself a homestead entryman and secure the land in preference to the man who had lived upon it and spent his money in the improvement of it. If there is anything fairer in the world than the proposition contained in this bill I do not know what it would be, unless there are some people somewhere who want to invite folks who have no interest in a piece of land, who have made no effort to reclaim it and establish a home on it, to secure an advantage over the man and his family who have endeavored to reclaim it and secure a home upon it. The gentleman from Kentucky talks about the danger of some burden being placed on the Federal Government. If there was any hope of these lands being reclaimed by the Federal Government or anyone else, what is proposed here is the very last thing that anyone would want to have done. If there was any hope of the Federal Government ever taking these lands into a Federal project, the settler would sit tight and wait until that time. It is because there is no hope, it is because the only way that the lands can be utilized is by dry farming, that this relief is sought. Out of some knowledge of the situation, I want to assure the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that his fears are without any sort of foundation that the Federal Government will be asked to come and reclaim these claims. If there was the slightest hope of that being done, the settlers would not be asking to have the lands restored to entry. They would stay where they are until the Federal Government came along, in the meantime enjoying the land as best they might.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

I would not be misunderstood by any one of my friends from the Western States with regard to this proposition, but it seems to me they are just a little sensitive in the matter of criticism. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has opened up a field for discussion here which is intensely interesting, and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] has responded to him by calling attention to the report, which alludes to a petition signed by 100 settlers—farmers, stockmen, and business men—immediately adjacent to a Carey Act segregation in western Colorado, the burden of which seems to be that the Great Northern Irrigation & Power Co. started a development on what is referred to as extremely "fertile acres," thousands of them, and that while these settlers have gone in in good faith and have remained there for 10 years nothing has been done——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. By the company.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. By the company to bring these lands up to a state where they might be profitably cultivated, leaving these settlers high and dry, as it were.

Mr. GORDON. Especially dry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; dry. I said a little while ago, and I was criticized for it by one of my friends from the East—and I am raising no sectional lines here—that these men had my sympathy. I repeat that if there is any prospector on earth who has my sympathy it is a man who will leave the fertile lands of the East and go out West and live on these desert lands, waiting for somebody to keep his promises to make them fertile. He has my sympathy, and is entitled to it; and he is entitled to the sympathy of every eastern man who is on good soil. But the wonder to me is why men will be induced to leave fertile soil, land that is arable, land that is capable of cultivation, land that is already irrigated by nature, to make this bold undertaking——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is an old saying that "far-off oxen have long horns."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is an axiom that is more or less true; but it does not remove the element of sympathy we ought to have for these unfortunate and brave men who go out into these arid and semiarid regions, stake off claims, and live there indefinitely, hoping somebody will bring them water. I do not wonder that my friend from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] makes the fight he does on this floor. If I represented these people, I would fight as hard as he does and harder if I had the ability.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does not the gentleman admit, at least to himself, that he wishes he had gone out West 20 years ago and grown up with the country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. I might have been a Senator of the United States by this time, as the gentleman from Idaho may be.

Now, I am not going to oppose this bill. I shall support it because I desire to see some relief brought to these people, who are likely to lose out after all their hardship. I do not understand that this is an unfair advantage to anybody, but that a preference is being given here to these unfortunate but brave men who have gone out of the East——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (continuing). Who have gone out there and taken their chances in territory like that. But the wonder to me is that the gentlemen who represent these people do not give us more information as to why these irrigation companies or these concerns like the Great Northern Irrigation & Power Co., that induce the people to go on these lands, do not make good. That, to me, is a serious question. Somebody induces these people to go there. Representatives, like my friend from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], stand up on the floor here valiantly and consistently advocating these matters, and they ought to do it; but it seems to me they do not go to the full length. They ought to help us in some way or another to reach the people who induce these bona fide settlers to go upon the lands only to be caught in such a trap, as it sometimes seems.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not wish to have the impression conveyed that the sole reason which compels him to support this measure is his sense of sympathy for these people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not necessarily.

Mr. WALSH. That is the only reason the gentleman has given.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. I think there is an element of justice in it. I say that frankly. I think there is an equity here. Here are men who have been struggling for 10 years upon this desert territory, if the statements made in this petition are true——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is true. I have been over the ground myself——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. People who have been waiting for this reclamation company to make good.

Mr. GORDON. And it is waiting for Congress to make good.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For Congress or the State to make good?

Mr. GORDON. No; Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Meanwhile these tenants have made improvements. They have expended their labor and their money, and that is where my sympathy comes in.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a little amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let us adopt the committee amendment first.

Mr. FRENCH. This is on the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment to the committee amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "qualified person" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "such Carey Act entrymen."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, as the committee will see, that is simply language that will clarify the language of the bill. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; I will be glad to yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the gentleman by the amendment enlarges the class who may make entry, as I understand it, under this act. It restricts them to the Carey Act entrymen.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; no one else would have any preference rights there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If he were not a qualified Carey Act entryman, he would not be on the project.

Mr. STAFFORD. But under existing law any person can enter these Carey Act lands, whereas it is the purpose of this bill to limit this privilege to take this land only to those who are qualified.

Mr. FRENCH. Qualified how?

Mr. STAFFORD. Under national law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If we did not adopt this amendment, there are a great many people, especially in the State of Idaho, who could not get the benefit of it. Some one would come along and take their rights away from them. That is the reason for the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is more liberal in a way.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The bill, as I introduced it and as it is before us now, gives a preference right of entry "to any qualified person." It does not say "any qualified entryman." A person who has used his homestead right is a qualified entryman under the Carey Act. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] would protect some people that might possibly not be included in the bill as it is now. That is, it might be so construed, so I think it is a proper amendment

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Idaho yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. WALSH. This proposed amendment, of course, is broader than the bill as introduced. It is much broader than the bill as amended by the committee, and would, I think, include persons who were not intended to be relieved under the provisions of the act, either as introduced or as amended.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield to me for a minute, I will say that this bill was prepared, at my request, by the law officials of the Interior Department; that is, the present phraseology of the bill is really departmental. But several days ago the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] called my attention to the fact that they had one or more projects in his State which under this present language might not be relieved; that is, that some of the settlers on those projects have used their homestead rights or desert-land rights. There are very worthy people, with improvements and homes, living on the land, and he said that under the language of my bill he feared those people might not be protected, and asked if I would object to this amendment. I think the bill is probably broad enough, but if there is any question about it I am perfectly willing to accept this amendment and make the bill clearly protect the homes and property rights of everyone. I do not see how any harm could come from it. That would make the bill read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior, when restoring to the public domain lands that have been segregated to a State under section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, and the acts and resolutions amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, commonly called the Carey Act, is authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may establish, to allow for not exceeding 90 days, to any such Carey Act entryman, a preference right of entry under applicable public-land laws of any of such lands to which such person had initiated a claim under the State laws and upon which such person had established actual bona fide residence or had made substantial and permanent improvements.

Mr. WALSH. The only harm in it is that it makes it wider open.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no. It makes the bill more clearly express what I intended.

Mr. WALSH. It permits these people to be relieved who are not qualified persons under the Carey Act.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They must be qualified persons under the Carey Act or they could not be there. In addition they must be actual residents on the land or people who have actually put valuable and permanent improvements on the land. Entire strangers to the project could not come in and get a preference right to file on anybody else's property. A Carey Act entrymen who has in good faith established a residence upon his claim or put valuable and permanent improvements on it is entitled to be protected in his rights, even if he had formerly used his homestead right.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that the amendment proposed is much broader than the original law or than the bill as filed. The amendment is proposed for the sake of relieving a few people. It is very unwise, in my judgment, to put in this language.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Does not the gentleman think that if he would look at line 12 he would find that it would be impossible to grant relief to anybody who had not initiated claims?

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. JUUL. If that is the case, then the limitation upon this bill is that a man, in order to secure any benefit from this law, must at some time or another have initiated a claim. If only such people can profit by it, I think it is mighty safe legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho.

The committee amendment as modified was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INTEREST PAYMENTS TO THE CHEROKEE NATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4699) providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I shall object, unless the bill goes to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. HASTINGS. Certainly. I ask that it go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF THE CHEROKEE NATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 357) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the action taken by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] on the prior bill, to which no serious objection was registered when this calendar was called on the last occasion, except to that provision to which the Secretary of the Interior objected, I expected that the gentleman from Oklahoma would ask unanimous consent to have this bill go over without prejudice. If he does not do so, I shall have to object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from Wisconsin, an amendment has been suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, to be added to this bill, providing in effect that such fee shall be paid as the Court of Claims may allow, and if unanimous consent were given, I had intended to offer that amendment to this bill. I thought that would obviate any objection that there might be to its consideration. If the gentleman will permit me, this is recommended by the Interior Department, and is to refer to the Court of Claims this matter for adjudication. I do not think there would be any objection to that. The only objection at all that was found to the bill, or at least the principal objection—I believe there were one or two other minor amendments—was that the amount of the fee should be fixed by the Court of Claims. I was going to offer that amendment, and I thought that then there would be no other objection to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, to take its place at the foot of the calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to take its place at the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2489) to create two additional associate justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since the gentleman from North Carolina evinces his interest in this bill, I will say that it appears that this is a matter of such importance that it ought to come up in the regular way and not be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. WEBB. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will withhold the objection, certainly.

Mr. WEBB. I realize that this is a matter of importance from a parliamentary standpoint; but, on the other hand, it is of much greater importance to the litigants and public of this city that this bill should be passed at once. I want to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that a year ago the necessity for additional judges in the Supreme Court of this District was so pressing that the Judiciary Committee, by unanimous vote, recommended the passage of this bill, and it passed this House by unanimous consent and went to the Senate and passed that body in practically the same way; but an additional judge was tacked onto the bill, and the House Judiciary Committee could not agree to that; so the bill died in conference. During this session the bill has passed the Senate and has been reported back to the House by unanimous vote of the Judiciary Committee.

I want to say to my friend that in my service here in the House there has not been anywhere a more congested and distressing condition of affairs in the way of an overcrowded docket of a court than exists in the Supreme Court of this District. Last year this supreme court terminated 7,884 cases; in other words, 1,313 cases per judge, according to the Attorney General's report. The average termination of cases by Federal judges in United States courts is about 180 or 190 cases each per year. These judges in the District of Columbia terminated 1,313 cases each. For the sake of the litigants and the hard-worked judges of this District I appeal to my friend from Pennsylvania not to object to this bill.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] if he will not bestow upon the people of the District of Columbia, who, according to the representations of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, are being denied justice and the opportunity to present their cases, the same sympathy with which his heart is filled to overflowing toward the people of the great western country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] pleads like a lawyer; but I question whether I would want to withdraw my objection at this time, owing to certain information that I understand is available with respect to the necessity for these two new judges. It is not usual to create judges by unanimous consent, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that by unanimous consent we have created six or eight new judges in this House in the last 12 years, and I remember one for New Jersey, one for California, and one for Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There have been cases, one of which in particular has been called to my attention recently, where I am frank to say the House would not be justified in creating a new office. I do not want at this time to dispute the gentleman's statement of facts with regard to the necessity for these two new judges.

Mr. WEBB. I am getting my facts from the report of the Attorney General.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This court has been getting along very well with the judges that we have upon the bench, and it is rather unusual to ask for two judges. If this condition has been so alarming, we might have had a request for one judge long ago.

Mr. WEBB. I want to suggest to my friend that if he should bring a suit on the civil side of the docket in this court, and he should find that he could not hope to have a hearing of it within two years, he would say that was a distressing condition. Litigants are not only being denied justice but they are being denied the opportunity to get into court. These judges devote all their time that they can to their work, and do more work than any Federal judge of my acquaintance or knowledge.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the last Congress, in the Senate, a bill was introduced to try to correct this condition by conferring greater jurisdiction upon the municipal court and thereby to relieve the Supreme Court of the District of the trial of hundreds of cases of very minor consequence, involving amounts of $50 and upward. A similar bill was introduced by the chairman of the committee in this House, but no such action has been taken this year. It is the opinion of certain attorneys in the District that the purpose now is to get the two additional judges and then come before Congress and try to have the jurisdiction rearranged so as to relieve this court, which should not be engaged in trials de novo or of appeal, of little, petty civil cases, whereby this court would no longer have cases that would require two additional judges. Is the gentleman acquainted with the trend of present-day legislation that has relieved circuit courts in Chicago and the circuit courts in my own home city of a great amount of minor litigation by vesting jurisdiction in minor civil cases in the municipal court and making the circuit courts only appellate courts on obvious errors in the record?

Mr. WEBB. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that he would not deny litigants or defendants the right to appeal from the police court where he is sentenced to one year in the penitentiary?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not directing my remarks to the criminal side of the lower courts. I am directing the gentleman's attention to relieving the court of common pleas and the circuit court by enlarging the jurisdiction of the lower court and making the lower court's jurisdiction extend higher than that of the justice of the peace, thereby relieving the upper courts from the trial of these petty cases.

Mr. WEBB. The municipal courts here now have jurisdiction up to $500, and that is bigger than it is in the gentleman's State and in many States.

Mr. STAFFORD. The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee shows he is not acquainted with the recent legislation. In my home city we found it very efficacious in the expedition of the trial of civil cases by transferring to the civil court, which superseded the court of the justice of the peace, jurisdiction to the amount of $2,000 in tort cases as well as contracts, and now the attorneys bring all their cases up to that amount, including personal-injury cases, into the civil court, and get a trial within 30 days; and the cases on appeal to the circuit court are reversed only for error that obviously works an injustice.

Mr. WEBB. I will say that even if you should deny the right of appeal in every criminal case and in every civil suit begun in the police court and the municipal court in this city, this supreme court would be a harder-worked court than any court in the United States, because the appeal cases only amount to about one-sixth of the cases tried by it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not the appeal cases; but am I not right in saying that at present litigants may bring cases de novo before the District Supreme Court involving $50?

Mr. WEBB. They can do it, but they never do do it. They bring them in the municipal court, where they can get immediate trial. If they bring them in the supreme court they could not get a trial in a civil suit in less than two years. I submit to the House in behalf of public justice that two new judges should be created for this District.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Is this the court over which our late associate, Judge Covington, presides?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. He is chief justice of that court?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it not a fact that the President thinks the court has so little to do that he has assigned Judge Covington to other duties to which he is giving a part of his time?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; the chief justice is in his court practically every day. The only difference is he does not take up a case that will require a week to try it. You will find him there this morning or this afternoon, I have no doubt.

Mr. GILLETT. It takes a great deal of his time, does it not?

Mr. WEBB. No; not a great deal of time. He spends an evening or an afternoon on this labor proposition, but he does not sacrifice his court, because he is on the bench almost constantly.

Mr. GILLETT. He is now on his way out West, is he not?

Mr. WEBB. No; I do not think so. He is doing great work in the interest of our common and beloved country, and should not be criticized for answering the call of the President in these grave times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

REFINED PRODUCTS OF PETROLEUM AS STORES ON VESSELS CARRYING PASSENGERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1546) to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following provision: "Provided, however, That kerosene and lubricating oils made from refined products of petroleum which will stand a fire test of not less than 300° F. may be used as stores on board steamers carrying passengers, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill passed the last Congress and failed to pass the Senate, and in this Congress it passed the Senate and is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF CERTAIN SECOND-CLASS POST OFFICES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7230) to amend the postal laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

SURVEY OF HOMESTEADS IN ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8563) to amend the homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alaska asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend the United States homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That every person who is qualified under existing laws to make homestead entry of the public lands of the United States who has settled upon or who shall hereafter settle upon any of the public lands of the United States situated in the District of Alaska, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved March 3, 1903, chapter 1002, United States Statutes at Large, page 1028, be entitled to enter 160 acres or a less quantity of unappropriated public land in said District of Alaska, and no more, and a former homestead entry in any other State or Territory shall not be a bar to a homestead entry in Alaska: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or curtail the area of any homestead claim heretofore lawfully initiated.

"SEC. 2. That if the system of public surveys has not been extended over the land included in a homestead entry, the entryman may, after due compliance with the terms of the homestead law in the matter of residence, cultivation, and improvement, submit to the register and receiver a showing as to such compliance, duly corroborated by two witnesses, and if such evidence satisfactorily shows that the homesteader is in a position to submit acceptable final proof the surveyor general of the Territory will be so advised and will, not later than the next succeeding surveying season, issue proper instructions for the survey of the land so entered, without expense to the entryman, who may thereafter submit final proof as in similar entries of surveyed lands. So far as practicable, such survey shall follow the general system of public-land surveys, and the entryman shall conform his boundaries thereto: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the homesteader from securing earlier action on his entry by a special survey at his own expense, if he so elects.

"SEC. 3. That there shall be excepted from homestead settlement and entry under this act the lands in Annette and Pribilof Islands, the islands leased or occupied for the propagation of foxes, and such other lands as have been, or may be, reserved or withdrawn from settlement or entry."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alaska what the idea is of exempting these two islands or group of islands in the last proviso of the bill?

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman that the Pribilof Islands are the seal islands in Bering Sea, and they are under the direct control of the Federal Government under international agreement to protect the seal herds. The Annette Island is an island reserved a number of years ago by the Government for the benefit of the Metlakatla Indians. That is covered in the law now, and this section is as the law reads now. It is simply copied in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Who is it that is raising foxes—the settlers, or is it done under the supervision of the Federal Government?

Mr. SULZER. In addition to those islands I have just described, I will say to the gentleman there have been certain other small islands leased by the Department of Commerce to certain individuals for the propagation of foxes in Alaska.

Mr. WALSH. Is that carried on under the auspices of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; the Department of Commerce has jurisdiction to make leases of islands for fox farming; the bill under consideration does not change the law in regard to those matters, but provides for a free survey of homestead entries in certain areas of Alaska not covered by the public-land surveys or not within the various reserves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULZER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COCONINO AND TUSAYAN NATIONAL FORESTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 273) to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman having this measure in charge if it would not be possible under the terms of the bill extending the time to 1950, which is, I understand, 24 years beyond the limit now fixed by law, for timber or trees to be planted at this time and reforestation to be begun, so that in the year 1948 or 1949 all that timber would have reached a growth sufficiently large to be cut?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I was in a national forest in northern Arizona two years ago and made inquiry of the forest supervisor as to the average age of the trees that were cut for lumber. A variety known as the Chihuahua pine grows there, and the supervisor stated that the average age, as shown by the rings in the trees, was 150 years, at which time the trees are mature and ready to cut. With this very slow rate of growth nothing that the gentleman suggests could happen.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I do not mean to say that they could raise trees there between now and 1950 of the same size as those now being cut, but could they not grow trees of sufficient size between the present time and 1948 which would at that time be large enough to cut for timber?

Mr. HAYDEN. Trees about 8 inches in diameter were pointed out to me as 30 years old. Owing to the comparatively slight rainfall, the growth is exceedingly slow. I desire to state for the information of the gentleman that if I obtain consent to have this bill considered, I shall propose to substitute an identical bill, which has passed the Senate, in lieu of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Does that carry it up to 1950?

Mr. HAYDEN. Senate bill 389 is identical with this bill. There is not the difference of a comma between the two measures.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the gentleman states that he saw trees there that were 8 inches in diameter that were 100 years old——

Mr. HAYDEN. Thirty years old.

Mr. WALSH. Would it be possible to plant some other species of trees there which might grow more rapidly? Evidently there is sufficient moisture for a forest to have grown up during the past 100 or 150 years, and I do not know whether this is located in a section where the tree growth might be encouraged by the introduction of irrigation or some other plan.

Mr. HAYDEN. All this timber grows at an altitude of from 5,500 feet to 7,500 feet, and irrigation is both impractical and unnecessary. The Forest Service has a tree-planting experiment station near Flagstaff, Ariz., but up to this time they have had but little success in growing trees there. It was explained to me by the officer in charge of the station that if the rainfall does not come at the right time the seeds do not germinate, or, if it happens to be a very cold winter, the freezing will kill the young trees. It is only once in about 15 years that there is any considerable reproduction of timber. There has to be a combination of rainfall and seed crop and a mild winter so that the trees do not freeze in order to have any reproduction at all. For these reasons planting trees on the national forests in northern Arizona has not been demonstrated to be a commercial success.

Mr. WALSH. Then the result of this legislation will be to just devastate this reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, no. The Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. now control two tracts of land, aggregating 75,000 acres, on which there are about 180,000,000 feet of lumber. On 45,000 acres, containing about 115,000,000 feet of lumber, they have until 1926 in which to complete the cut. That company now has absolute control of that area and can strip it bare of merchantable timber if they so desire.

On 30,000 acres, containing about 65,000,000 feet of timber, there is no time limit. They can cut that at any time they please. Now, the company agrees that, in consideration of this extension of time on the 45,000 acres, the unlimited time they have in which to cut the timber on the 30,000 acres shall likewise be limited to 1950. They also agree that hereafter all logging operations shall be conducted under the regulations of the Forest Service, which provide that a number of seed trees shall be left on each acre, and that the tree tops shall be piled and burned to avoid the danger of forest fires.

With respect to the history of this bill I would like to state to the gentleman some facts which I think perhaps will aid in its consideration. This measure was sent to me by the officials of the United States Forest Service in Washington, and I was asked to introduce it, because the enactment of such a law would benefit the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests. About 50 years ago the Government donated to the Atlantic-Pacific Railroad the alternate sections on each side of the track for 40 miles. About 20 years ago the Government, by means of certain exchanges, which no one now approves, again acquired title to these alternate sections. But in the meantime the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co., a Michigan corporation, had bought timber on two large tracts of land. They did not own and never have owned an acre of the land. They purchased only the timber-cutting rights.

In logging its timber on the alternate sections the company also found it advisable to purchase the timber on the other parts of the checkerboard, which belonged to the United States. But the capacity of the lumber mill in Williams is such that, unless this bill is passed, they must confine all of their operations to the tract of 45,000 acres, if they are compelled to cut the timber on it by 1926. This means that the Government timber on the alternate sections will not be cut.

Now, no other lumber company could afford to carry on logging operations for half of the timber in that scope of country. Therefore it is to the interest of the Forest Service that this legislation be passed so the cutting will proceed on all of the land.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's statement is based upon the theory that it is to the interest of the Forest Service to destroy all the trees, whether on the odd-numbered or even-numbered sections, above 12 inches in diameter?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; it is in the interest of the Forest Service to have all the matured timber cut on the Government land as well as on the lands now controlled by the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. If that is done, and suitable seed trees are left on each acre, the forests are amply protected and will reproduce themselves in due course of time.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman if this company which is cutting the timber upon the odd-numbered sections, which it has purchased, is leaving trees uncut 11 inches in diameter 18 inches above the ground or making a clean sweep of those trees?

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand that the company is faithfully carrying out the contract under which it is doing business. I have heard no complaint from the Forest Service in that regard. They have left all undersize trees on the land.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not this probably true: So far as their own timber is concerned they are under no obligations to leave those trees?

Mr. HAYDEN. They are under contract to cut no tree under 11 inches in diameter 18 inches above the ground.

Mr. MONDELL. They may be doing that; but they are under no obligation to leave seed trees or to comply with the regulations of the Forest Service with regard to the protection from fire.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true; but they now propose to put themselves under the national forest regulations.

Mr. WALSH. So if they desire, without this legislation they could entirely clear the odd-numbered sections, but if this legislation is passed they would have to comply with the same regulations that are imposed upon even-numbered sections in cutting timber on the odd-numbered sections?

Mr. HAYDEN. Exactly so.

Mr. WALSH. And this limit, which is now fixed at 1950, in the gentleman's opinion would not be detrimental to the preservation and security of the forests in that section of the country?

Mr. HAYDEN. Absolutely not. The gentleman understands that the limit to which he refers applies only to about one-half of the land.

Mr. WALSH. I understand.

Mr. HAYDEN. But they accept the limit of 1950 on another tract of land, which they now have an unlimited time to cut.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, where in the bill is there any such provision that terminates the right of this lumber company to cut its timber on that land which has no limit of time for cutting?

Mr. HAYDEN. This is the way in which this matter came up: An agreement between this company and the Secretary of Agriculture is already prepared and ready for signature, and the bill provides:

> That said company executes and enters into an agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture to comply with such additional requirements as may be mutually agreed upon to promote forest-fire protection, reforestation, and forestry administration.

Now, in the prepared agreement the Secretary of Agriculture has provided that the timber-cutting rights on both tracts of land shall expire in 1950.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is nothing in the law which terminates the right of this lumber company—that their right on their land, on which they have an unlimited right to cut, shall terminate in 1950?

Mr. HAYDEN. This act is absolutely inoperative unless they make such an agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in this law saying the Secretary should embody that provision in the agreement, but while it is incorporated in the letter of the Secretary, that is his proposition; nevertheless if this law were passed and the lumber company would decline to adhere to the tentative agreement the Secretary would be still privileged to go ahead and give the privilege to continue until 1950 the cutting on this land.

Mr. HAYDEN. Which he has absolutely no intention of doing.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that. Now, would the gentleman have any objection to incorporating an amendment to carry out that idea?

Mr. HAYDEN. I would not have any objection to it; but I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not necessary if the Secretary insists that the tentative agreement be executed, but as legislators we should embody it in the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no objection to that. But, as I say, the Secretary assures us, and so states in his report, that nothing will be done to this unless such an agreement is reached.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reason for Congress allowing this bill to go through granting this long time of 24 years to this company to cut timber on the major portion of this land that it has not a right to cut is that it will surrender its privileges of cutting timber there perpetually in December, 1950. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to an amendment that I suggest, in the following language? I do not know whether it will embody it or not. I am reading now on page 2, after the word "administration," in line 5. After the word "administration" insert:

And, further, that all its rights to cut and remove timber from any lands within said national forest are to terminate on the 31st day of December, 1950.

Mr. HAYDEN. I would be glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire further—and I am making the inquiry at the suggestion of some gentlemen on this side—what was the need of extending this privilege 24 years? Why could not a shorter time than that still protect the interests of the Government and also give advantage to the lumber company?

Mr. HAYDEN. All that I know is that this agreement was made between the lumber company and the Forest officials after considerable negotiation. Having reached an agreement, the Forest Service sent me this bill and asked me to introduce it. I will say to the gentleman that before I took any action on it in committee I referred it to the governor of Arizona, the State land commission, the board of supervisors of Coconino County, and a number of others. They all reported to me that this measure was mutually advantageous to the Forest Service, the State of Arizona, Coconino County, and to the lumber company.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that this is a mountainous country.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is only practicable to have one spur line of railroad to run it into the forest and take the timber down to the mill?

Mr. HAYDEN. And it is hard to construct on account of the rocky condition of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 389 for the House bill, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Now, the gentleman from Arizona asks that Senate bill 389 be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 389) to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.

Be it enacted, etc., That the rights of the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co., and its successors in interest, to cut and remove the timber from such of the lands within the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests as were reconveyed to the United States, subject to outstanding timber-right contracts held by said company, under the rules, regulations, and conditions imposed by the Secretary of the Interior at the time of said reconveyance, are hereby extended to and until the 31st day of December, A. D. 1950: Provided, That said company executes and enters into an agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture to comply with such additional requirements as may be mutually agreed upon to promote forest-fire protection, reforestation, and forestry administration; but this act shall not be construed to confer upon said company any other rights in addition to those held by the company at the time of said reconveyance, and in the absence of the execution of such an agreement this act shall neither extend nor restrict the present rights of said company.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 5, after the word "administration," insert: And, further, that all its rights to cut and remove timber from any lands within said national forest are to terminate on the 31st day of December, 1950.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill H. R. 273, of similar tenor, laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COLUMBIA RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2617) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I do not incline to object, but I wish to obtain some information as to what are the rights of the Federal Government in control of fisheries in boundary streams.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, the States have complete jurisdiction over the Columbia River except in respect to commerce and navigation, and those are both exempted from the operation of the bill. There is no question of Federal jurisdiction involved here, in so far as fisheries are concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose the title to the adjoining land on the Columbia River terminates at the high-water mark of that stream?

Mr. HADLEY. The high-water mark. I should say——

Mr. STAFFORD. And that the title, up to the median line, is in the State in which the property is located?

Mr. HADLEY. A more pertinent question, if the gentleman will permit, is as to what is the real boundary of the States. The boundary of the States is really the middle of the channel and the jurisdiction of the States is concurrent over the stream, but in the exercise of their powers under this general and concurrent jurisdiction, in the absence of uniform laws, there have frequently been very serious controversies which have arisen and which could not be avoided, because in the nature of things, where the boundary is in the middle of the stream, in the course of time, with the changed conditions, which are effective on either side, the question of determining where the middle of the stream is is one that is difficult for even scientific or accurate determination, and for practical purposes a very annoying situation is presented. With a view to reaching the difficulties that are involved, the States of Oregon and Washington entered into a compact, through their respective legislatures, in 1915, as it appears in this bill, and they adopted uniform laws with respect to fisheries on the Columbia River; that is, the agreement was made subject to ratification by Congress, because under the Constitution no such agreement can be made between the States, and, in fact, no agreement can be made between States without the consent of Congress.

A compact was entered into, and subsequently a bill identical with this passed the House in the Sixty-fourth Congress, but it failed to be reached in the other body, and in the sessions of 1917 following both States again entered into a further agreement with regard to the same general subject matter, desiring to amend their fishing laws concurrently in certain particulars. That was done, and in the report of the joint conference committee to each legislature, which was adopted by both legislatures, they again referred to this compact and agreement and expressed the desire on behalf of each State that this compact previously referred to in the bill which was passed in this House be ratified by Congress. That was done in the sessions of 1917, so that the compact continues, and the legislation has been consistent with that compact.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have recognized the need of such action to confirm the action of the respective legislatures of the States, and therefore I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2617) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress of the United States of America hereby consents to and ratifies the compact and agreement entered into between the States of Oregon and Washington relative to regulating, protecting, and preserving fish in the boundary waters of the Columbia River and other waters, which compact and agreement is contained in section 20 of chapter 188 of the general laws of Oregon for 1915, and section 116, chapter 31, of the session laws of Washington for 1915, and is as follows:

"All laws and regulations now existing, or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States, which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended in whole or in part, only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States."

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the right of the United States to regulate commerce, or the jurisdiction of the United States over navigable waters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HADLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ASSISTANT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 104) authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I will withhold it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withholds his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is strongly urged and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in order to relieve him of some of the detailed work in the administration of his office.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who reported the resolution, is at present engaged in a very important hearing on the water-power bill. Otherwise he would be here to present this need. But, if the gentleman will permit, this assistant to the Secretary, as the Secretary points out in his letter contained in the report, is a high-grade man in the nature of a confidential secretary.

The gentleman realizes that in the administration of large business affairs, matters of detail, of the signing of papers, the signing of letters, is left by the heads of the institutions to the assistant to the president, assistants to the various other executive officers. The gentleman certainly is not opposed to deputing to the assistant to the Secretary such administrative work as is sought to be accomplished by this bill.

I thought that with this presentation the gentleman would see the need of not taking up the time of the Secretary himself in merely signing unimportant papers, but would leave it to his discretion to determine what papers might be signed by his assistant.

Mr. MONDELL. The Assistant Secretary is a good lawyer. He is a man well qualified to pass on any question which might come before the Secretary. But in the law there are considerable classes of papers which can not be signed by the Secretary's assistant.

Mr. WALSH. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This is not to authorize Mr. Vogelsang to sign these papers. This is to authorize the assistant to the Secretary to do it.

Mr. ELSTON. It is the same thing.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; it is not the same thing at all. The gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] would convey the impression that the Assistant Secretary and the assistant to the Secretary are the same officials, whereas if he would look into the matter a little further he would see that they are not the same persons at all, and that this is not designed to confer any authority upon Mr. Vogelsang to sign papers, but to confer it upon Mr. Bradley or upon Mr. Meyer or on Mr. Brown.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. When I suggested in the colloquy here, without obtaining recognition of the Chair, that it was the same thing I was referring to a principle. It is perfectly obvious that the Secretary of the Interior himself can not be here all the time. Mr. Vogelsang has tremendous responsibilities. Now, there are certain departments of the work that are in the nature of pro forma duties, wherein, however, the official signature of the Secretary is necessary. This resolution was considered by the committee of which I am a member. It was unanimously passed out by Republicans and Democrats, and it was considered a very necessary additional facility to the office of the Secretary of the Interior to enable them to do their business expeditiously.

We all know how these departments are run. There is a great deal of routine work, and it is desirable in the interest of efficient work in the departments. I hope the gentleman will not object. It is not a matter of adding to the autocratic power or enlarging the grasp of an ever-grasping Secretary, as he might impute, but it is merely to enable that Secretary the better to perform his functions.

It appeared to the committee, without much argument upon it, that it was a perfectly reasonable and sensible thing to do. I can not see how this resolution could be objected to at all. It is a very inconsequential matter. It amounts to very little. I appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts to withhold his objection and let this little resolution pass.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have withheld my objection for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from California to make the statement which he has made.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to a suggestion from me also?

Mr. WALSH. I will be delighted to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asked me to assist in passing this bill if there was any opposition to it. I think you know, and everybody knows, that the Secretary of the Interior is one of the busiest men in Washington, and has been for many months. In fact, all of us western Members, especially who have business with the Secretary of the Interior, or with the Interior Department, know that the assistant to the Secretary is a thoroughly qualified and exceptionally competent man to examine matters and to sign the Secretary's name to such matters as the Secretary may designate. The assistant secretaries have special duties that fully occupy their time. They are all very busy. That is a tremendously important department, and when the Secretary of the Interior has made this earnest request, and made it so urgently to the Senate and House both, to relieve him of this physical drudgery of personally signing his name many hundreds of times, it seems to me that is a reasonable request that Congress should grant. It is practically a personal matter that he has asked of us, and I am perfectly confident that it will not be abused or the Secretary's confidence violated. It seems to me we ought to grant this request in the interest of facilitating business. Certainly nobody will say that Secretary Lane would ask this authority if he thought there was any possibility whatever of its ever being abused. The Senate has promptly passed this bill without any question, and I certainly feel that the House ought to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the fact that the present Secretary of the Interior is a most capable and excellent official—one of the ablest of the President's Cabinet, in my opinion—and that he had what seemed to him good reason for favoring this legislation. But it is only going to open up the opportunity in the future, when possibly we may not have as competent and capable a Secretary of the Interior as we have now, for confusion and mistake. The present Secretary of the Interior complains that he has only two assistant secretaries. Yet the Secretary of Commerce has but one, the Secretary of Labor has but one, and the Secretary of the Navy has but one assistant secretary. This does not enlarge the authority of the two assistant secretaries in any way whatever. In addition to these two assistant secretaries, the Secretary of the Interior has an assistant to the Secretary, an assistant to the Secretary in charge of the affairs of the Alaska Railroad, a special assistant to the Secretary, a chief clerk, a private secretary to the Secretary, and a confidential clerk, in addition to the various other bureau chiefs, assistants, clerks, and solicitors, and the assistants to the heads of the various bureaus and divisions of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is the gentleman aware that the force in the Interior Department has increased so that to-day in the various bureaus of that department there are more than 25,000 employees?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and I am also aware that the Navy Department has increased very much more than that, yet we have not been asked to provide another Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The work of the Navy Department is far greater and is of a great deal more importance during the present crisis than the work of the Interior Department.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But the Secretary of the Navy does not have to sign one one-hundredth part of the documents that the Secretary of the Interior has to sign.

Mr. WALSH. I do not agree with the gentleman at all, because the Secretary of the Navy and his assistants very often sign correspondence that comes to them from the chiefs of other bureaus and divisions, and frequently when you expect to get a reply from the chief of a bureau or division the reply is returned to you signed by the Secretary of the Navy or the Assistant Secretary. Secretary Lane says:

> This, however, does not relieve myself or the Assistant Secretaries from the necessity of signing the documents and papers after they have passed through his hands—

Referring to the assistant to the Secretary. Therefore this is not going to relieve them from the task of signing these documents, apparently, but it simply permits somebody else to sign them before the Secretary does.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELSTON. Does not that leave the gentleman an opening, then, to permit this bill to pass without his objection under these peculiar circumstances? I realize the possibilities in the way of complications and possible abuse that the gentleman has conjured up here; but in view of the last comment in the Secretary's communication, I do not think these things will eventuate in this case, and I really hope the gentleman will withhold his objection. I do not believe any great harm will result.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have grave doubts as to whether we ought to establish a precedent such as this with the head of a very important executive department and permit him to allow one of his assistants—not an Assistant Secretary of the department, however—who may be, and probably is, his personal selection for the position, to sign documents of gravest import. The existing law only permits the chief clerk, as I understand it, to sign these documents in the absence of the Assistant Secretary. Probably an additional and impelling reason for the enactment of this proposed legislation may be found in the fact that this distinguished Secretary of the Interior has lately been assigned to a wage arbitration committee, or some similar board or tribunal—for which I know he is amply qualified—that will engage some of his time; but it seems to me that the Secretary of the Interior ought not to transfer the work of signing official documents that become a part of the records of the Government and of his department to an assistant who is not really an executive officer.

However, though I have received sufficient information to convince me that the objections which I have raised are well founded, I have had an opportunity to express my views upon the question, and I am going to withdraw the objection. [Applause.] Should confusion arise in the future, I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that it was, in a feeble way, forecast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 104.

Resolved, etc., That the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

INDEMNITIES TO AUSTRIA-HUNGARY, GREECE, AND TURKEY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 69) to authorize the payment of indemnities to the Governments of Austria-Hungary, Greece, and Turkey for injuries inflicted on their nationals during riots occurring in South Omaha, Nebr., February 21, 1909.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask that this be passed over without prejudice for a week.

Mr. FLOOD. Two weeks.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the next Unanimous Consent Calendar day is a week from Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But we may not get that day.

Mr. FLOOD. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK], and I suppose he will have no objection to its going over without prejudice.

Mr. LOBECK. I suppose the gentleman from Wisconsin would like to consider it further.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is my purpose. It is worthy of consideration, because it involves a considerable amount.

Mr. LOBECK. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON TO ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6966) authorizing the Secretary of State to procure a suitable portrait of Gen. George Washington and present the same to the Military College of the Argentine Republic

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the amount involved in this bill is small, and the idea is commendable. I wonder whether the committee would not think it advisable to place a limit on the amount that may be expended for other purposes than the procurement of this portrait? The Argentine Republic presented a photograph. This great Republic desires to present a painting of our first President. It is a most laudable undertaking, but I do not believe that the $3,000 appropriated, or the major portion of it, should be expended in expense attending its presentation, as the bill might permit. I think there should be some limit so that the major portion should be expended on the portrait, frame, and inscription. There has been no estimate made as to the cost of the painting, but if we are going to present one, we want a fitting one of the first President and not have the larger portion of it taken up with the expense of traveling and entertainment of a commission on the part of those who may present the portrait to Argentina.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think there is any intention to send any commission to make the presentation. It will be sent to the American ambassador, and he will make the presentation. If the gentleman has an amendment to prevent anything of that kind, I will accept it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have prepared an amendment, which says:

Provided, That no more than $1,000 shall be expended for all other purposes except to procure the painting, frame, and inscription of the said portrait.

Mr. FLOOD. I think that is all right, but it would be better to make it $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would be more reasonable.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as a mark of appreciation of, and esteem for, the people of the Argentine Republic, the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and directed to procure, frame, and have suitably inscribed, a portait of Gen. George Washington, and to present the same to the Military College of the Argentine Republic.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the expense of executing this act, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed by the Secretary of State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to be inserted at the end of section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of section 2 the following:

"Provided, That no more than $500 shall be expended for all other purposes except the procuring of the painting, frame, and inscription of the said portrait."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1553) to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded at Washington, August 16, 1916, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if it is his intention to press the bill?

Mr. FLOOD. No.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object.

UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10243) to supplement existing legislation relative to the United States Court for China and to increase the serviceability thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

INCREASE OF SALARY OF THE UNITED STATES MARSHAL, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7796) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Michigan shall be at the rate of $4,000 a year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLOAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 171) to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, the bill changes the limitation on the amount of appropriation that could be made by Congress in the original law creating the Rocky Mountain National Park only three years ago. I ask the gentleman to withdraw this bill so as to give the committee an opportunity to consider matters in connection with the administration of these national parks.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this bill at this time. It is true the prohibition was placed on it at the time of the organization of the park, one of the most extensive parks in this country, and yet this was the first park that was discriminated against in this way. The gentleman from Wisconsin urges that it be laid over in order that more information may be secured from the department as to the necessity for additional appropriations for the parks. The Secretary of the Interior has repeatedly, during the three years since this inhibition was made, recommended to Congress a larger appropriation, and gone into details as to the necessity for a larger appropriation. There have been more visitors to this park than to any other of our national parks. Last year there were more than 135,000 people visited it. It is not as accessible to people as it should be, and, being the property of the United States, it seems to me that an appropriation of $10,000 a year is hardly sufficient even for its supervision, let alone any improvements necessary to bring the park accessible to the people. It is not sufficient to make trails and roads, and it does seem to me that, inasmuch as the Secretary of the Interior could not get a larger appropriation, that this inhibition should be removed. I want to say further that if this is done, making it possible for the Government to make a larger appropriation—and I will say that the demand will not be excessive—the people of Colorado, upon their own initiative, are prepared to treble the amount appropriated by the Congress out of the State funds in order to assist in the development and improvement of this park.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we all remember when this national park was created and taken under the supervision of the National Government. We all recall that at that time assurance was given that the National Government would not be called upon to expend more than $10,000 in the maintenance of that park. It was essentially a State park. The National Government took it over, and there is now being presented the very condition which anyone who is acquainted with the trend of affairs to impose upon the National Government State functions feared, namely, the limit is sought to be raised and the whole burden of maintenance thrown upon the National Government. Unless the gentleman is willing to have this bill passed over without prejudice, I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, just a few moments ago I withheld a point of order that there was no quorum present, and I do not wish to take up the time longer, because it is getting late and it is Saturday afternoon.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALARIES IN CUSTODIAN SERVICE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 344) for the regulation of salaries in the custodian service of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Nebraska the percentage of increase this bill provides for these employees.

Mr. LOBECK. The average increase, according to the report on this bill, above what is paid now is 12.38 per cent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, while I think there is no question but that some of the salaries of these various employees ought to be increased, in view of the fact that the other day we passed a bill increasing the salaries of employees $120 a year, and I take it that would include these comprehended in this measure, and in view of the further fact that this is too important a measure to be considered by unanimous consent at this time of the day and in this day of the week, I trust the gentleman will ask to have it passed over without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, in view of what the gentleman says, and because it is an important measure—we have had continuous hearings on it—and these are the lowest salaried men in any department——

Mr. WALSH. I notice that, and I think they are entitled to the increases provided.

Mr. LOBECK. And if the gentleman will promise to give this matter careful consideration so that we can take it up next unanimous-consent day, I shall be glad to ask to have it go over.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to give the matter the consideration that it deserves.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALARY OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Was a motion made to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 7796), to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Michigan?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] made the motion.

Mr. SLOAN. I made the motion.

Mr. RAKER. My recollection is there was no such motion made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a motion made to reconsider. The Chair has a very distinct recollection. The Clerk started to read the next bill just as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] made the motion. He says he made it, and the Chair remembers distinctly hearing him make it. Then the Chair made the statement, "Without objection it will be so ordered," and there was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. That statement settles it, of course.

LANDS IN THE TOWN SITE OF PORT ANGELES, WASH.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5351) providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] if this is the measure that came up during the Sixty-fourth Congress and on which there was considerable discussion about the matter in which the then gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey] took a very prominent part?

Mr. HADLEY. No, Mr. Speaker, this bill has no relation to the bill of which the gentleman speaks, as far as I know; because this was a bill which passed in the Senate in the Sixty-fourth Congress, as I remember it, but it was not introduced in this body and never was up in this House at all. There have been other bills relating to property in this town site, but nothing related to this, and nothing of the same nature, as far as I know.

Mr. WALSH. Well, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make a brief statement about the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. HADLEY. I will be glad to do it; yes. The property is located in a block which was reserved from sale when the town site was to be disposed of. That is, I should say, it was an original Government town site and this block was reserved. In 1912 under an act passed by Congress provision was made for the sale of all lots except those required for governmental use. The Government investigated the matter and decided to reserve for the Treasury Department three and for the Department of Agriculture three. Those six lots have been set aside and reserved. Seven lots have been sold and passed to patent. Six are desired as excepted in the bill for governmental use, leaving seven which have not been disposed of, and each of those lots by this bill would be sold under the terms of the act of 1912 providing for appraisement and sale.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Back in 1913 the Treasury Department had reserved for its use lots 6 to 15, inclusive, and now their decision as to the number of lots that may be needed for a Federal building is of a more restricted amount. Has the city gone backward, so that the Treasury Department does not believe so large a number of lots will be needed in the future for the Government's use?

Mr. HADLEY. No; but the Government has made investigations and determined just what would be necessary and has examined the physical conditions as they exist in that block. I know what they are myself and I know that part of the property which was reserved under that original order to which the gentleman refers, was not suitable at all, and it was not contiguous, but had an alley separating it from the property that is now reserved. The property now reserved consists of three lots 150 feet wide by 140 feet in depth with an alley in the rear on the corner of a business street, and the other property——

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact the lots the Treasury now reserves were included in the larger site reserved back in 1913?

Mr. HADLEY. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, will the gentleman explain the general character of this block that is partly reserved for the Agricultural Department and partly for the Treasury Department, whether there are any private buildings on that square or block?

Mr. HADLEY. There are some private buildings on some of the lots. The act of 1912 gave a preferential right to purchase to persons who were actual settlers prior to a certain date, I think in 1910. But that is not involved here, yet as a matter of fact I take it that under the act of 1912 such land as may be sold would carry a preferential right to those persons to purchase who may have been bona fide settlers upon the land prior to that date.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the population of Port Angeles?

Mr. HADLEY. I would estimate it at from 5,000 to 6,000 people.

Mr. STAFFORD. The land reserved under this bill for that public building is a tract, according to the report, 300 feet by 250 feet.

Mr. HADLEY. It has 150 feet frontage by 140 feet in depth. I have not the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, perhaps the gentleman is right. If the gentleman is right in that the size of these three lots is but 150 by 140, I will be obliged to object, because I believe that would not be large enough for a public building.

Mr. HADLEY. The gentleman misunderstood my statement. I did not say they were 50 by 140. I say 150 by 140.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand. The gentleman does not believe that a tract of land 150 feet by 140 is adequate for a Government building?

Mr. HADLEY. I do, indeed; and furthermore——

Mr. MONDELL. It is a quarter of a block.

Mr. HADLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the department has passed upon it, and the report of the Secretary says it is adequate for the purposes of that town. And I am sure if the gentleman will investigate the public buildings in the past he will find that there are not many larger places.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, that is the area ordinarily reserved. It is practically a quarter of a block. Except in a very large city, that is abundant space for a public building and leaves sufficient space all around the building.

Mr. HARDY. I will say that that is the size of a lot in a town in my district—a quarter of a block.

Mr. STAFFORD. These gentlemen here are acquainted with the size of land in small burgs on which they erect public buildings, and with which I am not so well acquainted, and I will take their judgment about that. But I considered that in a great and rushing city like Port Angeles the population would be so large that a small lot would not be useful for a Government building and meet the needs of the Government service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5351) providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

Be it enacted, etc., That all lots in block 32, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, now reserved for Government purposes under an act entitled "An act providing for the reappraisement and sale of certain lands in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for other purposes," approved March 16, 1912, except lots 1, 8, 9, 10, 16, and 17, shall be disposed of under and pursuant to the provisions of said act of March 16, 1912, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to proceed at once to carry out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HADLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] moved to reconsider.

Mr. RAKER. And I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is no need for the gentleman saying that, because I am here attending to my business all the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will make the point of no quorum if there is going to be an altercation here.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHITE RIVER, FORSYTH, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 10365, granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River at Forsyth, Mo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10365) granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River at Forsyth, Mo.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Forsyth, Mo., in the county of Taney, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANT OF LAND TO CITY OF SAN DIEGO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 10587, granting to the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman care to make a statement? Personally I feel that this bill is of entirely too much importance to be taken up at this time of the week and on this calendar. If the gentleman desires to make a statement I will withhold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes a grant to the city of San Diego of certain lands, a small part of which seem to be public lands but a larger portion Indian lands. Only a very small part seems to be public lands—a portion of a park of something like 120 acres—and some 2,000 acres of the land are Indian lands. What this bill proposes to do is to take the land away from those Indians, which has always been their homes, at some price fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and purchasing them other land. There has been for some time carried in the Indian appropriation bills different sums of money for the purchase of land for homeless Indians in California, and very little land has been purchased. The result might be that these Indians would be left homeless, in which case the responsibility might fall on the Government to furnish lands for them.

Mr. Speaker, this bill evidently should have gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs, because it is a matter dealing with Indian lands in the main, and a matter dealing with getting homes for these Indians, if they are left homeless by taking this land away from them. The bill is doubtless intended to serve a good purpose, and I have no doubt that it is drawn with proper care, giving every protection to all the parties concerned, because it is reported by a committee which bears a reputation for such conduct. I am not very jealous of the prerogatives of committees, but I would like myself, personally, to make some investigation of the bill before final action is taken by the House. For that reason I believe that the bill ought to go over until next unanimous-consent day.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, may I just answer the gentleman's statement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The matter referred to by the gentleman—that it does take a part of the Indian reservation—is true. It takes some 2,000 acres of an entire reservation of about 16,000 acres. But the bill not only provides that there shall be condemnations in the courts and judgment fixed as to the price and value of the land but, in addition to that, the Secretary of the Interior must approve that judgment and may assess any amount that he may desire.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order. I want but one minute of time. We are within three bills of finishing this calendar. We have been waiting patiently all the day. Our constituents pay us for legislating and attending to the public business. Here we are in sight of finishing this calendar, and somebody captiously makes the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order when a gentleman says I do it "captiously." The bill he refers to was considered 10 days ago.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, how does this leave the status of this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An objection was made.

Mr. RAKER. That does not dispose of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It disposes of the present consideration of it.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Rhode Island demands a division on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 13.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 25, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 25, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who dost sit upon the throne of the universe, we come reverently before Thee lifting up our hearts in prayer. The dread alarm of nations calls us to prayer this day. We seek Thy favor and Thy blessing. We present ourselves to Thee with a consciousness of having come short of Thy glory and having failed in much that Thou hast committed to our hands in our national and personal life. We pray Thee to forgive our sins. Cleanse us from our impurities. Give to us the baptism of Thy spirit and the leadership of Thy spirit, that we may yet accomplish Thy will in the earth through the things that are pleasant in Thy sight. We pray that Thou wilt make bare Thy arm to save, and lead the forces of justice and liberty and truth to a final victory. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

I therefore ask that an order be made for the printing of the illustrations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from Colorado Springs signed by over 100 of the best citizens of that city, which reads as follows:

We, citizens of Colorado Springs, Colo., urge you to rush immediate passage of the Federal suffrage amendment in the Senate.

It is signed by Dr. Bertha W. Fowler, Leonard E. Curtis, Judge Louis W. Cunningham, and others. I will say with relation to these men and women that they are among the very best citizens of that community.

And, Mr. President, I wish to say further that the interest which these people are taking in the cause of suffrage has been so marked and the constitutional amendment has been so strongly advocated by them because of the good government that has resulted from the participation of women in politics in the State of Colorado. There the sentiment is practically unanimous in favor of extending this privilege to all women of the world, and inasmuch as great progress has been made in numerous nations on lines so much in the interest of their movement it seems to me we ought to extend it to every State in the Union by the constitutional amendment which is pending. All movements in behalf of human liberty continually advance, and hence the right of women to vote is sure to prevail. Let us speed the passage of the measure.

I ask that the telegram be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 3469) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 328) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 728) to permit the State of Wyoming to relinquish to the United States lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 329) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, reported it with amendments.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4151) to provide for a determination of heirship in cases of deceased members of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, conferring jurisdiction upon district courts to partition lands belonging to full-blood heirs of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 330) thereon.

EDUCATION OF ADULT ILLITERATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States.

This is the same bill that I reported on Saturday as a House bill. That report was subsequently withdrawn and the bill was introduced as an original Senate bill, and that is why I report it this morning as a Senate bill.

This is the bill referred to in the letter of Secretary Lane printed a few days ago in the RECORD. It is a bill which provides for the appropriation of $50,000 to be used by the Commissioner of Education with a view of stimulating the removal of illiteracy especially with reference to the drafted men. While the sum is small, it is not expected to be used to pay any teachers. It is to be expended simply to plan the way and to obtain local cooperation and to stimulate an intense local effort in the direction of removing illiteracy, especially among the drafted men, but illiteracy of grown men and grown women.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will yield a moment, I sympathize with the purpose of the bill, but I understand that on Saturday the Senator reported a House bill covering the subject and this morning he reports a Senate bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was misled as to the bill having passed the House. I was advised that it had passed the House. It had been reported unanimously from the committee, but it was on the House Calendar. It was sent to me, and after reporting it I found I had been misinformed about it. So I withdrew the report on the House bill and introduced the same bill as a Senate bill, and now report favorably the Senate bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That explanation is entirely satisfactory. I thought the House had passed it, and if we substituted a Senate bill we would just complicate matters. That explains it fully.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope we can have action this morning upon the bill. If the Commissioner of Education is to accomplish anything with the next draft, he must commence at once. Yet until the morning business is finished I do not wish to take up time with this measure.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4187) to correct the military record of E. D. Judkins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4188) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4192) granting an increase of pension to John S. Ranlett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 142) to amend the provisions of section 124 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TRAINING OF ADDITIONAL OFFICERS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 217), which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to advise the Senate, in executive session, what plans have been made for training additional officers, together with the number that it is proposed to train.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall not ask consent for the consideration of the resolution this morning, but I shall call it up to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table subject to call.

OPERATION OF SEAMEN'S ACT.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the president of the International Seamen's Union of America as to the operation of the so-called seamen's act. It is a very interesting statement, which, I think, ought to be published.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SEAMEN'S UNION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1918.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The earnest interest which you took in the enactment of the seamen's bill into law causes me to believe that you will be pleased to have the seamen's view of its operation, hence this letter. Of course if it had been purely a seamen's bill it would never have been passed. You supported it first because of its humanitarian features. It was intended to improve the condition of the seamen, but this was, after all, a means to an end. A nation without native seamen can have no sea power. This was postulated by the bill. This war has abundantly proven our contention, but it will be further demonstrated before the war is ended.

We contended that with the seamen's condition in the vessels and on shore remaining as it was the Americans would not come to sea, but that the Americans would come if the seamen's bill be passed and enforced. The experience of more than 40 years had demonstrated the truth of the first statement; the second is being gradually demonstrated. The number of native American sailors has, on the Pacific, increased from less than 1 per cent to more than 10 per cent; the increase on the Atlantic is from less than 10 per cent to more than 25 per cent, since the act became operative. And this increase has come notwithstanding the fact that the law has not been given anything like a fair chance. I shall give particulars later.

We contended that the inevitable result of the act would be to equalize the wage cost of operating American and foreign vessels leaving American ports; we contended that this would be the first result, and that later there would be an equalization of seamen's wages all over the world. To accomplish this the seaman must be made free, so that the law of supply and demand could operate freely, and, further, that seamen leaving our ports must have the same qualifications in all vessels, and that they must be hired or engaged under the same law. Improve the law so that an improvement may come to the American seaman and make this law applicable to all vessels coming within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The act was passed on March 4, 1915. It became operative on November 4, 1915, in American vessels. It became finally operative after August 1, 1916, in all vessels. The last seamen arrested and detained under the old laws and the treaties were arrested at Norfolk, Va., in the last days of July, 1916. The vessel could not get to sea before August 1 and the men had to be released. Those men were shipped on another vessel of the same nationality at the American wage rate of $45, to which rate the American wages had been raised from $30 since the laws became enforceable. To prove that equalization was in full operation at the beginning of the last year let me quote from an authority not over friendly to the seaman—the Legal Aid Society.

On pages 19 and 20 of the report of that society for the year 1916 (the report was published in 1917) is the following report from its chief attorney, Mr. Leonard McGee:

> Our activities were in line with the provision of the seamen's bill abolishing involuntary servitude and removing the remedies given to foreign Governments and foreign shipowners to arrest seamen who desert in ports of the United States. Seamen, being given a right on American and foreign vessels alike to demand one-half wages, or half the wages earned by them and unpaid in American ports, have been able to enforce that right by the provision of the law which enables them to bring suit for the full amount of wages owing them in case the master refuses to pay them half. I am inclined to believe the theory and actual operation of the seamen's bill is bound in time to prove its soundness and efficiency.
> I am informed that seamen coming here on foreign vessels which are sent to American ports to compete in American trade leave their vessels unless the master voluntarily guarantees them an increase in wages which will bring their earnings up to a par with the average earnings of American seamen and other seamen in American ports which have already arrived at the American standard. As a rule, seamen on foreign ships demand one-half their wages and then quit. The result is the foreign shipmaster must refurnish his vessel with a crew before leaving. To do this he must apply to shipping masters or one of the seamen's institutions who supply seamen, but he has to pay the going wages in the port of New York or Norfolk or whatever port he happens to be in. * * * One need not be a mathematician or student of economy to conclude that the enforcement of this legislation means the creation of an opportunity to the American shipowner to compete with foreigners on a par, so far as labor cost is concerned.

The above was the situation when the attorney's report was submitted. It must have been in the latter part of 1916. Of course we seamen knew this, and we might state it as of our own knowledge, but deem it better to submit this highly respectable authority.

Some time in June or July, 1917, representations were made by the British Government to our Department of State that the operations of the seamen's act were burdensome to British shipping, and suggestions were made that it ought to be suspended during the war. The British seamen were deserting, the vessels had to pay higher wages, and they had to pay the "crimp" (marine employment agent) for finding new men. The vessels were delayed, so it was alleged. This was true only whenever the masters refused to pay the wages of the port.

Then, the masters of vessels were evidently instructed to refuse the demand for one-half wages earned and the courts became literally choked with cases in which the seamen appealed to the courts for their wages under section 4 of the act—the half-pay section. Also under section 2, the section forbidding advances or the payment of wages before it is earned—known to the seamen as the anticrimping section. Most of the district courts construed the law as it reads and ordered the wages paid. A district court in Florida and another in Philadelphia placed a different construction on section 4 and the seamen had to appeal.

A New York firm of lawyers drew up a brief which was then submitted to the courts by the British consuls as amicus curiæ. The circuit court of appeals, sitting at Philadelphia, upheld the decision of the district court and dismissed the libel.

The circuit court of appeals, sitting at New Orleans, certified the case up to the Supreme Court of the United States on a question of constitutionality. Both sides are asking to have the case advanced, and it is hoped and expected that it will be.

I am informed that the Governments of Italy and Portugal joined with the Government of Great Britain in making representations against the law, or that these Governments made such representations about the same time. I am further informed that our Government suggested that their remedy is in their own hands. The men ship again as soon as they can and they go to the war zone. If they pay the same wages as are paid in American ports, the men will evidently remain with their vessels.

In the early days of February, 1918, the wages of seamen was raised in Great Britain to practically the same as the wages paid to seamen in American Atlantic ports, and now there are no desertions except from vessels which have been away from England too long to have received the new wage. The American wage is not paid only to seamen going to the United States; it is paid to all seamen, no matter where the vessels are bound. The equalization has come in so far as British vessels are concerned. Let the law stand and be enforced and it will come in all vessels of all nations either absolutely or so near that desertions will cease.

There are, unfortunately, several very important sections of the act that are not enforced by our department. The Department of Commerce has ruled that the forecastle clause has no application to vessels built prior to November 4, 1915. The department was overruled by the Attorney General, to whom it was submitted by the President. District Judge Manton, in New York, overruled the Attorney General, and the case is now on appeal in New York. In the meantime the abominable forecastles remain the same.

The Department of Commerce held that, notwithstanding the act, advance wages might be paid by any American vessel if she be in a foreign port. Several district courts overruled the department and appeal was taken, and the circuit court of appeals, sitting in New York, overruled the circuit court on a divided court. An appeal for certiorari will be submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is hoped that it may be granted, because these decisions go to the very heart of the equalization. This is the crux of the act and it is so recognized by foreign shipowners, hence their determined fight. If advance can be paid, and one-half of the seaman's total earnings can be kept by the vessel to insure that he keeps his contract, the foreign shipowners can nearly always arrange so that the seaman can obtain no money at all in American ports, and that he will be compelled by his physical necessities to remain with the vessel. This accomplished and the equalization is defeated.

The Department of Commerce further gave such construction to the language clause that any vessel may leave any American port with men who do not understand the language of the officers. This ruling, together with those above mentioned, has made it very difficult indeed for the American to get into the vessels. Having the usual American race pride the American will not sail in the same forecastle with Chinese, Negroes, or dark-skinned Spanish-speaking men from either South America or the Mediterranean countries. He will sail together with what he calls "white men" who can speak English, even if they speak it poorly.

These rulings have hindered the American from coming to the sea in such numbers as we should now very much like to have seen. If the law had received the fair treatment to which it is entitled, and which it will ultimately get, we should have had about 50 per cent of Americans on the vessels at this time. It must, however, in honesty be said that the seamen now sailing have proven their worth and their loyalty beyond any dispute.

No vessels have been delayed. There has been no difficulty in finding the seamen that were needed. According to figures made public more than 300 seamen have given their lives. This figure was published long ago and there are many more now. Of course, I can not verify these figures. Our own figures are much above those quoted, but they are not of any importance, whatever they may be. The important thing is that the seamen have given willing service and it has not been lip service; they are willing to continue. The seamen ask but one thing and that is that the so-called seamen's act be permitted to remain on the books and that it be protected against any assaults, whether the assaults come from any foreign Government or from those among our own people who either do not understand or whose interests make them blind to the real interests of this Nation during the war and after the war.

With profound gratitude and respect, I am, yours,

ANDREW FURUSETH,
President International Seamen's Union of America.

COCONINO AND TUSAYAN NATIONAL FORESTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 389) to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz., which was, on page 2, line 2, after "administration," to insert ", and further that all its rights to cut and remove timber from any lands within said national forests are to terminate on the 31st day of December, 1950."

Mr. ASHURST. I am the author of the bill. The House has made an amendment limiting the time for cutting timber, and it provides that no more timber shall be cut after December 31, 1950. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 9867, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. There are one or two Senators not present who are interested in this report, and I suggest the absence of a quorum merely that they may be here so as not to go over the same ground again when they enter the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Hale	New	Sterling
Bankhead	Harding	Norris	Sutherland
Beckham	Henderson	Nugent	Swanson
Borah	Hitchcock	Overman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Tillman

Mr. BECKHAM. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], is detained on official business, and that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to serious illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on official business. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] desires to make a statement with reference to the conference report, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, there are two provisions of the urgent deficiency bill which were inserted as amendments by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that have no relation to or bearing on an appropriation bill. Both of them should have been introduced as separate acts and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The first amendment I refer to is one authorizing the President to take over the steamship docks belonging to the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American Lines. The second amendment is the one empowering the Alien Property Custodian to sell property of aliens in this country. Both of these amendments are necessary legislation in so far as they seize German property and remove the influence of unfriendly German ownership. There can be no doubt as to the wisdom of that policy.

But they have been too hastily prepared and passed, and I feel are not in proper form. In their present shape they seriously affect American interests, and will work great injury and injustice to our own native citizens not only in my own State but in many of the other States.

No opportunity has been given to American citizens to be heard on this legislation, and the effect of this amendment may work an injustice. I do not believe the Senate wishes ruthlessly to destroy American interest and enterprise, particularly when grave consequences are bound to ensue which will subject American citizens to great loss in settling their claims.

I did all I could to perfect these amendments when they came before the Senate, but new developments have arisen since the Senate acted. The seizure of the Hoboken docks works great hardship on the municipality of Hoboken in depriving them of the taxes on the property. It also affects an arrangement that the State of New Jersey has with the city of Hoboken whereby an allowance in taxes is made by the State for the benefit of that community.

I send to the desk a letter from the manager of one of the large property owners of Hoboken, which explains the situation. I ask that the Secretary may read the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOBOKEN, N. J., March 22, 1918.

Hon. J. S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By the provisions of the act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies the President is authorized to acquire the title to the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facility now owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Terminal & Navigation Co., two corporations of the State of New Jersey, if he shall deem it necessary for the national security and defense; and the act contemplates that the title to these properties shall be taken over and vested in the United States.

I beg to call to your attention the importance of the proposed action as regards the city of Hoboken and the residents within that municipality.

The city of Hoboken has a territorial area of 1 square mile and a population of approximately 75,000. The total assessed valuation of its property for the year 1917 was $79,745,489, and the tax rate $2.322 per thousand on Hoboken and $2.263 Weehawken addition. The city borders on the Hudson River and contains within its area considerable railroad property and terminals which, under existing laws of New Jersey, are not assessed directly for municipal purposes, but in lieu thereof the municipality receives from the State a proportion of a tax assessed and collected by the State and which in amount is materially less than would be that realized from a direct tax on the property at the full municipal rate.

In 1917 the valuation of such railroad property as assessed by the State was $7,752,889. Leaving railroad property out of consideration, the most valuable property within the city limits consists of the water front with its wharves and piers and the buildings appurtenant thereto, and these have in previous years contributed more largely than any other class of property to municipal requirements. The property which it is proposed to take over consists of eight double-deck steamship piers with bulkhead buildings and front thereof and land in front of the bulkhead buildings used for storage and yardage purposes and having a total water frontage of about one-third of a mile. Its assessed valuation in 1917 was approximately $6,283,100 and tax assessed $145,886.72, about 12½ per cent of the total tax payable by all property assessed for taxation for municipal purposes, which was $1,155,479.99 in 1917.

Even in normal times therefore and under normal conditions the withdrawal from taxation of 10 per cent of taxable property would throw upon the remaining property a very materially increased burden, and from this cause alone the tax rate per thousands would be increased $0.29 per annum. But the situation of the city of Hoboken is not normal; in order to comply with Federal requirements it has lost in excise taxes alone $140,000. The burdens placed upon it for the maintenance of its police have been increased, and with the increased amount of valuable property within its limits the obligation and retaining at its fullest efficiency its fire department is apparent.

It can not hope permanently to maintain a higher tax rate and collect taxes promptly. It can not materially economize its expenditures in the conduct of the city's affairs. Conditions make it imperative that its expenditures for schools should not be materially reduced, and most of the expenditures it is required to make it is required to make under statutes. Further, the city has in an endeavor to contribute its bit toward carrying on the war arranged to supplement the compensation received by its employees from the United States Government by an amount requisite to bring such compensation up to the municipal salaries which they had theretofore received.

It is submitted, therefore, that the situation calls for the most serious consideration in order that the municipality may be treated with fairness and that the burdens placed upon it shall not be so great as to interfere with its administration or be impossible for it to bear, without such limitation of its administration as will defeat the very purpose of this legislation by forcing the municipality to abandon its function along lines which it is submitted the United States has every interest to preserve.

The situation would, of course, be saved if the property is taken over and held in any manner which will not prevent its assessment for taxation for municipal purposes. Whether this should be done by express provision in a bill itself, whether by taking it over and holding it through a private corporation, or any other method which may meet the approval of the United States, I do not now express my opinion, but I respectfully urge most careful consideration before any measure is passed which shall practically mean the financial bankruptcy of a community.

Very truly,

PALMER CAMPBELL,
General Manager Hoboken Land & Improvement Co.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have had that letter read in order that the Senate might be informed of the conditions that have arisen by reason of the fact that the Government intends to take this property over. It practically takes from the tax returns $150,000 and increases the tax rate to the citizens of that municipality 29 points, notwithstanding the fact that the city must continue to maintain their schools to educate the children of the Government employees who will take care of and manage these docks, and also must maintain the fire department to protect this Government property from fire loss, and continue police protection, there is removed from the returns of that city for taxation $150,000. I have asked that this statement might be made before the Senate in order that when a bill which I shall introduce for the relief of this municipality is presented to the Senate the Senate may understand the conditions under which that bill shall have been introduced.

Mr. President, there is another amendment to the alien-custodian act in this conference report to which I offered an amendment, which provided:

Provided, That any property sold under this act, except when sold to the United States, shall be sold only to American citizens at public sale to the highest bidder.

There has been added by the conference committee this language:

after public advertisement of time and place of sale, which shall be where the property, or a major portion thereof, is situated.

That undoubtedly improves the amendment. But another proviso provides that "unless the President stating the reasons therefor, in the public interest shall otherwise determine."

That enables the President to interfere with or to interrupt a public sale. I see no objection to that; possibly it is wise to give the President that added power in order to protect ourselves against unfriendly German influence. It also provides further that when the property shall have been sold at public sale by the Alien Property Custodian the President may nullify that sale by stating the reasons therefor, and may order the property resold.

There is also provided a very severe penalty for a violation of the act in selling to an undisclosed person. I believe that also is wise. However, I wish to point out a defect or an imperfection in this act which it will probably be necessary to introduce additional legislation in order to correct the injustice which it imposes upon American property owners. When property is sold no provision is made for private claims of American citizens against alien enemies who own property in this country and have done business with them. There are undoubtedly many such claims, and it would obviously be unjust for the Government to make their collection impossible, and more especially, as in many instances, where credit has been extended or money has been realized upon such property. This would apply not only to all property held by the Alien Property Custodian but to any real estate which might be taken over by the Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey—and, if he has not investigated the matter, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], having charge of the conference report—if there is any reason why the alien property situated in New Jersey or in any other State is not first liable for debts, damages, or claims of American citizens and of all other people, the same as is any other property; and if there is anything in this proposed act which takes away any right they have to collect their claims? I have not given the matter any study.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Jersey will yield, I shall be glad to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that, so far as these amendments are concerned, they do not affect the situation at all or go into it in any way so far as the original Alien Property Custodian act is concerned providing for the custody of alien property. I do not think there is anything in the act now to prevent a man who has a claim against the owner of such property from asserting his claim against the property nor from following the proceeds into the hands of the Alien Enemy Custodian; but, as I understand, there are some gentlemen who have not claims against this property, but who possibly have claims against German citizens who are not in this country and do not have a residence or property here, who want to pursue this particular property for their benefit. That is a question, of course, that will have to be determined at the peace table or by some other forum than this.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then it is the opinion of the Senator from Alabama there is nothing either in this act or in the alien-property act that would interfere with the creditors of citizens of Germany owning property in this country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can say, without any question of doubt, that there is nothing in the amendment to the Alien Property Custodian act that is now pending before the Senate that affects that question in any way whatever; and, so far as I understand the original Alien Property Custodian act, there is nothing in that act to prevent an American citizen from pursuing his just rights against such property at any time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then the sole question would be whether it would be the policy of the legislative department of the Government, if it could do so, to make the property of one alien liable for the debts of another.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a question that of necessity will probably come to the peace table, but is not for this forum to determine.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not understand that the claims of American citizens against German citizens residing in Germany and owning property in this country are in question. The original alien property custodian act did not provide for the sale of property, as I understand. Is not that so?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Except for the purpose of preventing waste or loss.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Except for the purpose of preventing waste or loss. My amendment as it was originally presented provided that the Alien Property Custodian could sell this property, and that when sold the sale should be at public auction. There was no provision which protected the claims of American citizens in this country against that property, and I think, so far as I have read the amendment to the alien property custodian act, that there is no provision which protects the claims of American citizens against the property sold, unless it is under statute provisions or under the common law.

Mr. KELLOGG. The point I wish to be clear about is this: Are not the proceeds of such property subject not only to claims against the property but to claims or personal debts of alien citizens of Germany in every State in the Union? That is the question I was asking.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The act has been considered by one of the prominent law firms of New York, and this objection was raised by them. I understand that there is grave doubt as to whether the act protects those claims. However, I am simply mentioning the matter in order that I may bring before the Senate an amendment to this act at some future time.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should think if there was any doubt about it it would be very proper to amend the act so as to make the proceeds subject to such claims, the same as would be the case if the property had not been sold.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This amendment, Mr. President, has for its main object the giving of authority to the Alien Property Custodian of power of sale over property coming into his possession. There is no limitation upon this power in the amendment as offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and it undoubtedly would permit private sale were it not for the amendment offered by me requiring such sale to be at public auction. I am in entire sympathy with this bill; I feel that it is a necessary piece of legislation, and have little concern as to what may be done with the property of enemies, so far as it concerns enemies in the real sense. I call attention, however, to the fact that the trading-with-the-enemy act gives the definition of the word enemy in the following language:

Any individual, partnership, or body of individuals of any nationality resident within the territory of any nation with which the United States is at war or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory.

That language is so broad as to make an American citizen resident in Germany an enemy and subject to the provisions of the act. Therefore it would seem to me to be important that property belonging to an American citizen who may be a resident in Germany, and whose property is subject to seizure by the Alien Property Custodian, should not be sold at all, as the fact of being an enemy does not necessarily indicate disloyalty to any degree, and the property should merely be held and preserved until such time as such person may change his status by removing from Germany.

Again, this Nation has always been generous, and I feel that it is probably important that if property of enemies is sold, unless such sale is required to preserve the property or prevent waste, it should be sold under such circumstances as to take away any question of inadequate consideration or bad faith, in order that when the owners appeal to the Government for redress after the war sympathy may not be obtained by reason of the manner in which the situation was handled.

There is another class of property which should receive careful consideration. I refer to the property interests which involve the property and property rights of citizens, as in the case of partnerships, joint ownerships, and corporations in which there is a stockholding by American citizens as well as enemies. Assuming that any disloyalty or ground for charging disloyalty attaches to the citizen's interests, many cases of real hardship will result unless great care is exercised. There are many very prosperous corporations in this country in which German capital is invested. In the commencement of the enterprises money has been required and capital was welcome, even though from German sources. The businesses have gone on prospering as the result of the business judgment and skill of the American interests and represents to the stockholders more than the mere stock ownership.

The sale by the custodian will result in new interests coming into the concern. If this power is not judiciously exercised it may destroy the company by putting the control of the business in the hands of a competitor, who could afford to obtain control for the purpose of eliminating competition, and would leave the American interests the holders of shares having no value, or would place the control in the hands of people having no knowledge or experience in the running of the business, who would interfere with the way in which it had been managed in the past, with the result that its prosperity would be seriously impaired.

It may be said that this is a danger which is anticipated and the fear is unfounded. In answer to this I can only say that the Alien Property Custodian expects, even demands, that he have representation on the board of directors of corporations in which he as custodian holds shares, whether a majority or majority holding. In a particular instance he has nominated two members out of a directorate of five members where the enemy stockholding interest was about 30 per cent. If he may do this he could demand a representation on the board of the United States Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Co., the Midvale Steel Co., and so on, assuming that certain of their shares are held by enemies, as is undoubtedly the case, and even though that stockholding was but one share in each company, as the principle would be the same regardless of the per cent of shareholding. In other cases where the enemy holding is a majority, he will dominate the board controlling the business and may seriously impair the efficiency of the business administration if his power is unwisely exercised.

Mr. President, I have made this statement simply in order that I might bring before the Senate at some future time an amendment to the alien property custodian act. It should be considered by the Foreign Relations Committee. The seizing of German property in this country in order to liquidate our claims for damage against German outrages is perfectly proper; but suppose there was an excess in amount in the value of that property—should we not utilize that in order to liquidate the damages of our allies, the cobelligerents in Belgium and France? The Germans have devastated that country, and if there is an excess in value of this property which we seize and which, as the Senator from Alabama has said, would be settled at the council table, should we not also consider the claims of our allies?

Mr. President, I think this is a very serious provision and should be considered at some future time, and I shall introduce amendments dealing with it later on. I do not wish to interfere with the progress of this important legislation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question. Does he think we should provide by a statute of Congress at this time that the property of alien citizens in this country which is sold should be used to reimburse our allies?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the matter should be given consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the changes made in this bill by the conferees are not many, and are not serious. So far as the appropriations are concerned, the money items in the bill, none of them have been directly increased. There are a few increases in the item relating to the payment of claims of officers for destroyed property. The bill as it originally passed the Senate made an annual appropriation and provided that any of these claims should be paid out of moneys in the Treasury. The conferees limited the claims to moneys hereafter appropriated, and, instead of a blanket annual appropriation, provided for an appropriation of $200,000. So, in effect, it was a reduction of that appropriation from an unlimited amount to a limited amount of $200,000; and, as I say, there were no increases in the appropriations as the bill passed the Senate, but all decreases.

As to the item referred to by the Senator from New Jersey, the only changes made in that item were to specify more distinctly the terms and conditions of public sale and to authorize the President, when he directed that it should be done and gave in writing his reasons for doing so, to set aside one of these sales. The personal action of the President is required to accomplish that result, and he is required to give in writing his reasons for doing so.

It seems to me clear that there ought to be that opportunity under the act. Cases may arise where you can not reach the desire of the Government to protect this property or the desire of the Government to take it away from an alien enemy by public sale; and if the President of the United States, acting himself and not through an agent, determines that it is necessary to be done, and in writing gives his reasons for doing so, it seems to me that is ample protection to the public and to the property.

Now, as to the question of taxation: The conference committee had the question before them. We recognize, of course, that it is a serious matter to the town involved for it to lose $150,000 of taxes if this property is taken over by the Government. In answer to that, though, I wish to say in the first place, that the property has not been taken over by the Government. The bill merely authorizes the President, if he thinks it is necessary, to buy the property. In the next place, the tax year begins on the 1st of May. If the executive branch of the Government determines that that is a vital question it can delay the transfer of this property until after the 1st of May, and then the taxes will be collected from the present source and there will be a year in which the question can be worked out. But the question of authorizing the payment by the Government to a State of taxes on Government property was not before this conference. It was not germane to the issues before the conferees. It could not have been taken up by them. More than that, the question is so far-reaching that it should not have been taken up by the conferees.

This is only one instance of the question as to what should be done in reference to Government-owned property. It is a question that has been before the people of the great Northwest ever since their States were formed. More than that, if in the near future the Government should conclude to take over the ownership of the railroads directly, instead of exercising a control of the railroads, it will be an issue that will confront every State in the Union as to whether that property should continue to be taxable under governmental control. It is a question of vast and far-reaching importance. It would not have been wise and just for the Senate to take up that question on this conference report; but it is a question that the Senate, in its deliberation and in its mature judgment, should ultimately decide. So I do not think there can be any reflection on the conferees because they did not inject that question into this conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I was somewhat insistent upon the conference report going over and being printed, having given it very careful consideration I want to say that I feel that the conferees did the very best they could under the circumstances and that they have presented a report that ought to be agreed to without opposition from any source.

There are some features in the subject to which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has called attention that have been very troublesome to me; but I feel that the conferees have, under the circumstances and considering the conditions surrounding them, solved the problem as well as it possibly could have been solved at the present moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad to know that the Senator from New Hampshire takes that view of the question, and I appreciate the statement he has made. I am sure that the report of the conferees is absolutely within the rules and within the terms upon which it was submitted to the conference.

Mr. President, if no other Senator desires to debate the subject, I ask for a roll call on the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report. On that question the Senator from Alabama asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Transferring my standing pair with the senor Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I now announce the transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Because of my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] by consent of the Senate and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. HENDERSON. My colleague, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], is necessarily absent from Washington. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMPSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted in the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], with whom I am paired. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], but have authority to vote on this question notwithstanding his absence, and therefore will let my vote stand.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY].

The result was announced—yeas 60, nays 1, as follows:

EDUCATION OF ADULT ILLITERATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4185.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator explain what the bill is?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a bill authorizing an appropriation of $50,000 to the Bureau of Education to be used in the effort to stimulate the removal of illiteracy. It is especially intended to be used among the men of draft age who have been shown by the Secretary of the Interior in the letter that I put in the RECORD a day or two ago to amount to the number of 700,000 not to be able to read and write. The Secretary of the Interior in connection with that fact called attention to the serious effect of their condition:

They can not sign their names.
They can not read their orders posted daily on bulletin boards in camp.
They can not read their manual of arms.
They can not read their letters or write home.
They can not understand the signals or follow the Signal Corps in time of battle.

* * * * * * *

There is even a larger problem than this that challenges our attention, and that is the teaching of the English tongue to millions of our population.

And the head of the department closes by urging that this bill be given early consideration. He closed his letter with this request and proviso:

* * * which provides for a modest appropriation for the Bureau of Education to begin and conduct a vigorous and systematic campaign for the eradication of adult illiteracy. If the bill can be passed soon, special attention can be given to teaching illiterate men of draft age, and especially those who are classified in Class A.

This is the bill to which my motion refers. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Education have a plan for the use of this modest sum, which looks toward stimulating the local work and directing the attention of local workers to the importance of handling this subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question? Does it propose to deal with soldiers already in the service who are illiterate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it can be done, it may be done. The Secretary of the Interior, in his letter upon the subject, calls attention to the fact that it will be a very difficult matter to do much for those who have already been drafted. There are 40,000 already in the ranks who can not read and write. His view was that in a very short time, by intensified, zealous efforts, those in the ranks could at least be taught to read simple print.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it proposed that the small sum of $50,000 shall be expended for the education of men scattered all over the United States? It would go a very short way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I sought to explain that not a dollar of it would be used for teachers; that not a dollar of it would be used for immediate work upon the particular person. It is directive work. It is stimulating work. It is work to invite the local educational organizations and local teachers under a uniform plan to take hold of the problem.

Mr. VARDAMAN. To put in operation agencies to impart knowledge?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To put the whole thing in operation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that this money is to be expended not only directly by the forces of the Commissioner of Education to educate the illiterates of our country who are not in the Army, but also that there will be investigations made in some way, if possible, to educate those who are already in the Army. I hope that that may be the case.

The only objection that I have to the bill at all is that $50,000 is so small a sum that I am afraid it will do no good whatever. If we are going to enter on this class of work, particularly to correct an evil that really exists, found through bringing so many young men between the ages of 21 and 30 into the Army.

I believe that it ought to be undertaken in a more vigorous way than $50,000 will do. I really believe that it would be approved of by the people of the United States if an appropriation adequate to the work is made, and then it would show upon its face that Congress had some intention of doing the work that ought to have been done long ago.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I merely want to express my acquiesence in the view expressed by the Senator from Utah. I think this is a matter of tremendous importance. It is a startling disclosure to find 70,000 young men unable to read and write in the United States over 21 years of age. I was astounded by that report. I believe it would be far better instead of making this appropriation $50,000 to make it $500,000 and really get at the remedy in some adequate fashion. If the Senator would not object to it, I should myself be quite willing to move that as an amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do not the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Oklahoma think that as the matter develops the additional amount if needed will be called for? This is but an initiative proposition, and while it is an important matter we need not have any fears that if the matter is such as to call for more appropriations more appropriations will be asked for and granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Idaho I have not any question at all but that larger appropriations will be asked for. If the evil exists, and no doubt it does exist, it seems to me that $50,000 would be just like taking the money and almost throwing it away.

Mr. BORAH. No; Mr. President, it will not be throwing it away, because it starts the program, and will develop the necessity for a large appropriation if there are other appropriations needed.

I agree with the Senator as to the importance of it. In all probability larger appropriations will have to be had, but I do not like to urge upon a department, knowing the disposition of the departments to call for all appropriations necessary, larger appropriations than they have asked for.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is right in that regard, Mr. President; but this is one case where it seems to me it would be far better not to make an appropriation of $50,000 which I know, at least I think, will be virtually wasted.

Mr. GALLINGER. How large a portion does the Senator think would be used in salaries, for instance, and in the employment of agents?

Mr. SMOOT. I think not only the whole $50,000 will be used, but there will also be a deficiency asked for before the end of the following year.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Before we get the work started at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I would favor a larger appropriation than the bill provides for is this: With an appropriation of $50,000 to cover the whole United States, those who are interested in this question and those whom we expect to work it out will know that it is such a small amount that nothing can be accomplished by it. I should like to see, if the plan is to be carried out, an appropriation sufficient so that the people of the United States would see there is something going to come from this undertaking and not a mere investigation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point of order is that the bill has not been taken up. I think it ought to be taken up first.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it has been taken up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. KING. I regret to object, and I wish to state my reasons.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not unanimous consent that was asked. The Senator from Georgia moved to take up the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was not a request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia made a motion, but the Chair understands that the bill having been reported to-day, if objected to, it will have to go over for one day.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, permit me just one word before the bill passes over. I had determined after obtaining the interest of the Senate in the bill and some expression from the Senate to request myself that it go over until to-morrow. There is, however, one feature of the bill I ask that Senators consider between now and to-morrow. I think we might put a specific provision in the bill requiring that at the cantonments at least an hour a day be given to teaching any man in a cantonment who can not read. Surely the capacity to read and also to talk English is worth that portion of the day in the military training, and I intend to confer——

Mr. WATSON. How could you prevent that from interfering with military discipline and with the regular order of procedure at the cantonment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It could be done as a part of military discipline. There could be given an hour of additional time to the illiterates besides their actual work of military drill. At any rate, I will seek to confer with both the Commissioner of Education and either the Chief of Staff or The Adjutant General to see if it would not be practical.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was going to suggest to the Senator that it is practical, and I think that work is being performed now in practically every one of the cantonments. They have their Young Men's Christian Association Building and young men in charge. I happen to know that in some the men who can not read and write are invited there. Of course, they are all welcome, and they are conducting schools for the benefit of those men. I think it is one of the finest things imaginable. That is why I rose in the first place and asked if this was to be extended to the cantonments. I did not think it was necessary that it should be done there, because I know that with proper encouragement every one of the cantonments can be served by these volunteers who are there not only for the spiritual but for the intellectual welfare of the soldiers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to say also to the Senator from Michigan that the entire scheme of this bill is to enlist volunteers and to enlist teachers, to enlist cooperation and to obtain service not paid for out of the $50,000.

Mr. WATSON. After all, is it not a fact that all the illiterates——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has raised a point of order, and the discussion is out of order.

Mr. WATSON. If discussion is out of order, I do not care to proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It can go on as soon as the Senator from Florida brings something to the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing is before the Senate. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I saw that unless the bill was before the Senate we were not getting anywhere by discussing something which had not been laid before the Senate, and therefore I raised the point of order. Since the bill can not come before the Senate, I do not think we should go ahead with it.

Mr. WATSON. I do not want to transgress the rule. I thought the debate was simply proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not out of sympathy with the Senator's bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think we are making progress because we are informing ourselves with reference to the measure, and will be better prepared to-morrow to take it up and dispose of it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I want the Senator to understand that I am not out of sympathy with his bill. I simply want to go on with something else.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask the Senator from Georgia a simple question? It will take but a moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I read the bill it provides for the instruction of illiterates and those of meager means who can not be educated all over the country. My predecessor, Senator Blair, undertook to get a bill of that kind through Congress appropriating six or seven million dollars, and that amount was not too much 30 or 40 years ago. Now, to talk about $50,000 to take care of a question of this kind strikes me as being absurd, to say the least.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Florida will let me answer the Senator from New Hampshire, it depends entirely upon the purpose of the bill. If the purpose was to carry instruction to the illiterates with teachers it would be a piece of folly to talk about the appropriation in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the bill says—to educate them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the bill is to induce others to do it. It is to enlist the active work of existing agencies. It seeks to put them actively into the effort to remove illiteracy among those of mature age, which is a vastly different proposition. At this time, when we can show the harm of illiteracy among the grown, when we can appeal to the patriotism of the people, there is an opportunity to wipe out the illiteracy of those of mature years that has not existed before.

TIMBER FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3426) to empower the President to requisition timber and timber products for war purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending question is on the motion of Mr. HARDWICK to amend the committee amendment proposed to section 2. The committee amendment is on page 3, lines 6 and 7, to strike out the words "the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of the Navy, and to the United States Shipping Board," and to insert "a department or agency of the Government designated by him for that purpose." To the part proposed to be inserted Mr. HARDWICK proposes to strike out the article "a" and to insert the words "any existing," so that it will read "any existing department or agency of the Government," and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think it was stated the other day by the chairman of the committee, and I quite agree, that there would be no objection to that amendment so far as we could see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 20, after the word "paid," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; in line 23, after the word "said," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That whenever any standing or fallen timber or any logs or manufactured lumber or other timber products shall be taken possession of by the President, or under his authority by virtue of the provisions hereof, and whenever any lands or premises shall be entered upon or occupied by virtue hereof, just compensation shall be made to the owner, which compensation shall be determined by or under the direction of the President, and if the amount thereof is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by or under the direction of the President, and shall be entitled to sue the United States and recover such further sum as added to said 75 per cent shall make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 4, after the word "authorize," to strike out "in time of," and insert "during the period of the present"; in line 5, after the word "war," to strike out "to exercise the following powers"; in line 7, before the word "in," to strike out "To direct and prescribe"; in line 9, after the name "United States," to insert "Shipping Board"; in line 10, after the word "Corporation," to strike out "the manner of conducting all logging and lumbering operations"; in line 12, before the word "to," to strike out "The President shall have authority"; in the same line, after the word "issue," to insert "and enforce"; in line 15, after the word "operations," to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the word "and"; and in line 16, before the word "to," to strike out "The President shall have authority," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the President is hereby authorized, during the period of the present war, in so far as may be necessary to insure an adequate supply of lumber and timber products required by the Army, Navy, and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, to issue and enforce orders to persons engaged in logging operations prescribing the length of logs which shall be cut in the course of such operations; and to issue orders to persons engaged in lumbering and in operating sawmills prescribing the dimensions of lumber and timber products which shall be manufactured in the course of such operations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I know of one or two Senators who are interested in this measure, but I do not think they knew that it would come up at this time. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Fletcher	Hale	King
Borah	France	Harding	McKellar
Chamberlain	Frelinghuysen	Henderson	McLean
Curtis	Gallinger	Hollis	McNary
Dillingham	Gerry	Jones, N. Mex.	Martin
Fall	Gronna	Jones, Wash.	New
Nugent	Shafroth	Swanson	Williams
Overman	Sheppard	Thomas	Wolcott
Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Thompson
Page	Smoot	Warren
Phelan	Sutherland	Watson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. KNOX, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. JOHNSON of California, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. COLT, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, is an amendment to this bill now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have not yet been completed.

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee amendments have not yet been finished. We are on section 5, and committee amendments are first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 5, page 4, line 21, after the word "any," to insert "of the provisions of this act or any," so as to read:

SEC. 5. That any person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act or any order of the President issued under the authority of section 4 hereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill as to the committee amendment on page 2, in lines 6 and 7. I understand the committee amendment has been adopted. That amendment proposed at that point to insert the words "including Indian and military reservations." Does not the Senator from Florida think that forest reservations ought also to be included at that point? The Government of the United States has an abundance of spruce timber in the forest reserves, and it ought to have the right to go in and take it. We have a provision in the Agricultural appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary of War to do something of that kind, but the pending bill is likely to become a law before the Agricultural appropriation bill becomes a law, and I think we ought also to include forest reserves in this provision.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Washington overlooks the fact that forest reserves are designed to conserve timber for great emergencies.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I know that.

Mr. THOMAS. And they must exist, if at all, only in the distant future.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the trouble with it is, as it is now, that it seems when great emergencies arise we can not use this timber without going through all sorts of red-tape regulations, advertisements, and everything of that sort.

Mr. THOMAS. That goes to demonstrate that the present situation is not an emergency.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It may demonstrate that, but it does not prove it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see no objection, if the Senator from Washington is addressing his inquiry to me, to including the amendment which he proposes. On the contrary, I think it would be advisable to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, after the word "reservations," on page 2, line 7, I move to insert the words "and forest reserves."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has been agreed to, and it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which it was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not think we need to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to. The amendment now proposed is simply to insert after the committee amendment the words "and forest reserves."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether the words "to enter upon any lands" do not cover forest reservations and whether the words "including Indian and military reservations" are not superfluous?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not so sure about that; but, in view of the committee amendment, I thought we ought to make it certain that forest reserves could be entered and timber taken from them without question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment of the committee was really suggested by the Aircraft Board, and I see no reason why that suggestion should not be made to apply to forest reserves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 7, after the word "reservations," it is proposed to insert "and forest reserves."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 4, in line 24, after the word "shall," to insert "for each violation," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That any person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act or any order of the President issued under the authority of section 4 hereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall for each violation be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, section 5, beginning in line 24, provides:

That any person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act or any order of the President issued under the authority of section 4 hereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor—

And shall be punished as provided for in the section. I am not going to object to this provision or insist upon its amendment, but in view of the terms of this bill it is going to be a very drastic measure if we include and make criminal acts violative not only of the provisions of the bill but of orders of the President, which may be wholly unknown to the party violating them. Without offering an amendment I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that provision for the punishment of violations of the act is sufficient of itself? Why should a man 3,000 miles away from the seat of government, working on a forest in connection with the forest, be guilty of a crime for violating some orders of the President the existence of which he had no knowledge? This is a pretty serious matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator, but the language "willfully violate any of the provisions of the act," is seems to me, would protect anyone who violated an order of the President without knowing of the existence of the order; in other words, it would seem that the expression "willfully violate" would contemplate a violation after knowing of the order, and, of course, the offender would not be liable to punishment unless his act was willful. I think that makes the bill free from the objection suggested by the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, under the meaning of the term "willful," as a legal proposition, I do not think that would be of very much protection, and particularly in view of the fact that the burden would be upon the one who violated the law to establish that fact, but I shall not urge the matter if the Senator thinks it is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 2, on page 3, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That when it shall become necessary for the military needs of this Government to enter upon any Indian or military reservation or any other Government or private property for the purposes herein provided all operations shall be conducted and controlled under rules and regulations having due regard for conservation, forestation, fire protection, and any and all other rules as shall be prescribed by the Forestry Division of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, this bill is very broad in its powers, and under it practically any branch of the Government can enter upon private forests or public forests and cut the timber needed without regard to any restrictions or any rules or any laws.

One of the policies of our Government has been the conservation of our forests. There never has been heretofore any law that I know of that would permit any encroachment upon private forests, but this does. If these agencies are permitted to cut the timber without any restriction, we are going to subject our forests to the menace of fire; because what do these agencies know about taking care of the slashings, or cutting trees to a certain size, or protecting other trees of a type that they do not need? It is a very serious matter, I think, to allow these agencies that know nothing whatsoever about forestation to go in and cut without any restrictions.

I send to the desk a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture which relates to the experience in France in regard to forests, and I will ask that the Secretary read the letter for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 21, 1918.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN: On June 5, 1917, Henry S. Graves, our national forester, was sent abroad at a request of the French Government to supervise the lumbering and forestry operations by the allied armies in the forests of France. My understanding is that this request was made because some of the allied forces that had been lumbering in the French forests had not always done their logging in such a way as to prevent needless injury to the forests.

Soon after this two regiments of foresters and lumberjacks were recruited in America and sent to France, where they are working in accordance with the rules, regulations, and methods established by Mr. Graves and his associates. The result is that the lumbering operations of the allied forces in France now are being carried on with a minimum of injury to French forests. The speed and efficiency with which lumber is being taken out has not been decreased, but rather the reverse.

Mr. Graves was first made major in the Reserve Corps and then a lieutenant colonel under Gen. Pershing.

Very sincerely, yours,
CARL VROOMAN,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The object of my amendment is to obtain in this country what was obtained in France.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me to ask what section he proposes to strike out?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Section 2.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have not the section before me. Will the Senator read it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN proceeded to read the section referred to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator need not read further. I have a copy of it now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it not be possible to leave section 2 as it is, and simply add some provision with reference to the orderly method of cutting the timber, so that we could be protected in that part of the country where this timber stands from the danger which will inevitably follow from loose cutting and from carelessness in regard to this matter?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I really would have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey if it were not for the fact that he has included all private property as well as Federal property, and he also strikes out section 2. I would have no objection to having foresting on military reservations and on the forest reserves conducted under the rules and regulations adopted by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, aside from the question of private property, the Senator from Oregon knows quite as well as anyone in this Chamber of the danger from fire in our part of the country by reason of carelessness in cutting timber and by reason of carelessness on the part of people who go into the timber reserves for any purpose. There are literally millions upon millions of feet of timber lost every year through the carelessness of people who go about these forests, some legitimately about them and others otherwise. I think that under all circumstances and from every standpoint there ought to be a very strict rule here with reference to guarding the situation against indifferent and careless cutting and leaving the slashings and the débris behind. It would be simply a fire trap in some of these places. These men are engaged upon one enterprise, and they have in mind one object, and that is to get a certain tree, standing where it may in the forest; and they will not unless they are obligated to do so, have due regard to protecting the situation against fire. The fire situation with reference to these forest reserves in our country is not only serious from the standpoint of preserving the timber but it is serious from the standpoint of protecting the communities near this timber.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I want to say this in addition to what I have already said:

At the present time, as I understand, there is a force of some 5,000 men employed in one of the Northwestern States taking lumber out of these forests, getting spruce out under the command of a man who has had no experience in forestry, and undoubtedly has not the authority or power to compel the observance of these rules. Therefore I think it is highly important that if we are going to allow people to go into the public forests, or even upon the private property of individuals, they should observe the law in regard to fire protection, because, unless they do, we might have a dry season this year, and millions of dollars' worth of lumber might be destroyed; and they should also observe the law in regard to cutting timber to certain sizes, and other protective features prescribed by the Department of Agriculture.

It is a serious matter to allow unorganized agencies to go into these public forests and private forests, and I think we ought to put a restriction upon these operations by such an amendment. I am perfectly willing to make my amendment a proviso to that section; but I do want the private-property owner protected as regards fire, and as regards the cutting of timber according to certain sizes, and other regulations which are prescribed for the protection of the private owner upon whose property the Government enters to cut his timber.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, it seems to me it would be better to leave in the second section and add a proviso in the language of the Senator's amendment, for nobody can appreciate more than we men from the West the absolute necessity of protecting against fire in case of any very material cutting in these reserves.

I have been wondering why forest reserves are excluded. There is a great deal of timber in the forest reserves that ought to be cut.

Mr. FLETCHER. They have been included.

Mr. JONES of Washington. A provision to that effect has been inserted.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am glad to hear it. That should be done. Now, the Senator can put in his proviso so as to make them cut just exactly according to the rules and regulations that have been established, and make them clear away from the ground the débris, dead portions of the trees, bark, and so on, so as to prevent fire.

As the Senator suggests, it would be criminal to allow cutting where they please by men unacquainted with it, and not very careful about the result of doing what they were sent there to do. I think that a tree cut or fallen in a forest that is not removed always remains as a menace to the perpetuity of that forest. We lose more every year in western fires than we cut in 20 years with sensible cutting, and it comes from just this kind of carelessness.

I suggest, then, that the Senator put in this language as a proviso to section 2, which looks all right enough, and in that way guard against any of the depredations and carelessness of which he speaks.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, manifestly it would have a very serious effect and almost destroy the bill to strike out section 2, because that gives the authority to carry out the law through such necessary existing agency as the President may designate. I would have no objection to a proviso to section 2 giving the Forestry Division jurisdiction over the method or plan of operation in respect to those lands where they now have jurisdiction. I do not believe you ought to extend that jurisdiction to private lands, with which they have nothing to do now, and that might hamper the operation of the act. If the Shipping Board, for instance, have to go to the Forestry Division and hunt it up and get it to prescribe rules and regulations before they can secure certain trees which they have found fit to build ships out of. the whole program may be delayed indefinitely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will suggest to the Senator that the Forest Service have rules and regulations with reference to cleaning up timber that is cut, and these regulations are published.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be very easy to furnish the war authorities with copies of these regulations, and then we either ought to require them through legislation to conform to those regulations, or, as the Senator from Idaho suggests, all that would be required would be an order from the President making them applicable to the taking of this timber, and then they would be required under those regulations to comply with the rules. I want to say that that ought to be done. There is a great deal of private property close to these forest reserves, for instance, from which they may get timber, and if they leave that in such shape that fire spreads it will get right into the forest reserve and cause very great damage.

I think that is a very important matter which ought to be taken care of.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will offer his proposal as a proviso to section 2, keeping section 2 as it is and merely offering his amendment as a proviso to section 2, I should have no great objection.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to make it a separate section or paragraph following section 2.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 10, at the end of section 2, it is proposed to insert as a separate paragraph the following:

That when it shall become necessary for the military needs of this Government to enter upon any Indian or military reservation or any other Government or private property for the purposes herein provided, that all operations shall be conducted and controlled under rules and regulations having due regard for conservation, forestation, fire protection, and any and all other rules as shall be prescribed by the Forestry Division of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I assume that the numbers of the sections will be changed to conform to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks are authorized to make the necessary changes in the numbers of the sections.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, at the end of section 4, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That no such persons engaged in operating sawmills shall be required to saw lumber or timber products except to such dimensions as said sawmills may at the time of such order be equipped to produce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to empower the President to requisition, for war purposes, timber and timber products, rights of way, and logging equipment; to construct and operate logging roads and sawmills; and fixing a penalty for the violation thereof."

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 124.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution referred to by him, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in order to protect some Senators who want to be here, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Martin	Sutherland
Bankhead	James	Myers	Thomas
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Thompson
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Tillman
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Nugent	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Underwood
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Vardaman
Fletcher	King	Phelan	Walsh
France	Kirby	Poindexter	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Robinson	Williams
Gore	McCumber	Shafroth	Wolcott
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard
Hale	McNary	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has very kindly been consenting to allow us to proceed with one of these military bills, and another was laid before the Senate just before a quorum was called. I ask the Senator if he will not lay aside the unfinished business for a little while longer?

Mr. ASHURST. A situation has arisen which requires some explanation from me, because I have told a large number of Senators that there are various matters in the Indian appropriation bill that would come up at 2 o'clock. I realize, of course, the importance of the military bill, and owing to its great importance I have no doubt that it can be disposed of in 20 minutes. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside for 20 minutes, which, of course, is ample to pass a bill of such tremendous importance as the bill the Senator has in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has offered an amendment. If he wants to discuss his amendment, I yield the floor to him. Otherwise I want to oppose the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the amendment on page 3, line 4, by inserting after the words "divinity schools" the words "and students who are preparing for the practice of medicine and surgery in recognized medical schools."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KIRBY. What was done with the New amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana withdrew it.

Mr. NEW. No; I have an amendment which is not withdrawn and to which I desire to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks at the desk informed the Chair that the amendment had been withdrawn March 23, 1918. The Senator can reoffer his amendment if he desires.

Mr. NEW. I never withdrew my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the record on the bill. The Senator can reoffer it.

Mr. NEW. Then I will reoffer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That in addition to the persons subject to registration and selective draft under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, all male persons between the ages of 19 and 30, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration and draft in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I desire to say a few things in reference to this amendment, promising not to detain the Senate, unless interrupted, more than 15 minutes.

Mr. President, I anticipate that every Senator who is opposed to universal military training will object to this amendment, for frankly that is what it calls for. But, if for the sake of argument their objections are conceded, I am wholly convinced that the certainties of the present and the prospects for the future make it absolutely necessary. Within the last few days I have heard it urged that this is no time to propose such a plan. Mr. President, as one American who is deeply impressed with the tremendous import of the existing military situation and desirous of doing now everything that is necessary to save it and not only to bring success to our cause, but to avert great national disaster. I am more than ever persuaded that the present is the time of all times when this step should be taken. Each day that passes makes it more conspicuously apparent that the United States entered upon this war most woefully unprepared. What we are to suffer by reason of this failure can not be foretold and can not be overestimated. It is my deliberate judgment that had the measure for which this amendment provides been made a matter of national policy when it was suggested to this body three years or more ago by my friend, Senator CHAMBERLAIN, and accompanied by substantial industrial preparation, as it should have been, this country would have been in condition to take such a part in the war upon its entrance as a belligerent that we would have before this been able to force a peace that would have been satisfactory and wholly creditable to the United States. There would have been no collapse in northern Italy, no Russian debacle. The saving in life and in money would have been beyond measure. Had we earlier devoted our energies toward preparation for war rather than to issuing pronouncements of terms on which we would make peace we would now be much nearer the day when our voice as to terms would command and receive more attention. But objection, sentiment, hesitancy combined to prevent anything that even approximated preparation, with a result that is now apparent—appallingly so. Mr. President, it is time the people should know the truth. If they are to be told anything, they should be told the facts and not half truths. Within the last few days I have seen statements given out from high places, for which the best that can be said is that they are perilously misleading. Anything that tends to keep the people from a realization of the truth is in my opinion a huge mistake. I have unlimited faith in our capacity as a Nation, if we but know our true condition, are not made overconfident through failure to realize it, and if we but know the extent and character of the task before us.

It is true that during the past year great things have been accomplished. It is true that we have built great docks in France, miles upon miles of them; that we have built a great railroad system over there; that we have built a great system of cantonments at home and have recruited an army of a million men; that we have trebled our Navy; that we are preparing—still preparing—a great equipment of aeroplanes; that we have adopted a machine gun which we believe superior to any yet devised, and which we are now ready to produce in quantities; that we have built great shipyards, and are now more or less ready to build ships; and that we have done and are doing many other things. But, sir, while this has been going on Germany has subjugated half a continent, at least temporarily.

Only a few days ago the junior Senator from New Hampshire, addressing himself to a bill then before the Senate, said that one could not rig a ship during a storm. That is exactly what we have waited to do. The junior Senator from Arkansas told the Senate the other day that before the end is reached the United States will have an army of 10,000,000 men in the field. I do not see how the Senator can hold such an opinion and vote against this amendment. To those who thought that statement extreme I would say that the situation to-day will not justify anyone holding it to be a wild prediction; and if not, from what source are these men to be drawn? Does anyone think we can win with the force we now have?

Mr. President, I am fully aware of the widespread objection to seeing the young men, the boys, go to war. No one regrets the necessity for it more than I. It is, indeed, an awful thing. But, sir, there are other awful things to contemplate, and while we are reflecting on the one we should consider the alternatives.

What of the men who fought the Civil War? We are all more or less familiar with the facts for the figures have been often published, but it can do no harm to repeat them here. Just what they show with regard to those who wore the gray I do not know, but the official reports of the War Department show that of all who wore the Northern blue 2,159,798 were boys under 21. Of these 1,151,438 were 18 and under. Of men over 22 there were but 618,511, and of all over 25 there were but 46,626. I have no doubt the same was true of the armies of the South. From this it will be seen that the boys of this country fought the Civil War. The one great fact disclosed by this is that the very class of men who waged that conflict and from which the best soldiers are conceded to come are left out of the present draft entirely. But, Mr. President, it is not contemplated by this amendment to send these boys into active service until after they are 21. What it does provide is that they shall be trained and prepared for service at a time and in a manner prescribed by the President. One of the best reasons for this is found in the fact—a fact known to everybody and testified to by Surg. Gen. Gorgas in the recent hearings before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs—that one of the chief causes of sickness among soldiers in the camps is that the boys do not know how to take care of themselves. This trouble would be remedied by a course of judicious training. It is a well-known truth that once trained and prepared, the very young men endure the rigors of a campaign better than their elders, accounted for by the resiliency of youth and their previous freedom from both mental and physical strain.

It will be urged, too, that the country boys can not be spared from the farms. This is at least partially met by the discretion vested in the President as to the time of year and length of period during which they will be called for training. He must be relied upon to obviate this objection to the fullest extent possible. I realize fully the predicament of the farmer and I would go to the farthest limit in an effort to enable him to adjust himself to it. I would like to see a draft measure passed that would take every loafer in this country, every man not already employed in some useful occupation directly contributing to war requirements or in some way contributing to the general public need, and send him to the farms. I will gladly vote for such a provision.

The further we go beyond the age of 21 the greater the number of exemptions because of dependency, accident, illness, and other causes. Inasmuch as this amendment does not call the boys to the colors immediately, it really adds nothing to their liability to service, for under existing law they are to be called at 21, and it therefore becomes a question of whether they shall be called trained and equipped for service or untrained and unfit and more most precious time lost in preparing them.

We now have the cantonments ready to receive them. If it be objected that their capacity is already taxed, I respectfully call attention to the recent public declaration by the Secretary of War that we are to send several hundred thousand men abroad at a very early date, in which case there will be ample accommodation for those herein provided for.

It will also be urged that we have not the officers who can be spared for the training of a new contingent. Well, Mr. President, that presupposes that we now have all the officers we can get. That we shall require more is most manifest if we are to have more men. Get the additional officers just as we have acquired most of those we have at present, through additional training camps and merited promotions from among those who have seen service.

Still another objection that has been offered is that the recruiting of a larger army may cause some other nation to doubt our altruism. Mr. President, our present extremity is so full of hazard and immediate peril that such an objection is not to be dignified with an answer. It is far more important that we set out resolutely upon the task of saving our own national honor, if not our national existence, than to be wasting time in reflection on what some one else may think of our purposes. Our intention is to win this war for ourselves, to preserve this Nation for the generations to come, to save this democratic Republic from the greatest menace of all time. To do this our present military force would appear to be but the beginning of what we must have. I would have the Kaiser understand from our fixed course that we are prepared and determined to fight it out for years if necessary, and to furnish as many men as may be required to complete the job.

There are some who contend that it is useless to provide such an army at this time for the reason that we have not the ships to transport them beyond seas, even though we have the men. Well, Mr. President, I have known men who might be classed as fairly conservative who have indulged a more violent assumption than that we may need our Army at home in the not distant future. As to that, it seems not unlikely that much depends on the strength of our present allies. But if we are to pursue our usual course and take it for granted that we are immune from attack, it is still true that it requires as much time to make a soldier as it does to build a ship. We are now launched upon a program to build a fleet of our own. Are we to run true to recent form and wait until we have the transports before starting on the year-long process of making the soldiers? Why not build both at the same time, so that when we have one we shall have the other and not have the ships held up indefinitely while we are making the soldiers they are designed to carry?

And then we are told that the present is no time to undertake such a step as is contemplated in this amendment, that we are at war, and the whole matter should be left until peace has been restored, when we may be in better frame of mind to consider this question. To admit this, Mr. President, is to adopt the philosophy of the gentleman who has been commemorated, if not immortalized, in the song known as the "Arkansas Traveler." Tradition does not make it clear whether he is historic or mythical, but it does tell us that he played the fiddle and that when asked why he did not put a new roof on his house, the old one being full of holes and leaking like a sieve, assigned as his reason for not doing so that it was because when it rained he could not and when it did not he did not need to. The same gentlemen who will argue that we should not do this now that we are at war will argue quite as volubly that there is no need for it after peace has been restored.

Who can tell how long this war is to last? If present indications are to be relied upon, it will not end soon. Are we prepared to carry it on for years? Not in our condition as it stands to-day. Let us realize, admit it, and prepare accordingly. We of this country have been a peace-loving people, opposed to war, and blindly oblivious to the fact that war comes to the unwilling as certainly as to those who seek it. We have hoped to keep out of war and have based our military policy upon our hopes and desires rather than upon our fears and the great underlying fact that wars have their origin in the brains of overambitious kaisers and in the weaknesses of human nature. We have ignored all the lessons of the past and blinded ourselves to our own experience and the experiences of others like us throughout the ages. We have been rigging our ship after the storm has broken. We have been training our Army and equipping ourselves for conflict after we have engaged in war. Is this policy to be continued or have we learned our lesson?

Mr. President, the time to demonstrate whether we have or have not learned it is here. There are some who oppose further military preparations in the belief that this is to be the last war. I get letters from them regularly. I would say to them that should this war end in a stalemate or in any other way than in victory for ourselves and our allies it is my belief that far beyond the day when these hopeful souls shall have passed from the scene the peace-loving United States will from very necessity be an armed camp, and that if there are to be no future wars it will be because no nation is left with strength and will sufficient to fight kaiserism. Should this amendment be rejected now, I feel certain I shall be called upon to vote for it or one like it before this session of Congress shall have adjourned. I believe the sound and sober judgment of the Senate is for it, Mr. President. I urge the adoption of this amendment here and now.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when the subject of universal military training was before the Committee on Military Affairs some two years ago I was opposed to it. It was my purpose at that time if it came up for discussion to speak and vote against it; but in view of the mighty events that have convulsed the world since then my convictions upon the subject have undergone a complete change, and as these mighty tragedies succeed each other so rapidly in these days I have reached the conviction that military training in the United States will very soon become a national necessity and essential to protect not only the institutions of the United States from autocracy but in all probability to preserve the Anglo-Saxon race and its institutions.

I want to see military training, therefore, as soon as we can adopt it consistently with the present demands upon our economic, industrial, and political resources. These are so stupendous now and will remain so absorbing for some time to come, embracing as they do military training as applied to those who are subject to military duty under the draft law, that I hesitate to vote for this amendment at the present time.

We are spending between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 per day. We have been spending upward of $35,000,000 per day for a long time. This tremendous outpouring of the money of the people will increase instead of diminish as the days of 1918 go by. The demands now made for money for shelter, for uniforms, for armament, and for men will demand, as they have demanded, the extreme responsibility of the richest people in the world. Inasmuch as their resources are being and have been put to the test, we can not afford, unless it is absolutely necessary at this time, to increase the burden.

Some of the objections have been anticipated by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] in his very able presentation of the amendment, but, Mr. President, when they are considered seriously they seem to me to be absolutely prohibitive of the present favorable consideration or adoption of the amendment. I presume that there are reaching the age of 19 years in America annually between 600,000 and 750,000 youths. To train these youths as they should be trained requires an army of officers, and every competent, efficient officer in the country is at present engaged in the service of his country. We have no surplus of officers. On the contrary, we are confronted with a deficiency. We can only supply officers for the proposed training camps by robbing the National Army, the Regular Army, and the National Guard of indispensable trainers and leaders. We can not train 600,000 young men with a handful of officers. We must have 40,000 or 50,000 of them, and they must be capable of transmitting instruction, which means that they in turn must have been trained as officers for that purpose

We can not use present cantonments for the housing of these young men, because while it is true that some of the cantonments will soon be vacated by their present occupants it is equally true that their places will be filled by the next call of the draft, and the officers necessary for their training are lacking. We must, therefore, if we are to call these men immediately——

Mr. ASHURST rose.

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. If we are to call these young men immediately from their schools and from their homes to the training camps we must build shelters for them in addition and supplementary to those which we have constructed for the National Army. I yield to the Senator from Arizona, although I intended to occupy but a moment longer.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator, because he is making a very able speech on a matter which I would be glad to see incorporated into law as soon as possible. I simply rose to ask the Senator to yield to me long enough to have the unfinished business again laid before the Senate, because it was laid aside for 20 minutes only, and I observe it is now 10 minutes beyond the time. Of course, then the Senator can finish his very able speech, and I hope he will do so.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have a very important meeting with the Committee on Military Affairs, which has been called for this moment, and I am so anxious to attend it that, if there were no other reason, I should certainly be compelled to abbreviate my remarks.

Let me add, Mr. President, to what I have already said upon the subject one or two other considerations. To properly train and equip a body of men both uniforms and guns are required. We are turning out both in considerable quantities now, but the demand for them at the front is insatiate. We are not at present, therefore, in condition to furnish either in very great quantity to a new and additional army of recruits in training.

Another consideration is the expense consequent upon it. That expense, Mr. President, will mount into the hundreds of millions of dollars. I do not begrudge it for a purpose of this kind; it may be absolutely essential to the salvation of American institutions, as I have said, but at this time and in this crisis I think this amendment should be postponed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I merely want to say that I think the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is one of the best and wisest of all the amendments that have been offered to any military bill which has been before the Senate since we entered the European war. It is one of the best and wisest suggestions that have been made to our program of military preparation. I am very heartily in favor of it and hope it may be adopted.

The young men who are 19 years of age, who, under its provisions, would be called to service, would not be required to go to Europe and to participate in the fighting until they should become 21 years of age. By the time they were 21 years of age they would constitute a splendidly equipped and trained army, having had two years of training. This is a splendid idea. It has much merit.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Montana is doubtless aware that there is a very great scarcity of labor in this country now. If all of these men are to be taken from the industrial walks of life and their time devoted to military service, where are we going to get food with which to sustain the Army and clothing for the people at home and for our allies abroad?

Mr. MYERS. My answer to that is——

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana, who offered the amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. NEW. In answer to the point which has been suggested by the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. KIRBY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that the joint resolution, together with the amendment, has been laid aside and that the pending measure now is the unfinished business, the Indian appropriation bill; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is correct.

Mr. KIRBY. I merely wanted to know that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit me, a Senator is not compelled to stick to the text or confine his remarks to the question before the Senate.

Mr. KIRBY. That is all right; I merely wanted to know whether we were going to get any action on the joint resolution.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana prmit me to answer the question which has been asked by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]?

Mr. MYERS. With a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. NEW. Taking the boys, as provided for in this amendment, will relieve us of the necessity of taking just that many older men. It is a fair presumption that the younger men are less skilled in labor than are their elders, and that by reason of their very youth they have not yet entered upon this call.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator from Indiana does not contend that we need these men now so much?

Mr. NEW. In answer to that I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that, in my judgment, we need these men now; we need them at this hour to put them in training, because it requires at least a year's training to make a soldier——

Mr. VARDAMAN. But we already have men drafted.

Mr. NEW. The testimony of Army men is that it requires 14 months to make a corporal.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator from Indiana is aware of the fact that we already have more men drafted for training than we shall probably be able to carry to the trenches in France this year.

Mr. NEW. I do not concede that point at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator's information is not as mine, because I should like to agree with him about that.

Mr. NEW. I agree with what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] said on yesterday, which was, I think, that we must double our Army. I think we must do so, and that we must not only double it but that we must quadruple it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. With the indulgence of my friend from Montana [Mr. MYERS], I desire to say that I hope when we double it we shall raise the age limit instead of lowering it.

Mr. NEW. Possibly we may be required to do both.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I had rather take men of my age than to take boys, mere infants, who are not even permitted to vote. I would greatly prefer that those of us who have lived the larger part of our lives should be sacrificed if necessary to win this war.

Mr. NEW. I have no doubt the Senator from Mississippi shares my own willingness to see the age limit raised so that it will include ourselves.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] that these boys between the ages of 19 and 21 are not to be taken from their vocations and daily pursuits. The object of the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is to take boys between 19 and 21 years of age, before they become of draft age, and to train them in the elementary principles of military drill. We begin to draft them at the age of 21. It has cost this Government millions of dollars, yes, billions of dollars, to take men at that age who are untrained. This is simply an insurance that the men who arrive at the age of 19, and who are between the ages of 19 and 21, shall obtain a preliminary military training, so that they will have a certain amount of training when they are drafted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator does not think——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think that, in order to train these men, they will have to be taken from their ordinary vocations?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is left entirely to the President. Under this amendment I hope that some method may be adopted which will provide for the training of these men in the localities in which they live.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It may be done. The time may be saved by some legislative legerdemain, like the daylight legislation. It may be that time may be saved in that way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is no legerdemain in this proposed legislation. This country at the present time, in my opinion, is menaced by one of the gravest dangers it has ever seen. The reason for that is that heretofore we have not properly prepared an army. This proposes to provide an insurance against the future that we shall train the young men. It is not proposed to create a military nation, but it is proposed in order that they may have the necessary elementary training in military principles. It will avoid the mistakes of the past and prepare for future contingencies in the event that they should arise.

In my opinion, at this time, Mr. President, we should be training 5,000,000 men to protect this country against the danger that confronts it. I do not think anyone should object to the passage of a measure which would provide that the youth of this country, at the age of 19, should be trained in the elementary principles of military drill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in further answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], I will say that we also need more men—many more—on the firing line in Europe. I think we shall have to enlarge the draft age by going upward and downward before we win this war. As has been suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], I think we will probably have to put 5,000,000 men in this war before we win it. I think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is about the most sensible and meritorious suggestion that has been made in all of our discussions about war preparation. It wisely takes time by the forelock—something that we have not always done heretofore. I think the amendment by all means ought to be adopted, and I hope it may be adopted. I should like to say more in favor of it, but I do not care further to infringe upon the time of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been told that the joint resolution concerning the draft age has gone over. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution has gone over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will take but a moment. I offered an amendment to the joint resolution, which I understand was agreed to in my absence—I was necessarily absent from the Chamber for a little while—relating to students in medical colleges. I want, Mr. President, to ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD an article which I clipped from yesterday's New York Times entitled "Mobilization of medicine for war." It is a most interesting article on that subject, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted, without reading, in connection with the debate on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

MOBILIZATION OF MEDICINE FOR WAR—HOW PHYSICIANS OF UNITED STATES HAVE BEEN ORGANIZED UNDER SURGEON GENERAL FOR SERVICE IN ARMY.

[By Caswell A. Mayo.]

In April the executive offices of the Surgeon General of the United States Army occupied four rooms in the great War, State, and Navy Building at Washington, and the functions of the office were performed by 6 officers and 20 clerks. Now there are attached to the Surgeon General's office 165 officers, who employ 545 clerks, and the staff fills five entire buildings and parts of other buildings, exclusive of the Surgeon General's Library, the Army Medical Museum, and the Army Medical School. Within a day 6,000 telegrams and 5,000 other communications have been received, replied to, and filed. The latest and most approved systems of filing records and correspondence have been installed under expert supervision, for the Surgeon General has called to his aid specialists in other fields, as well as in the field of medicine. He has called chemists and statisticians, bankers and efficiency engineers, sanitarians and electrical experts, architects and engineers, and assigned them to duty in his office.

The Surgeon General himself, Maj. Gen. W. C. Gorgas, was appointed to the office in recognition of the invaluable services rendered by him as Chief Sanitary Officer of the Panama Canal Zone. The study of his work there in protecting the laborers in the Panama Canal from infectious disease is one of the most brilliant chapters in the history of American medicine. Without that work the efforts of Goethals would have been as fruitless and as costly in lives and money as those of De Lesseps. The Surgeon General's still greater task now is to provide against every emergency which may affect the health and lives of millions of men taken from the fields, the farms, the factories, and the countinghouses of the country, gathered into camps for organization, and sent across 3,000 miles of ocean. He must know how many men will be taken sick, and where. He must know how many men will be wounded, and where, and he must have at those points adequate provision of expert surgeons and enlisted men, of medical and of surgical supplies, of food and of clothing, of housing and of transportation, so that at no time will any American soldier be sick without succor or lie wounded without aid.

In carrying out this gigantic task the Surgeon General has mobilized the medical forces of the country, calling into his office the leaders in every specialty of medicine and of surgery. At their desks as early as 7 o'clock in the morning will be found medical specialists whose professional incomes are written in five and six figures, but who have abandoned these incomes for the modest pay of a major, who have given up their luxurious homes for a Washington boarding house, and who, instead of enjoying a well-earned leisure, toil ceaselessly from early morning until late at night in their efforts to coordinate most effectively the work of the doctors in the war. It is for the purpose of doing justice to the attainments of these men that Gen. Gorgas is advocating scores of new commissions of high rank in the National Army.

Every morning at 7.30 the Surgeon General's truck delivers his mail at the Mills Building, at Seventeenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, in which are situated the central executive offices. The mail is distributed and on the desk of the officers for final disposition not later than 9.15. Within 12 working hours practically every communication received will have been acted upon and returned to permanent files. Here, as in every other phase of the work, a specialist has been employed, Capt. J. L. Gooch having been called from his position as subscription manager for the Butterick Co. to organize the office routine. The most approved mechanical devices, including statistical machines, have been installed under Capt. Gooch's direction.

A complete medical history is kept of every soldier and of every officer from the time he enters the service until he retires, resigns, or dies. A special fireproof building is now being erected which will be devoted exclusively to the care of these records, the preservation of which may be a matter of vital importance 50 years hence.

Attached to the Surgeon General's office are three representatives of the Royal Army Medical Corps of Great Britain—Col. T. H. Goodwin, C. M. G., D. S. O.; Capt. John Gilmour, of the Royal Army Medical Corps; and Lieut. Col. J. J. Aitken, of the Royal Veterinary Corps; and two representatives of the French Army Medical Service, Col. C. U. Dercle and Maj. Edouard Rist. These four surgeons act as liaison officers, keeping the Medical Department of the United States Army in touch with the medical services of Great Britain and France. They have made many informing addresses to medical societies all over the United States, and have given lectures at the Army Medical School.

The immediate staff of the Surgeon General comprises his personal aid, Maj. M. C. Furbush, M. R. C., of Philadelphia; Col. George E. Bushnell, M. C. (Medical Corps of the Regular Army); Col. Deane C. Howard, M. C.; and Lieut. Col. James V. Van Dusen, M. C. Col. Bushnell, besides being chief assistant to the Surgeon General, has devoted his special attention to the field in which he has won a unique reputation, that of the treatment of tuberculosis.

Gen. Gorgas has enlisted the cooperation of the leading surgeons of the United States as members of the "Rotary Surgical Staff." Among those Medical Reserve Corps officers who have already served for a period at the Surgeon General's office, and who are still subject to call from time to time as occasion requires, are Maj. William J. Mayo, former president, and his brother, Maj. Charles H. Mayo, now president of the American Medical Association.

The work of the Surgeon General's office is divided up among 17 general main divisions. The work of each division is practically independent of the others, though the work of all is coordinated. At the head of each of these divisions is an expert in that particular field, usually a medical officer of the Regular Army, who has around him a group of expert associates, many of whom are drawn from civil life.

On April 1 there were 700 medical officers and about 10,000 enlisted men in the Medical Department of the United States Army. There are now more than 17,000 medical officers in active service, and about 150,000 enlisted men in the Medical Department.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first committee amendment which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. The first committee amendment passed over was, on page 5, line 21, under the head of "Suppressing liquor traffic," where the Committee on Indian Affairs proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the sale of anhalonium or peyote to an Indian, or its introduction into the Indian country, shall be, and is hereby, declared to be a violation of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506), and punishable in accordance with the penalties provided for therein: Provided further, That possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the country where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be an offense and punished in accordance with the provisions of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506).

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may go over for a while. I know there are some Senators who are interested in the matter who are not now present. I will therefore ask that it now go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next committee amendment which was passed over was, on page 33, after line 3, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used in the construction of a suitable school building at the town of White Earth: Provided, That the State school district in which the town of White Earth is located contributes a like amount, to be used in the construction of a building the total cost of which shall not exceed $8,000, the said appropriation to remain available until expended: Provided further, That when said building is completed it shall be turned over to the local school authorities of the said town of White Earth, and shall thereafter be operated and maintained by them, and Indian children shall at all times be admitted to said school on the same conditions as white children.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that lines 4 and 5 of the amendment be stricken out and that in lieu thereof there be inserted the words:

There is hereby appropriated, out of the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $4,000.

I understand that to be satisfactory to the committee.
